THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 33. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JANUARY 6, 1910. NUMBER 45

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS ORGANIZED

Mr. Otho T. Fike Was Made President—Constables Appointed.

The new Board of County Commissioners, composed of Messrs. Otho S. Fike, hold-over member, and D. M. Dixon and Walter M. Lowdermilk, newly elected members, organized at the Board room in the court house here Monday by the election of Mr. Fike as president of that body. The selection of Mr. Fike as president of the Board, he being the oldest in point of service, was an honor due him. He is eminently qualified to fill the position and we bespeak a successful administration of county affairs at the hands of the new board.

Routine business of a general nature was transacted by the Board and it adjourned yesterday morning after making printing contracts for the year and announcing the following appointments of constables for the districts named:

District No. 1, J. R. Glass; No. 2, Jeremiah Nugent; No. 3, no appointment; No. 4, Grant Hershberger; No. 5, Silas Teats; No. 6, Homer D. Custer; No. 7, Lincoln Callis; No. 8, no appointment; No. 9, Albert Bolden; Nos. 10, 11 and 12, no appointments; No. 13, George J. Pool; No. 14, Claude Brown.

The appointment of Mr. Callis as constable for No. 7 was strongly opposed by several friends of Mr. W. A. Maffett, who was an applicaut for reappointment. Mr. Callis had the endorsement of four members of the District Committee.

Frank S. Davidson in "Old Farmer Hopkins."

"Old Farmer Hopkins," one of the brightest rural dramas ever written, will be produced at Beckwith's opera house on Tuesday evening, Jan. 11, for the benefit of the Mountain City Band, by the well known comedian, Frank S. Davidson, and an excellent company of [illegible] talent. Special scenery is carried for this piece and the mechanical effects, specialties, etc., all go to make it a delightful evening's entertainment. We all know Frank Davidson, he having visited Oakland several years during the theatrical season, and he always has given the people of Oakland good, clean, honest comedy entertainment, and there will be no exception to the rule in this instance. The following well known local people will be in the cast: Chas. A. Tower, Jas. E. Varina, Jos. H. White, W. Harper Bartlett, Will White, Miss Rebecca Thayer, Miss Agnes Rasche and Miss Marguerite Hart. Do not miss this opportunity for an enjoyable evening of entertainment.

SERIES OF STORMS.

Will Be Humanity's Portion Through Month of January.

After giving us a rousing snowstorm last week, Peter R. Smith predicts the weather for January to be a series of storms. The forecast follows:

Conditions denote January will be under the influence of a storm wave at its opening, which will run to the 5th with but slight changes. On the 2d the temperature will get warmer and general rains, sleet and snow will prevail in northern and central parts. This disturbed wave will be followed by intense cold.

In advance of a storm wave the temperature will grow warmer.

On the 8th, 9th and 10th the temperature will moderate, clouds will form into arrow-like clusters, which will be the advance messenger of a disturbed wave. Rain and snow will show up. The winds will be cold from the north but the pressure of cold will not be so extreme as at previous periods.

A storm wave will start in the west on the 12th, ending in the east about the 16th. The period will bring a change to warmer, and on the 14th and 15th rain and snow will prevail. Behind the storm wave a cold wave of much force will follow.

A storm period falls on the 21st and 22d. The temperature will relax and cloudiness will ensue. Then more rain and snow will show up and a change to colder temperature will prevail.

A storm period is central on the 25th and 26th. The period will bring warm southerly winds, which will bring rain and snow. Then it will be followed by a very cold wave.

Rain will likely show up as the month goes out.

Knights of the Golden Eagle Officers.

The members of Olive Branch Castle, Knights of the Golden Eagle, Mountain Lake Park, at a recent meeting, elected the following officers for the ensuing term:

Representative to Grand Castle, Mr. Thomas J. Harris; Noble Chief, Mr. H. M. Arnold; Vice Chief, Mr. G. H. Delawder; High Priest, Mr. Thomas J. Harris; Master of Records, Mr. Thomas Callis; Keeper of Exchequer, Mr. G. B. M. Friend; Clerk of Exchequer, Mr. F. P. Arnold; Venerable Hermit, Mr. E. E. Friend; Trustees, Messrs. J. E Chance, H M. Arnold and T. J. Harris.

Meeting Postponed.

On account of the condition of the roads and the inability of those interested to get to Hoyes to attend the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Garrett County Telephone Company, called to assemble on Monday of this week, the meeting has been postponed until Monday, the 17th inst., as will be noticed by referring to the advertisement for the meeting published elsewhere in this paper today.

DIXON & KELSO

Dixon & Kelso offers their entire stock of Men's, Boys' and Children's Overcoats at prices ranging from $1.50 to $8.00, which is a reduction of about 40 per cent. from usual price.

We have 7 Ladies' All Wool Suits, latest designs, worth $18.00 for $10.00

Also Big Stock of Ladies' Misses' and Children's Coats to sell at $1.50 to $8.00, about one-half usual price.

We purchased this week from a big Pittsburgh House a large lot of heavy Winter Goods; which they were selling at sacrifice prices in order to make room for their spring line. We will give Our Customers the advantage of this lucky purchase.

DIXON & KELSO.

P. S. Have car of Oats and Corn Fertiiizer which we will sell on spring terms. This is the Farmer's opportunity to get his supply hauled while sledding is on.

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

PROSPERITY FOR THE MANY NATIONAL BANKS

Five Billions of Dollars Are Now on Deposit.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3—There is no better index to the prosperity of the nation than the prosperity of the banks, and this is shown not only by the volume of business transacted, but by the amount of capital employed and the ratio of earnings to capital.

There was a net increase in the amount of individual deposits since November 2, 1908, of $289,000,000, making a total of individual deposits in the national banks of the United States of over $5,000,000,000. This is the largest volume of deposits ever held by the national banks.

The capital stock of the national banks increased during the report year ending October 31 last from $930,000,000 to $964,000,000, a net increase of $34,000,000 or 3½ per cent.

During the last fiscal year the net earnings of national banks were $131,185,750, and of that amount $92,993,450 was paid out in dividends, an average return to each stockholder on his holdings of 10.12 per cent. In 1908 the return to the stockholders was 10.89 per cent. The average return for the last ten years was 10.41 per cent, and during the past forty years, or since 1869, the year in which reports relating to the earnings and dividends of national banks were first required, the average return to stockholders has been 8.89 per cent. The largest dividend in any one year was in 1907, immediately preceding the late panic, when the average rate of dividend was 11.89 per cent.

It is believed that the national banking system as a whole has been greatly strengthened during the past year by the policy which has been pursued in regard to new organizations. Special efforts have been made to prevent new banks being established under incompetent, careless, speculative or dishonest management.

Of the 370 applications for authority to organize national banks, 57 were rejected or charters refused. The rejections were based on information received to the effect that improper persons were interested.

The total outstanding circulation issued to national banks on Dec. 1, 1909, was over $700,000,000, an increase of $40,000,000 during the past year. There has been a steady increase every year since 1905, but a gain of only $11,000,000 during 1908, as against $40,000,000 in the past year.

This large increase during 1909, when money has been so plentiful and call money in New York at times has brought only one and one-half to two per cent. is probably due to several causes. The principal one is the fact that the calling in of large amounts of government deposits held by the national banks released United States bonds, which the banks utilized to take out additional circulation.

Another reason is the fact that the lower prices of Government bonds has increased the margin of profit to be derived from their circulating notes.

Complain of B. & O.

Claiming they are being unjustly discriminated against by Pennsylvania railroad influences and alleging that the equipment of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad has been allowed to depreciate until it no longer serves to move one-fifth of the tonnage that is offered it, a delegation of West Virginia coal shippers appeared before Congressman W. P. Hubbard at Wheeling Saturday asking his aid in introducing a Congressional inquiry into the stock ownership and control of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

Shippers, in their plea for Congressional investigation, claim the policy of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad is being dictated by the Pennsylvania railroad influences, and that it is part of a policy that the rival road has adopted to cripple the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and ruin its shippers, in order that the Pennsylvania railroad and Pennsylvania operators may have a monopoly of the coal mining and coal moving business throughout the coal regions of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio. The shippers further cite the fact that the Pennsylvania railroad and the Union Pacific railroad owns 40 per cent. of the stock of the Baltimore and Ohio, and by that ownership control the policy of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

AN EXCELLENT SHOWING

Extracts From Report of St. Paul's Sunday School.

The annual report of St. Paul's M. E. Sunday school, Oakland, submitted by the secretary to the school on Sunday last, shows that the school is in a very prosperous condition.

The following items of interest were taken from the report:

Number of scholars enrolled during the year	257
Largest number present at any one session	208
Average attendance	143
Number of visitors during year	395
Offering for year	$303.41
Easter offering	102.25

The report further shows that one scholar, Miss June L. White, and one of the officers, Mr. James W. White, have not missed a session of the school during the last five years.

A number of the scholars were present at every session of the school during the past year.

A Pretty Home Wedding.

A beautiful wedding occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Abel DeWitt, near Deer Park, on Wednesday evening, December 29th, 1909, when their daughter, Florence, become the bride of Mr. Erbie Clayton Lantz, of Oakland, Md. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. Manges, pastor of St. Mark's Lutheran church, in the presence of a few relatives and friends.

The parlor had been artistically decorated with evergreen and potted plants. The wedding march was skillfully rendered by Miss Olia Mattingly, cousin of the bride.

The bride, who was becomingly attired in a white Princess gown of handembroidered mull and carried a bouquet of bride roses, was attended by her cousin, Miss Bernadette Mattingly, who wore white French organdy over blue and carried white carnations. The groom wore the conventional black while the groomsman, who was Mr. Sam Aronhait, of Oakland, was similarly attired.

Following congratulations they assembled in the dining room where a sumptuous dinner was served.

The bride was the recipient of many beautiful presents, consisting of silver ware, cut glass, china, linens, etc.

The happy couple have the best wishes of their friends for a long and happy wedded life. A GUEST.

Calendars Received.

This office has been in receipt recently of a number of handsome calendars, those from the First National Bank and the Garrett National Bank, both of Oakland, taking the lead for beauty and excellence of design. That from the First National Bank represents an ideal river scene with wooded shores and a boat drawn up on the bank. The colors are wonderfully true to nature, the foliage on the trees and undergrowth bringing to mind our own Big Yough where it passes between two of the many hills through which it flows on its way to join the sister rivers making up the Ohio. The calendar from the Garrett National is a reproduction from the painting by Albert Lynch, entitled "Vera." The following, which accompanies the calendar, is a true description of it: "'Vera,' with its soft and delicate tonings, the simple gown of creamy white and the wide, drooping hat shading the youthful face, which still retains the charms of girlhood, is a good example of the work of this renowned artist. He has in this instance displayed a wonderful amount of technical skill, but he has not painted for that purpose alone. On the contrary, it falls into proper subordination as we gaze upon the calm loveliness of the face. The latter is the light and glory of the picture. No classic contour is here, no languishing attitude, no asking for admiration, but a modest sweetness, a slightly pensive dreaminess, eyes so sincere and pure that heaven's light shines through them, and beyond all an inner beauty of the soul that finds expression in every feature."

Off to Annapolis.

Senator-elect Harvey J. Speicher, of Garrett county, accompanied by his brother Mr. Henry Speicher, drove to Oakland Sunday afternoon and left here Monday night for Annapolis to take the oath of office and to enter upon his duties in the Senate of Maryland, which convened yesterday and immediately after organizing adjourned until Monday of next week. Senator Speicher was accompanied by Assemblyman D. E. Bolden from Oakland who also assumed his office. These two gentlemen were preceded to Annapolis by Assemblyman Chappell, who went over the Western Maryland Railroad from his home at Kitzmiller.

AS BOSS' WHIP CRACKS SO LEGISLATORS WILL VOTE

General Assembly, Theoretically Democratic. Really Oligarchic.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 5.—At noon today, the 128 gentlemen of distinction chosen from among the million and a quarter people of the State to make laws for them assembled in Annapolis for that purpose. Their meeting will cost the State in the neighborhood of $200,000, and they will spend several millions of the State's money.

Theoretically, Maryland is a democracy. Actually, it is an oligarchy, tempered by public opinion. Theoretically, these 27 Senators and 101 delegates are men of ability and patriotism who go to Annapolis to consider and discuss the laws that will best subserve the interests of the State, and to enact those which the consensus of opinion declares the best. Actually they are, generally speaking, members of a political machine, or machines, who will vote, again speaking generally, as their leaders or bosses tell them.

For instance, it is currently believed that there are a number of members of this chief law-making body of the State who will attach more importance to what John Walter Smith thinks than what they themselves think the best interests of the State. Others, it is said, will hesitate to disoblige Fred Talbott, or "Josh" Miles, or "Billy" Stone. Some, it is betraying no confidence to say, will pay heed, first of all, to what "Sonny" Mahon wants. A great many of them will consider, primarily, the wishes of the Governor of the State, bearing in mind the distribution of patronage which takes place late in the session and is accompanied by much excitement and heart-burnings.

Then there are wheels within the wheels of these political machines. It is assumed, for instance, that Mr. Mahon himself, at this particular juncture, with his eye also on the aforementioned distribution of patronage, and maybe an undue sense of the appallingness of a gubernatorial veto, will also hesitate to offend Mr. Crothers. Even Senator Smith may be expected to defer, just a little, to the Governor if the latter should show signs of obstinacy or independence.

Further, there is the question of the part the corporations will play in the actual working of the Legislature. In years past they have not been unknown to take a quite prominent part. This must always be a matter of faith, and not of knowledge, with the average citizen, for no one ever sees a corporation go boldly into the House or Senate and openly vote the vote of a duly accredited delegate of the sovereign people. But when the people see bill after bill favorable to the corporations go rushing through the Legislature, and bill after bill unfavorable to the corporations crushingly defeated, then, naturally, they have suspicions. Such suspicions were not entirely absent during the last session of the General Assembly.

This time, however, it is different. The corporations, apparently, were not as important factors as usual in the late election, thanks, maybe, to the corrupt practices act. Consequently, there will be fewer debts to be paid to them. Also, there have been visible upon the horizon signs that the corporations and political powers are not utterly en rapport at the present moment. In a word, natural gas.

Absolute fairness demands certain qualifications of the broad statement regarding the oligarchial form of Maryland's government. In one or two cases the county boss or leader is combined in one person with the people's representative. There's Senator Blair Lee, for example, whose leadership of his party in Montgomery has made that the banner Democratic county of the State. He is in a position where he does not have to defer to any higher authority. He holds his office not through the influence of any other man, but by direct gift of his constituents. Therefore he is likely to regard first of all, the wishes of those constituents. Moreover, he is a man of intelligence, enlightenment and independence. Senator Arthur P. Gorman of Howard is another man who can afford to be independent if he cares to. And there are other Senators and Delegates who, while owing allegiance to the political machine, are not subservient to it. If their self-respect demands or the wishes of their constituents is made clear they will not hesitate to kick over the traces.

The trouble about all the men who want to preserve a fair measure of independence, or, rather, the trouble with the situation, is that if these men wish to accomplish anything for their constituents they must secure the co-operation of a majority. Consequently there will be much dickering and bartering and compromising.

Governor Crothers will be the central figure of the Legislature. Through his position he holds the key to the situation. On his desire to secure creditable legislation, on his ability and honesty, everything depends. If he is sincere in his professions, if he is sufficiently capable, if he is firm and persevering and shrewd, he can make the Democratic majority in the Legislature cover itself with glory.

Despite the fact that the Governor has been two years in office, he is still very much of a puzzle to the people of Maryland. When he took his seat in the Governor's chair he unquestionably left a bad record behind him. He had been a county boss of a not particularly pleasant type. Since he has been in office, however, he has done little that calls for criticism. He has done much that is thoroughly commendable. The reforms that he has outlined through the various commissions he appointed are so broad in scope and so admirable in detail that if he can carry them through he will make a record not only as a good Governor, but as the very best that Maryland has had in many a year.

Some who know him well say that the Governor is determined to make such a record. The puzzling point in the situation is that thus far the reforms are all a matter of promise and not of performance. There are many men who mean well but only a few who have the power to transmure their good intentions into deeds. "Fatti machi; parole femine." Is the Governor enough of a man and politician to jam his reforms through the Legislature? Is he a real steam-roller. The next 90 days will show.

Quail Killed.

The recent protracted spell of cold snowy weather was extremely hard on quail and other game birds, but particularly upon the former. Reports are to the effect that the birds were killed off in large numbers on account of the weather conditions, first because the ground was covered by the sleet of four weeks ago followed by the heavy snow. The quail seems to be the one bird that providence has not armed with the necessary instinct to preserve its life under the conditions prevailing during stormy periods. Close observers of their habits state that quail caught in stormy weather huddle together in bunches until they starve to death, making no effort whatever to get out and seek food as the pheasant will do under similar circumstances. According to accounts of those most familiar with it the quail seems to have less sense than the turkey.

A. F. and A. M. Election.

At the last regular communication of Oakland lodge No. 192, A., F. and A. M., the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Worshipful Master, Mr. R. E. Sliger; Senior Warden, Mr. Julius C. Renninger; Junior Warden, Mr. A. T. Matthews; Secretary, Mr. Authur Lawton; Treasurer, Mr. E. J. Fringer; Tyler, Mr. Eugene Baumgartner. These officers, as well as those to be appointed, will be installed at the next regular communication of the lodge.

ACCIDENT.

Our good old winter has come once more to visit us with snow from two to six feet deep. There has been some fine sledding but at present there is too much snow for good sledding. The thermometer stood below zero.

Mr. H. J. Speicher and wife made a trip to Meyersdale, Pa., to visit Mrs. Speicher's father, Mr. Joel Gnagey, on Christmas and got snowbound, returning home the following Tuesday.

Misses Mary and Josephine Browning, of Sang Run, were snowbound at Mr. John Hoffman's, of this place, for several days after Christmas.

We had two Christmas festivals in our town Christmas eve, one in the English Lutheran church and the other in the German Lutheran church. Both were largely attended.

Mr. Jacob Feik and wife and C. A. Guthrie and family were guests of Mr. John Sperline on Christmas.

Miss Vesta Beeghley is the telephone central in the absence of Miss Nellie Shartzer, who is taking a vacation.

Mr. Frank Northcraft was judge on the bench to render his decision on the contest of who handles the best peanuts in town. After eating a few quarts he has decided on Mr. J. L. Englehart

There were a number of school teachers home during the Christmas vacation.

Mr. Arthur Schlossnagel spent his vacation at Braddock, Pa., with his uncle.

THE RURAL SCHOOLS

Good Work For Women's Clubs and Civic Leagues.

INTELLIGENT EFFORT NEEDED

Dilapidated and Ancient Structures May Be Transformed Into Attractive Buildings, Giving the Children Both Mental and Moral Uplift.

While it is recognized generally that consolidation or the combination of several school districts into one is the real solution of the rural school problem, yet, according to Willet Hayes of the United States department of agriculture, there are 100,000 isolated schools too remote from other schools to be consolidated. It is the improvement of these, then, that must be considered first. To do efficient work these must be given a new setting and new aid from the parents and board. Many of the federated women's clubs and intelligent citizens throughout the country are aiding in the upbuilding of these schools where their needs are made known.

The federated clubs of Tennessee send out yearly traveling libraries for these remote schools, and the clubwomen of Georgia have begun to interest themselves in the farmers' institutes in order to come into closer touch with the farmers' wives. In Eatonton, Ga., a western capitalist has employed at his own expense an experienced teacher in cooking and household economics to instruct the children of the city and the surrounding country schools in those subjects. The upbuilding of a school is work peculiarly fitted for women, and no organization can do a nobler or a more lasting work than to undertake to repair and equip one of these rural schools. The outlay will be small—hardly $50—but the results in good citizenship will be great.

If we would make artists of our children we surround them with beautiful pictures, if we would make musicians we fill them with harmonious sounds, and yet when we would make useful, thrifty citizens and orderly housekeepers we send our children for two-thirds of the day to a house so dilapidated and unkempt that we would hesitate to use it for a barn. Yet we realize that a man's whole nature is determined largely by his surroundings in childhood. It is not precept, but example, that teaches.

A small, modern, two room schoolhouse with four windows to a room can be built for a small sum. But where even that amount is not available the old building, dilapidated as it is, can be vastly improved with little expense and more labor. In the first place, there should be a thorough cleaning and repairing. Broken planks, worn steps, decayed shutters and broken down seats should be replaced with new ones and everything about the building put in good order. A double coat of paint should be given both exterior and interior of the building—gray for the outside and pale yellow, nearly cream, for the inside, as yellow reflects the light and makes a dark room lighter.

If this repairing and painting are done by the older schoolboys under the direction of an intelligent citizen the expense will be a trifle—in fact, nothing more than the cost of lumber and paint. At the same time the enthusiasm of the children in helping do the work will act as a safeguard in protecting the building from future mutilations. Sandpaper and varnish the desks and seats and by all means put a blackboard all around the room, for to expect a teacher to instruct children with a 6 by 6 foot blackboard is equivalent to sending out a carpenter to do work without tools.

When the building is clean and in good repair a beginning can be made in equipping and beautifying it. A map of the United States, one of North and South America, one of Europe and Asia, are indispensable. These can be purchased from any school supply company. In addition, put a little money into a few pictures that will help to transform the bare walls into places of interest.

Plan next for window gardens, especially if any of the school windows have a southern or southeastern exposure. Nothing helps children more than to watch and care for these during the winter.

Make the Yards Attractive.

About the first thing a traveler sees of a town he is entering by rail is the back yards abutting on the railroads. More often than not the view is far from pleasing and is calculated to create a bad impression. This is an evil that can be easily remedied by a little labor on the part of the householders, and the benefits are easily apparent. The good example set by a woman's town improvement society of Illinois might be followed with like excellent results. It offered good sized cash premiums to the householders who could show the cleanest and prettiest back yards along the railroad tracks. Great improvement quickly became manifest.

The Social Club.

A well managed and prosperous social club is a good thing for a town. It provides recreation for its members and brings them into closer acquaintance and often develops into an organization of more lofty aims and nobler purposes. Many social clubs have been reorganized into improvement societies, the members of which have improved and built up unsightly towns and made them healthier and better places to live in.

THE NEW YORK WAY.

The New York city board of health has recently inaugurated a vigorous warfare on the common housefly as a prolific spreader of disease. Among the more important recommendations to the public whose co-operation is asked in the campaign of extermination are the following: Keep flies away from the sick and kill those appearing in the sickroom; do not allow decaying material to accumulate near the premises; cover piles that do accumulate with lime or kerosene; keep receptacles containing garbage covered and the contents sprinkled with lime or kerosene; keep all stable manure screened in pit or vault or sprinkled with lime and kerosene; pour kerosene into the drains; burn or bury all table refuse and screen all windows and doors, especially in the kitchen and dining room. The same instructions give the following as the most effective method of killing flies: Place in plates or saucers about the house a weak solution of formaldehyde in water (two teaspoonfuls to the pint). It has no offensive smell, is fatal to disease germs and is practically nonpoisonous except to insects. The youngsters could drink a saucerful of this without suffering serious inconvenience, and enough formaldehyde could be bought for 10 cents to last all summer.

A SANER ATTITUDE.

One of the hopeful aspects of the campaign which is being waged along the line of a conservation of our country's natural sources is the remarkable change which has taken place in the attitude of the lumbermen of the north and west toward the aims and work of Gifford Pinchot, chief of the forest service bureau. But a short two or three years ago they viewed and styled him as a well meaning but enthusiastic idealist who had a whole lot of notions that wouldn't dovetail in with the cold dollar and cents considerations which were uppermost in their minds. But now that he has succeeded in demonstrating to them that the only thing he is after is such administration of the forests as will give them a maximum usefulness and make them a perpetual source of revenue they are unstinted in their praise of him as their chief benefactor. As a result they are co-operating with him in every way possible, including adequate measures for the fighting of forest fires, the cutting of timber by selection and the protecting of the seedling conifers, as well as the introduction of methods of preserving wood and timber which will add greatly to their life and usefulness. This change of attitude is most wholesome and bodes well for the coming years.

BUYING UNSIGHT.

There are a number of fruit ranch promotion schemes in several sections of the west which the cautious investor would do well to investigate thoroughly before wasting his money on them. We refer to tracts which are being developed by men none too scrupulous and advertised as "ready to bear" at the end of five years, when inspection of the tracts reveals the sorry fact that not only were poor and cheap trees set out to begin with, but they have not been properly pruned or cultivated during the five year period. Before investing in any such fruit ranches the prospective buyer should not only inspect first hand the condition of the tract which is later to be his at from $300 to $500 per acre, but should inquire with even greater pains into the financial standing and reputation for integrity which the men backing the scheme have with bankers and other conservative and reliable people in the community. If a fellow has his senses with him he would not become engaged to a woman a thousand miles away without seeing her or buy a horse unsight on a stranger's recommendation. He should use as much judgment in buying a fruit ranch.

THE SKUNK CABBAGE.

Botanists seem agreed that a distinct purpose is served in nature's economy in the foul odor which characterizes the carrion fungus, or skunk cabbage. The stalk of this variety of fungus is hollow, and on its top is borne a wrinkled cap perforated in the middle by an opening. The surface of the cap is covered with a slimy greenish-black mass of spores and mucilage. Various flies and burying beetles, deceived by this odor, are attracted to it in the supposition that it is decaying animal matter. Alighting, their feet become smeared with spores and mucilage, which they carry away and distribute, getting nothing for their pains. A Brazilian relative of the stinkhorn, besides practicing the deceits mentioned, has a conspicuous white veil hanging down from the cap, which travelers say is slightly phosphorescent at night, which causes nocturnal insects to be drawn to it.

Apple butter is licking good if the juice is removed to make jelly, but it's 150 per cent better if the juice is left in.

The colt may be taught to walk fast by being broken with older horses that are fast rather than poky walkers. The habit early formed will persist in later years.

Cats, like rats and guinea pigs, are said to contract tuberculosis readily, provided they drink milk which contains tuberculosis bacilli, and frequenting dwelling houses as they so often do they may become ready vehicles for spreading the disease.

Some experiments in the thinning of apples have been conducted at the Connecticut experiment station. In one of these the young fruit on two Baldwin trees was thinned, giving an increase in crop value of 77½ cents and $1.83 respectively. Just another instance of where intensive care paid.

In the building of the new big barn the specifications could call for an up to date and adequate system of ventilation, by means of which, even in coldest weather, when the barn is kept tightly closed, the animals may be supplied with an abundance of fresh air. This matter of ventilation is not some college professor's fad, but a question of animal health, profits and good horse sense.

Victoria (B. C.) fruit growers are suspecting contamination to their orchards through fungous and insect pests from the small gardens of householders in the suburban districts, and a house to house canvass is to be made with a view to cleaning things up. Were the conditions appreciated, just such a campaign as this might be started in a good many other fruit growing sections.

It's no use to talk "bein' president of the United States" to boys who are careless about their habits, shiftless, indifferent or lazy, for lads of this description never have been and never will be elevated to this important office. A boy should rustle and do the best for himself, whatever the object held before him. If he has in him and develops the presidential stuff he is so much the gainer.

In the new type of agriculture which is being made use of to regenerate rundown cotton farms in many of the southern states the growing of alfalfa, cowpeas and soy beans is the chief factor. If dairying or stock raising can be added, the work of rebuilding is the more quickly and completely effected. There are one or two farms north of Mason and Dixon's line that need this same kind of medicine.

It has been found as a result of experiments and tests which have been lately made with a view to utilizing the scrub or Jersey pine that grows on abandoned farm and cut over lands in eastern states that the pulp of this species of pine is valuable for the manufacture of bag, news and wrapping paper. This is good news and will help along the government's forest conservation policy by making possible the substitution of this for other more valuable conifers.

It may be viewed as a truism, yet it is worth remembering, that one is hardly justified in pulling up stakes and going to a new locality unless the prospects are good that one can do better financially and get more enjoyment out of life in the new than under the old conditions, and yet a lot of folks are doing this thing every day—selling acres whose output they know and can count on for rosy prospects, but untried returns in the new country to which their wanderlust carries them.

No young man of physical strength, intelligence and enterprise need view with alarm being left on the tender mercies of the cold world if he can rent or buy five acres of land near a good market and owns or can borrow enough money to secure equipment for raising fruits, vegetables and poultry. Some farseeing students of our national economics are looking ahead and contemplating the time when we shall not as a country be able to raise all the foodstuffs which we consume. The plan suggested would therefore seem to help not only the individual, but be a service to society.

When the matter is simmered down, there seems to be mighty little gain in a fellow's scrimping everlastingly and working like a slave from one year's end to another to accumulate a bank account and finally carrying it so far that he ruins his health and loses the power to enjoy the ease and competence which he has striven so hard to attain. It is very much better to let up a bit before the breakdown and avoid the expense as well as the annoyance and discomfort of broken health. A bunch of fellows we know and doubtless a host we don't are inviting just this condition of things by their present gait.

A friend who always takes much pride in his place has finally become disgusted with the cedar hedge, which for many years past has been performing the mission of a high board fence about his premises, and has taken it out. This is a very commendable move, for henceforth passersby will be able to see the stretch of blue grass lawn and the pretty beds of phlox, salvias and asters which always grace it. Incidentally the apples on the nearby trees will be less subject to scab and blight. More of these hedges ought to be rooted out unless, perchance, they serve as a screen for that which is ugly or uncomely.

The no breakfast fad is commendable as a fat reducer if the one practicing the self denial doesn't eat just that much more at dinner time.

The art of cheesemaking is said to date back to 350 B. C., but notwithstanding 2,250 years' experience there's altogether too much inferior stuff put on the market.

If the boys and girls would rather be over at Neighbor Smith's or somewhere else than at home it is fair to assume that the home is not as attractive a place as it might be, and something ought to be done to give it some drawing force.

It is a matter of regret that the poison ivy and poison oak, both shrubs of attractive leaf form and marvelously beautiful coloring, cannot be handled with impunity and plucked to add beauty to autumn decorations of the home. But they add their brilliant touch of color to copse or roadside hedge and in this perform a mission.

It is not the boy or girl in school today who is doing as little as possible, and that in a shabby and listless way, who is going to be heard from twenty years hence, but rather the student who does the task assigned in the most thorough manner and, besides, is all the time seeking to find out a little more about a subject than the lesson contains.

According to the bulletin issued by the government crop reporting board, the condition of the cotton crop on Aug. 25 was 63.7 per cent of a normal crop as compared with 71.9 on July 25, 1909, and 76.1 on Aug. 25, 1908. Thus is briefly described in official language the heavy damage done the cotton crop by the July and August drought.

Instead of trying to get rid of extra flesh—in the usual advertisement called "adipose tissue"—by drugging the system with anti-fat dopes the sensible person will adopt a simpler and less expensive remedy—eat half as much food and perform twice as much physical labor. This will usually be found effective in reducing the most obstinate cases.

Running exclusively to one line has drawbacks as well as advantages in agricultural pursuits as well as in some other vocations. The raising of diversified crops may not yield as large financial returns as a single line under specially favorable conditions for the latter, but in a series of years the average returns from diversified crops will be larger, while if conditions are unfavorable the farmer will lose only part of the eggs in his basket.

Nature intended that the cow in her primal state should give just enough milk to suckle the calf at her side until it reached an age when it had acquired a taste as well as a capacity for digesting other forms of food. Any cow of later day whose calf is allowed to run with her tends to deteriorate in the matter of milk production until she reaches the above standard. On this account the practice should be discouraged with any animal that has capacity for dairy purposes.

One of the interesting sights to the visitor at Miles City, Mont., is the horse sale, which is held every two or three months. During the course of the year 50,000 horses change hands at these sales, while the type of horses disposed of varies from the absolutely wild yearling cayuse, which has not known bridle or saddle and very likely has never seen a cowboy to know who he was, which sells for $20, to the pure bred draft or coach horse, which sells from $150 and up.

One of the manual training courses lately introduced into the high schools in the famous Wenatchee fruit valley in Washington aims to instruct both boys and girls in the latest and most scientific methods of packing apples. They are quick to pick the work up and on passing a satisfactory examination at the end of the course of instruction are given certificates of efficiency. Not only do the boys and girls enjoy this course, but it fits them for practical work at harvest time, when one of the biggest problems that the ranch owner has on his hands is the question of help. The idea ought to take root in other places.

The ginseng plant is an interesting one apart from the high value which is placed on the medicinal properties of its roots by the Chinese, who buy most of that produced in this country. The natural home of the herb is the moist, shady wood lot, where no direct rays of the sun strike the carpet of decaying leaves and where domestic animals do not browse or tramp. The plant is a perennial in habit, the stalk, which is from eight to fourteen inches high, dying down in the fall. This bears three divided leaves, which have a close resemblance to those of the hickory seedling. The plant bears a cluster of small bluish flowers, which produce bright red two-seed berries in the fall about the size of peas. Roots which have a commercial value are produced on plants two years old and more. The dried roots are said to sell from $5 to $7 a pound and the berries from 30 to 60 cents per dozen. If reports are to be credited, good money is made raising ginseng commercially under artificial shade, but it is the few who succeed rather than the many.

United States Treasurer.

Lee McClung, who was selected as treasurer of the United States to succeed Charles H. Treat, resigned, owes his appointment largely to his success in modernizing treasury and accounting methods at Yale university.

After his graduation from Yale in 1892 Mr. McClung traveled in Europe and later in California. Then he started in to work. He was made paymaster of the St. Paul and Duluth Railway company. Then for several years he was assistant traffic manager of the Southern railway.

During his college career Mr. McClung was a class leader and received the largest vote as the most popular member of his class in the senior year.

LEE McCLUNG.

He was a famous halfback also and was captain of the Yale football team in 1892. McClung was one of the best halfbacks Yale ever had, they say. They still talk of his work on the gridiron there. He was appointed treasurer of Yale in 1904.

Mr. McClung is a native of Knoxville, Tenn., and is in his fortieth year. He is a kinsman of General Albert Sidney Johnston, of Confederate army fame, as well as of Chief Justice Marshall.

Senseless In Last Degree.

General Humphrey, retired, former quartermaster general of the army, was discussing a certain army officer who had long been in the volunteer service.

"What kind of a chap is he?" asked a friend.

"Oh, nice enough," replied the general.

"But has he any sense?"

"Sense!" snorted the general. "He hasn't sense enough to turn around in a revolving chair."—Saturday Evening Post.

Mrs. Stetson, Christian Scientist.

Mrs. Augusta E. Stetson, who was recently ousted from the leadership of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, New York, by order of the directors of the mother church, Boston, has for years been the dominant influence in the New York church. Mrs. Stetson was further disciplined by suspension from teaching for a period of three years. Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, head of the cult, in a letter to Mrs. Stetson admonished the latter to "awake and arise from this temptation produced by animal magnetism upon yourself, allowing your students to deify you and me."

Mrs. Stetson is a native of Maine and in her youth married the son of a Boston shipbuilder. Twenty-five years ago she became a disciple of Mrs.

AUGUSTA E. STETSON.

Eddy, being one of the earliest to adopt the tenets of the founder of Christian Science. Two years later Mrs. Eddy sent Mrs. Stetson to New York to heal, to teach and to establish Christian Science in that city. At the end of the first year she organized the first Christian Science church there. In ten years the church was able to pay $103,000 for a home of its own. Then plans were formulated for a magnificent temple, and in 1903 the present church was dedicated. It is built of marble and granite and cost $1,185,000 and on completion was free from debt.

MODERN WONDERS.

THE days of miracles are gone,
Things now are run by rule,
The marvelous gives way to what
We learn about in school,
But still some modern miracles
Shine forth to give us hope—
Some mighty magic is performed
By just a cake of soap.

The people who in darkness sit
Or stand, as like as not,
Shut out from civilizing light
And on the earth a blot,
Will feel at least their self respect
Expand if in a tub
They tumble once or twice a week
And take a man size scrub.

The little arabs on the street,
As tough as kids are made,
Who seek out every lawless gang
And join in the parade,
Will feel that they are better boys,
Although they may not smile,
If some one turns the hose on them
And lets them soak awhile.

With scrubbing brush and pot of paint
The people and the place
May be transformed until they shine
And wear a different face.
The age of miracles is past,
But in a broader scope
We see if we will look around
The wonder work of soap.

Our Lofty Neighbor.

Mars is so near and yet so far. We can view it with the naked eye, and the astronomers can tell us that the water in its canals is running down hill, but what satisfaction can we find in that?

Even at close range Mars is about as useful as a neighbor as one that is separated from us by a spite fence. It is impossible to swap canal mules or cooking recipes with such a neighbor or to retail gossip over the clothesline.

True, we can wander around in the evenings and admire its loveliness, but we can do the same thing with an electric sign.

Mars is all right as far as we know, but if it wants to get our baseball scores and the latest news of the New York divorce scandals the next time it draws near it should come within balloon hailing distance.

Easy to Find.

"The Boston girl reminds me of the north pole, she is so chilly."

"Yes, but the resemblance stops right there."

"Does it?"

"You bet. Any man can discover her who wears a good suit of clothes and makes a noise like culture."

Some Merit.

"I will publish you to the world."

"Will you, though?"

"Yes, I will."

"That is good. I thought from the way you talked a few minutes ago that you regarded me as unfit for publication."

What Then?

"You spend a lot of money foolishly."

"I guess I do."

"Leave it at home if you want to save it."

"But suppose my wife discovers it?"

His Trade.

"She is in love with the butcher."

"Does she admire him?"

"Thinks he is perfectly killing."

OUR SOUTHERN LETTER.

The Man Who Lives in the South Need Not Worry Abo ..e Education of H.. Children.

A stranger from the North at my house recently handed out another dose of the occasional sympathy we get from those who see in the North all that is good and in the South nothing but despair.

"Don't you think of the future of your children?" he asked. "I should think that would make you discontented with a life at the South."

"Why?" I asked.

"Oh the many opportunities you miss that they would have at the North."

"What, for instance?" I asked again, for I have that quality of ignorance that requires to be shown a great deal.

"Well, schools and—"

"Let us dispose of that before we go further," I suggested. "My hopefuls go to school every day. A wagon comes from the schoolhouse in the morning, picks up the young folk in the neighborhood, drops them at the schoolhouse, picks them up at night, brings them back, and they are always on time both ways. They have a good school, good teachers, good school companions and a good school system. They come home here at night and tell us that some harmless looking word is derived from the Latin ancestor of over two thousand years ago, and they explain to each other the mysteries of binomials and chemical affinities and that sort of thing until it sounds wonderfully learned at our house, where those things are not so plenty as hay and cord wood. What better would they do if they were somewhere else?"

I get pretty tired of that sort of complaining of this section of the country by people who know where better places are to be found, and I am vain enough to say that I am here because I like the country, and stay because I like it, and that if I knew a better place I would go there.

"But think of the future of your children," my critics will argue.

And then I do think. Here is a section of the United States where factories are multiplying at a gait so wonderful that I can compare it with nothing outside of the industrial belt of western Pennsylvania, where natural gas and cheap coal have afforded cheap power and thus stimulate the greatest industrial development in the world. I cannot see but that the enormous water power of the South is going to duplicate that development. If the young folks coming on want to be captains of industry or followers in the industrial ranks I know of no place where the opportunities seem more inviting.

If they want to be farmers certainly no place on earth offers a better chance than within a hundred miles of their own door. If they want to take any kind of a part in the great tasks of human progress, they will never find a better spot to take off their coats than here in North Carolina, for here all is setting a resolute foot forward, with all that can be wanted in the way of resources.

There was a day when to go West was all right. To come South is more sensible now than to go in any other direction in the United States. The West never had the resources of the South, and never can have. The resources of his country are not in the West. A line drawn from New Orleans northward to the boundary of the United States will set off on the east side scarcely more than a fourth of the territory of the country but probably three fifths of the available natural resources. It will include most of the best farming country, most of the mineral wealth, most of the forest wealth and most of the whole country so far as population, wealth and progress count.

More than half the manufacturing of the entire country is done in the narrow strip of territory east of Ohio and Kentucky, reaching down to Georgia from Maine. Oregon, Washington and Idaho together, a territory nearly as big as the whole South east of the Mississippi, do not rank as high agriculturally as Virginia alone.

The South Atlantic States are not confined to any one line of industry. Farms may be operated, mills built, and all of the attendant occupations followed. Business may be carried on almost every day of the year out of doors and weather never shuts up the railroads or the rivers. There is no close of navigation because of ice, and no snow blockades on the railroads.

These are reasons why the young folks need not be concerned about living in the South. The boy who is today looking about him for a place to go cannot do better than to try the South, and he cannot go amiss by trying it almost anywhere from Texas to Virginia. He cannot make a mistake by locating in any of the little towns and growing cities if he wants to set out in some line of business and grow up with it. He cannot make a mistake by locating in some of the cities that are already making some pretensions and staying with them until they become big cities, as they are sure to do. What has been done in Pittsburg, Cleveland, Chicago, Lowell, Syracuse and Buffalo will be done swiftly in Charlotte, Atlanta, Knoxville, Birmingham and a lot of other towns.

The young fellow who goes to Charlotte goes to the land or opportunity, and he does the same at Greensboro, Winston, Lexington, Durham and almost any other place in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia or Tennessee. Virginia and West Virginia are developing and making chances for more young fellows every day.

The South is going to be the scene of the next great step forward in the United States, and it has room for a million live young fellows and as many more as want to come right now. After all, the man is the great factor in progress, for human energy and human intelligence constitute the great resource, and no matter what else may be available that is the greatest source of wealth.

It would be adsurd to argue that my section is the most promising, for all sections of the South are on the belt of opportunity, and the bright young man who can succeed at all can succeed almost anywhere in the South. This is also to remember. The car fare back is not so much from the Carolinas as it is from the Pacific coast in case of heimweh, which is frequent.

ODORS OVER THE TELEPHONE.

Perfume of Carnations Clearly Wafted From One Booth to Another Far Away.

The other day a prominent business man of this city went into a drug store to use a telephone. Just before him a young woman with a large bouquet of carnations had been using the phone and when he went into the booth the odor of the flowers nearly stifled him, so much so, in fact, that his intention was to hurry the conversation and get out as soon as possible. With the thought of the strong odor uppermost in his mind, he called up a man at the other side of the city. Without a word having been said on the subthe other man remarked about the strong odor of carnations, and the man who had called up, without thinking, said that a woman with some carnations had just been using the phone on which he was talking.

"Hold the phone just a minute," said the man at the other end of the line, "and I will find out if there are any of the flowers in the store."

After waiting for a few moments he again came to the telephone and said that there were no carnations there and that the clerk was positive that there had been none in the store that day.—Ohio State Journal.

STORY OF JOAN OF ARC.

Rev. Thomas B. Gregory, in New York American.

The story of the "Maid of Orleans" is one of the most wonderful in all history. It is more than romantic. It is amazing, mysterious, and, from the ordinary human standpoint, quite miraculous.

A young peasant girl, without the slightest knowledge of books, being unable to read or write, her whole time being passed between household work in her father's humble cottage and the caring for her father's sheep; absolutely ignorant of the great outside world, silent, shy, retired, abounding in physical energy and seemingly absorbed in the discharge of her simple duties in home and field, is suddenly transformed into a great national deliverer and saviour, the joy and inspiration of her countrymen, the dread and terror of her country's foes.

Joan of Arc, known to immortality as the "Maid of Orleans," was born about the year 1411 in the small village of Domremy, France. Her father was a small peasant proprietor but few removes from the condition of a common serf, and the mother was of corresponding station, mentally and socially.

But simple-minded and rustic as the Domremy villagers were, they were sufficiently awake not to be insensible to the wretched shape in which their country found itself. That shape was indeed a forlorn one. The English had extended their conquest all over the north of France; the English Henry VI had already been proclaimed king of France.

It was at this juncture, when the national disgrace was at its low-water mark that Joan began hearing "voices" and seeing "visions." Possibly the voices and visions were helped along somewhat by the conviction, prevalent in the locality, that out of the forests of Domremy a virgin was to come who should prove to be the people's leader in their fight for the restoration of the national prestige.

In the meantime the English encroachment kept on, and in 1428 Orleans was invested by the foes from across the channel. In the Maid's opinion the time had come for her to act. Supernatural voices were calling to her, and she made an effort to convey to the French authorities what the voices commanded. She had a hard time in reaching the great ones, and a still harder time after she had reached them in getting them to recognize the soundness of her claims; but finally after a committee of learned men had examined her and found nothing against her faith and purity, she was permitted to go ahead. At the head of an army of some 5,000 men the Maid, clothed in a coat of mail and armed with an ancient sword which she had found near an altar of one of the saints, the white standard of her own design embroidered with lilies floating over her head, marched to the relief of Orleans. The result all the world knows, and at that result the world has not yet ceased to wonder.

The simple peasant girl proved to be mightier than all the steel-coated knights and warriors of the kingdom; and before the young woman's victory the enemy seemed to fly as before the push of omnipotence! Inspired by her example the hitherto weak Frenchmen became demigods in prowess, and triumph after triumph crowned their arms! Jargean, Beaugency, capped by the great victory of Patay, and the English found themselves driven beyond the Loire. In the great cathedral at Rheims, with Joan at his side, Charles received his coronation. It was in July, 1429, that Charles was crowned, and a little more than a year later Joan, while leading a sortie against the besiegers of Compiegne, was wounded and taken prisoner.

The ungrateful man upon whose brow she had placed the crown took no steps toward her ransom, and she was sold to the English, who, in conjunction with the University of Paris and the Inquisition, had her condemned as a witch and executed. She was burned at the stake on the streets of Rouen, May 30, 1531.

Thus perished, in her twentieth year, one of the most remarkable characters known to history.

CLOTHES MADE HIM A NEW MAN.

If Anyone Doubts the Tonic Effect of a Good Appearance, Let Him Read This.

A London medical man, having declared that new clothing is a powerful mental and moral tonic, and that a man in shabby attire is often less capable than his well-dressed mental inferior, the Ottawa Citizen says that "it might give the doctor some trouble to explain why nearly all our millionaires wear trousers that bag at the knees and cling so pitifully to the ready-made necktie."

Instead of trying to explain why millionaires dress in that way we think the London doctor could very truly reply that they don't. With the doctor's view that new and neat clothing is a powerful mental and moral tonic we heartily agree. One may test it in his own case, or note it in others, while always before us we have convincing evidence that women show the tonic effect of being well dressed. We may cite one case, says the Toronto Star. A Toronto man had been in hard luck. Largely through his own folly he had gone so completely to the bad that he was stopping his old-time acquaintances on the street and asking them for dimes. One man who had known him in his better days took him home and fitted him out with clean linen, a nice tweed suit, hat and shiny shoes. What was the result? The man who one day had been furtively wheedling dimes from acquaintances next day walked along the street with his head up and had no trouble whatever in borrowing one, two or five dollars from every person he recognized. New clothes made a new man of him, fired him with ambition and he raked in more long green in one day than he used to get in a month.

A wagon comes from the schoolhouse in the morning, picks up the young folk in the neighborhood, drops them at the schoolhouse, picks them up at night, brings them back, and they are always on time both ways. They have a good school, good teachers, good school companions and a good school system. They come home here at night and tell us that some harmless looking word is derived from the Latin ancestor of over two thousand years ago, and they explain to each other the mysteries of binomials and chemical affinities and that sort of thing until it sounds wonderfully learned at our house, where those things are not so plenty as hay and cord wood. What better would they do if they were somewhere else?"

I get pretty tired of that sort of complaining of this section of the country by people who know where better places are to be found, and I am vain enough to say that I am here because I like the country, and stay because I like it, and that if I knew a better place I would go there.

"But think of the future of your children," my critics will argue.

And then I do think. Here is a section of the United States where factories are multiplying at a gait so wonderful that I can compare it with nothing outside of the industrial belt of western Pennsylvania, where natural gas and cheap coal have afforded cheap power and thus stimulate the greatest industrial development in the world. I cannot see but that the enormous water power of the South is going to duplicate that development. If the young folks coming on want to be captains of industry or followers in the industrial ranks I know of no place where the opportunities seem more inviting.

If they want to be farmers certainly no place on earth offers a better chance than within a hundred miles of their own door. If they want to take any kind of a part in the great tasks of human progress, they will never find a better spot to take off their coats than here in North Carolina, for here all is setting a resolute foot forward, with all that can be wanted in the way of resources.

There was a day when to go West was all right. To come South is more sensible now than to go in any other direction in the United States. The West never had the resources of the South, and never can have. The resources of his country are not in the West. A line drawn from New Orleans northward to the boundary of the United States will set off on the east side scarcely more than a fourth of the territory of the country but probably three fifths of the available natural resources. It will include most of the best farming country, most of the mineral wealth, most of the forest wealth and most of the whole country so far as population, wealth and progress count.

More than half the manufacturing of the entire country is done in the narrow strip of territory east of Ohio and Kentucky, reaching down to Georgia from Maine. Oregon, Washington and Idaho together, a territory nearly as big as the whole South east of the Mississippi, do not rank as high agriculturally as Virginia alone.

The South Atlantic States are not confined to any one line of industry. Farms may be operated, mills built, and all of the attendant occupations followed. Business may be carried on almost every day of the year out of doors and weather never shuts up the railroads or the rivers. There is no close of navigation because of ice, and no snow blockades on the railroads.

These are reasons why the young folks need not be concerned about living in the South. The boy who is today looking about him for a place to go cannot do better than to try the South, and he cannot go amiss by trying it almost anywhere from Texas to Virginia. He cannot make a mistake by locating in any of the little towns and growing cities if he wants to set out in some line of business and grow up with it. He cannot make a mistake by locating in some of the cities that are already making some pretensions and staying with them until they become big cities, as they are sure to do. What has been done in Pittsburg, Cleveland, Chicago, Lowell, Syracuse and Buffalo will be done swiftly in Charlotte, Atlanta, Knoxville, Birmingham and a lot of other towns.

The young fellow who goes to Charlotte goes to the land or opportunity, and he does the same at Greensboro, Winston, Lexington, Durham and almost any other place in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia or Tennessee. Virginia and West Virginia are developing and making chances for more young fellows every day.

The South is going to be the scene of the next great step forward in the United States, and it has room for a million live young fellows and as many more as want to come right now. After all, the man is the great factor in progress, for human energy and human intelligence constitute the great resource, and no matter what else may be available that is the greatest source of wealth.

It would be adsurd to argue that my section is the most promising, for all sections of the South are on the belt of opportunity, and the bright young man who can succeed at all can succeed almost anywhere in the South. This is also to remember. The car fare back is not so much from the Carolinas as it is from the Pacific coast in case of heimweh, which is frequent.

ODORS OVER THE TELEPHONE.

Perfume of Carnations Clearly Wafted From One Booth to Another Far Away.

The other day a prominent business man of this city went into a drug store to use a telephone. Just before him a young woman with a large bouquet of carnations had been using the phone and when he went into the booth the odor of the flowers nearly stifled him, so much so, in fact, that his intention was to hurry the conversation and get out as soon as possible. With the thought of the strong odor uppermost in his mind, he called up a man at the other side of the city. Without a word having been said on the subthe other man remarked about the strong odor of carnations, and the man who had called up, without thinking, said that a woman with some carnations had just been using the phone on which he was talking.

"Hold the phone just a minute," said the man at the other end of the line, "and I will find out if there are any of the flowers in the store."

After waiting for a few moments he again came to the telephone and said that there were no carnations there and that the clerk was positive that there had been none in the store that day.—Ohio State Journal.

STORY OF JOAN OF ARC.

Rev. Thomas B. Gregory, in New York American.

The story of the "Maid of Orleans" is one of the most wonderful in all history. It is more than romantic. It is amazing, mysterious, and, from the ordinary human standpoint, quite miraculous.

A young peasant girl, without the slightest knowledge of books, being unable to read or write, her whole time being passed between household work in her father's humble cottage and the caring for her father's sheep; absolutely ignorant of the great outside world, silent, shy, retired, abounding in physical energy and seemingly absorbed in the discharge of her simple duties in home and field, is suddenly transformed into a great national deliverer and saviour, the joy and inspiration of her countrymen, the dread and terror of her country's foes.

Joan of Arc, known to immortality as the "Maid of Orleans," was born about the year 1411 in the small village of Domremy, France. Her father was a small peasant proprietor but few removes from the condition of a common serf, and the mother was of corresponding station, mentally and socially.

But simple-minded and rustic as the Domremy villagers were, they were sufficiently awake not to be insensible to the wretched shape in which their country found itself. That shape was indeed a forlorn one. The English had extended their conquest all over the north of France; the English Henry VI had already been proclaimed king of France.

It was at this juncture, when the national disgrace was at its low-water mark that Joan began hearing "voices" and seeing "visions." Possibly the voices and visions were helped along somewhat by the conviction, prevalent in the locality, that out of the forests of Domremy a virgin was to come who should prove to be the people's leader in their fight for the restoration of the national prestige.

In the meantime the English encroachment kept on, and in 1428 Orleans was invested by the foes from across the channel. In the Maid's opinion the time had come for her to act. Supernatural voices were calling to her, and she made an effort to convey to the French authorities what the voices commanded. She had a hard time in reaching the great ones, and a still harder time after she had reached them in getting them to recognize the soundness of her claims; but finally after a committee of learned men had examined her and found nothing against her faith and purity, she was permitted to go ahead. At the head of an army of some 5,000 men the Maid, clothed in a coat of mail and armed with an ancient sword which she had found near an altar of one of the saints, the white standard of her own design embroidered with lilies floating over her head, marched to the relief of Orleans. The result all the world knows, and at that result the world has not yet ceased to wonder.

The simple peasant girl proved to be mightier than all the steel-coated knights and warriors of the kingdom; and before the young woman's victory the enemy seemed to fly as before the push of omnipotence! Inspired by her example the hitherto weak Frenchmen became demigods in prowess, and triumph after triumph crowned their arms! Jargean, Beaugency, capped by the great victory of Patay, and the English found themselves driven beyond the Loire. In the great cathedral at Rheims, with Joan at his side, Charles received his coronation. It was in July, 1429, that Charles was crowned, and a little more than a year later Joan, while leading a sortie against the besiegers of Compiegne, was wounded and taken prisoner.

The ungrateful man upon whose brow she had placed the crown took no steps toward her ransom, and she was sold to the English, who, in conjunction with the University of Paris and the Inquisition, had her condemned as a witch and executed. She was burned at the stake on the streets of Rouen, May 30, 1531.

Thus perished, in her twentieth year, one of the most remarkable characters known to history.

CLOTHES MADE HIM A NEW MAN.

If Anyone Doubts the Tonic Effect of a Good Appearance, Let Him Read This.

A London medical man, having declared that new clothing is a powerful mental and moral tonic, and that a man in shabby attire is often less capable than his well-dressed mental inferior, the Ottawa Citizen says that "it might give the doctor some trouble to explain why nearly all our millionaires wear trousers that bag at the knees and cling so pitifully to the ready-made necktie."

Instead of trying to explain why millionaires dress in that way we think the London doctor could very truly reply that they don't. With the doctor's view that new and neat clothing is a powerful mental and moral tonic we heartily agree. One may test it in his own case, or note it in others, while always before us we have convincing evidence that women show the tonic effect of being well dressed. We may cite one case, says the Toronto Star. A Toronto man had been in hard luck. Largely through his own folly he had gone so completely to the bad that he was stopping his old-time acquaintances on the street and asking them for dimes. One man who had known him in his better days took him home and fitted him out with clean linen, a nice tweed suit, hat and shiny shoes. What was the result? The man who one day had been furtively wheedling dimes from acquaintances next day walked along the street with his head up and had no trouble whatever in borrowing one, two or five dollars from every person he recognized. New clothes made a new man of him, fired him with ambition and he raked in more long green in one day than he used to get in a month.

A GOODWILL CREED.

With the editorial columns of nearly all the newspapers teeming with admonition for the new year, with the pulpit thundering its warnings and advice far afield, our creed shall be taken from that of N. D. Bismarck, who, in Collier's Weekly, sounds a poetic note the basis of which is: To be earnest; to be strong; to be patient; to be kind; to be gentle; to forgive; to be smiling; to be glad.

It certainly strikes one that this is a pretty good sort of a creed. Candidly, doesn't it strike you more favorably than some that wear the ecclesiastical sanction? When you reduce it to its lowest terms this creed is simply the creed of good will—the creed of the Golden Rule. Isn't this true? Then, if you admit it, doesn't this doctrine seem more attractive than the doctrine of original sin, total depravity, perseverance of the saints, predestination or free will? Honestly, what do you think about it?

We've just entered upon another year. Would you rather live that year according to the good will set forth in Mr. Bismarck's creed or would you rather be hedged around by the iron tenets of ecclesiastical law? Think it over. Which is better? Which is the more sensible? It it better to give a hungry man a tract or a meal? In the judgment of many this must be a pertinent question. It differentiates between religion of creed and the religion of good will. Isn't it better to be "grateful all the way for the beauties of today," than to sacrifice all the joys of the world we have for the glories of the one to come?

Better learn to smile a little or you will not know how when you get to Heaven. Better practice justice in this world, for most of us have an idea that there will be plenty of it in the next. And, you'd better learn to work a little, too, for in our judgment eternity is not going to be one long and blissful rest. Do you believe that those fellows who never possessed anything better than a two-by-four mind in this world are not to get a chance to develop it in the next? In our judgment, dearly beloved, you will find Heaven one of the busiest places you ever imagined. If we are wrong, you tell us about it sometime.

That's something of a sermon, even if there's no collection attached. We didn't start in to elucidate theology, that being far from our line by a long shot, but we believe that words of wisdom often emanate from the editorial sanctum where religion reigneth not according to the conception of most "good" people. But, say, if we all honestly and conscientiously tried to live the good will creed for a year probably the most orthodox of us would admit that the Kingdom of Heaven had been born into the hearts of men.

RELIEVING THE LEGISLATURE OF WORK AND AUTHORITY.

The whole proceeding of the Democratic leaders in selecting in advance of the meeting of the Legislature all the officers of the two houses, including the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, is ultra vires, of course. It will be conceded that it probably expedites business to have the work of organization out of the way, but it is usurpation of authority, nevertheless, which the public should not permit to pass without criticism. It reflects on the competency and the independence of the membrrs of the Legislature, putting them in a contemptible light before the people of the State. It is bossism in an aggravated and offensive form and should not be viewed as a matter of slight consequence.

There has been little hostility on the part of the public, however, to the Governor's taking over a sort of leadership which makes him a dictator at Annapolis. This may be complimentary to him as indicating public acquiescence in his domination and public confidence in his motives, or it may mean that the people of the State have grown tired of the wirepulling and logrolling at Annapolis without being able to fix responsibility for what is going on—through clearly perceiving that it does not rest on the members of the Legislature—and are willing to swap this anonymous or polyglot bossism for some deus ex machina of whose identity and responsibility there can be no question.

A MENTAL HUNCH.

Give yourself a mental Christmas gift, says Anna B. Shaw, pastor, Church of Applied Thought, Boston. With all due respect to Rev. Anna B., think of buying yourself a yacht, or a motor car, or some furs for your wife or the grandest Christmas tree for the children, all of which, according to Anna's hunch, will have been mental. One might save a bunch of coin this way and one don't need to stop at the Christmas business if one is sufficiently daffy. The rule could be applied to almost everything and nobody but yourself could tell positively that it did not work all right.

Try it on the toothache, for instance. Next time that old molar begins to growl and you begin to howl, just pause and reflect. You can reflect all right, maybe, and maybe you can't. But if you are not clear beyond the reflective point, which means within the environs of the nut factory stage, just concentrate your mind upon the fact that you haven't toothache, that there isn't, never was and never will be such a thing as toothache and consequently what you seem to feel isn't toothache at all. The whole thing is merely mental and has no business whatever in the affairs of your domestic economy. Of course, since there isn't such a thing as toothache you don't feel any pain. It's impossible; quite impossible. So, since you don't feel any pain, why do you howl and swear.

But, say, reader, a word in your ear. The dentists—what about the dentists. Think how they have been imposing upon us all these years. Think how they have grown rich and waxed fat upon our supposed ills, when there wasn't a thing wrong with us and they knew it. We're in favor of a law compelling them to disgorge. There is one dentist who made us believe he almost killed us once, though of course he didn't hurt us at all. We have always regretted that we didn't know about this mental business then.

This creed of the Church of Applied Thought may all be true but it seems to us that when a fellow reaches that stage he would be "bughouse" so what good would it all do him? There is another aspect of the situation, however, as to applied thoughts. We believe in applied thought without the capitals. Years and years ago, a man began thinking about steam. He thought and thought and he made practical application of his thoughts by means of his hands and the result was the steam engine. Then there was Ben Franklin and Prof. Morse and Edison and Tesla and Marconi—men who thought about it to such good purpose that the present may be called the Electric Age.

The fact of the matter seems to be that the doctrine of applied thought is a pretty good doctrine so long as you don't stop short of the mental picture. The mental picture is like the architect's plans. Suppose you wanted a new house and somebody presented you with the architect's drawings and told you to "move in?" That's the gift of mental thought—the kind Rev. Anna Shaw writes about. So we know not what all men may think, but for our single self, give us the gross, material gifts. We'd rather have a real, sure-enough box of chocolate candy than a mental motor car or an intellectual pass-key to Uncle Sam's strong box. It seems to us that applied thought that isn't applied ought not to be called applied thought.

REVOLUTIONIZING ROAD MAKING.

The fact that this state is spending a large sum of money in road building makes what is being done or proposed for other states of interest to the people of Maryland who desire to have constructed the best public highways possible within the state.

A case in point is that of the State road commissioner of New Jersey who announces that New Jersey will build no more macadamized roads. Exhaustive tests have assured the road builders of the Garden State that the road that has so long stood as the thoroughfare par excellence, the only modern rival to the wonderful roads that radiated from Rome to the frontiers of the ancient world, has had its day and that some other surface better adapted to the needs of latter-day traffic must be adopted as the standard road. The automobile has done the trick. The broken stone road of the canny and ingenious Macadam was the best of roads for the age of the horse-drawn vehicle, but its surface is not compact enough to stand the suction of big pneumatic tires whirling along 40 miles an hour.

So a new road surface must be found. New Jersey thinks the bituminous surface is the thing. The commissioner in his report says that a bituminous road, better than straight macadamized road, can be built for $1.15 to $1.50 per square yard. The State has 85 miles of the new road in service and is building more. In Pennsylvania and in other places where crude oil is easily available the oiled road is found to be a good compromise between the dry macadamized road and the more closely knit bituminous surface. This device may have its drawbacks, but it is a quick and effective way of treating the macadamized roads already built with a view to making them durable and dustless. Somewhere in the East they are trying out a "molasses" surface, made by applying the black, tarry refuse of the sugar mills to a crushed stone basis. It is reported that this road promises well.

Fell Dead at Customer's Door.

J. B. Cormany, formerly of Deer Park, dropped dead in the doorway of a prospective customer, at Barnum, on whom he was calling to sell silverware. While talking to the lady of the house he complained of a pain in his head and suddenly fell and died instantly at her feet. His remains were interred at Davis Thursday.

SANG RUN.

As Blue Jay has flown to some sunny Southern climate or is snowed under, I will try to write.

The farmers here have been making good use of the snow by hauling coal, ties and mine props.

We had a few days of solid winter last week but the new year has brought us quite a change. The ice on the Yough broke Sunday evening and quite a number of people were watching it from the Sang Run bridge. It was a pretty sight.

Our champion hunter, Mr. Milton Lytle, brought home a live gray fox a few days ago.

A sled load of our Sang Run folks attended Christmas services at Johnstown, which were quite a success.

Our school is progressing nicely with Misses Mary and Josephine Browning as teachers.

Mrs. Delia Friend and family spent Christmas with Messrs. Thomas Bishoff and Roy Friend, of Hoyes.

A sled load of our people gave Mr. Paul Hoye a surprise party not long since. They also visited Vern Hoye, and a sled load was at J. Alvin Friend's Saturday evening, calling on Miss Florence Edwards, who has been visiting Mr. Friend's during the holidays.

Mr. Ross Friend is visiting our little village. We are glad to see his smiling face again.

Some very fine ice was harvested in this place last week by Messrs. Dewitt and Thomas.

Miss Florence Kimmel was visiting Miss Dicie Friend Monday. DIXIE.

BITTINGER.

The New Year began with a decided rise in the temperature and for forty-eight hours the snow and ice melted so rapidly that at the beginning of this week the great snow drifts that had been blown together by last week's blizzard have almost disappeared.

Many travelers were over taken by the warm wave and were forced to make their homeward journey in sleighs and sleds dragged through the mud.

Madison Durst, of New Germany, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Patterson Engle last Sunday evening.

Master Ray Engle returned to his home in Baltimore last Monday morning, after a week's visit with his grandparents at this place.

Fred. Snyder accompanied his son Clark to Baltimore on Monday of this week, where the latter will endeavor to secure treatment for defective hearing. W. A. Althers accompanied Mr. Snyder and son to the city where he too expects to consult specialists concerning treatment for his hearing.

F. M. Bittinger has purchased a new Duplex chopper and expects to have same in operation in the near future and promises his patrons better service.

A number of our young people attended the belated Christmas service which was held in the new Lutheran church at Jennings on New Year evening. The service was postponed until that time on account of the storm which prevailed at Christmas.

Lloyd Brenneman who has been employed on a saw mill near Springs, Pa., for some months past, spent last Saturday and Sunday with his parents at this place.

Notice To Delinquent Taxpayers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent taxpayers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before January 1, 1910, I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Sec. 50 of 566 of Acts of General Assembly of Maryland, a copy of which is hereto annexed. Please pay promptly and save cost.

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all the delinquent taxpayers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and by hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the court house door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrears will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before the 1st day of January next following.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

THE DEATH RECORD.

J. A. J. SHULTZ.

The St. Louis Republic of Saturday, December 25th, contained the following:

John A. J. Shultz, president of the Missouri Manufacturers' Association, head of the Shultz Belting Co., founder of St. Mark's English Evangelical Church and leader in civic affairs, died suddenly of apoplexy yesterday at 2:45 p. m., shortly after retiring to his bedroom at his home, No. 4407 Washington boulevard, for an afternoon nap. He was in his seventy-second year.

No one knew that he was suffering until they heard his heavy breathing. He died a few minutes after his daughters entered his room and before a physician could be summoned.

The fatal stroke occurred on the anniversary of a paralytic attack which killed his wife. She was stricken last Christmas eve and did not rally. She died January 6.

A few minutes before the attack which ended his life Mr. Shultz was anticipating a happy Christmas gathering of his five children, who reside in St. Louis.

Mr. Shultz was born in Grantsville, Md., April 27, 1838, and was educated in private schools in that place. After graduation he became associated with his father in the tanning business in 1854, and in 1859 succeed to the ownership of the concern.

Before moving to St. Louis in 1864 he married Miss Mary E. Brown of Grantsville.

Between 1864 and 1872 Mr. Shultz was alone in business, but between 1872 and 1873 he became associated with C. W. Ford, continuing the tanning business until his partner's death in 1877. In that year he organized the Shultz Belting Co., and remained actively in charge of its affairs until his death.

Mr. Shultz was a Democrat in politics.

More than forty years ago, at a gathering in his home, St. Mark's English Evangelical Lutheran Church was organized, and for almost all of that time the Reverend M. Rhodes has been pastor of the church, which is now situated on Bell and Cardinal avenues.

Mr. Shultz was a faithful attendant at almost all of the services and was one of the mainstays of the church.

He was an enthusiastic member of the Missouri Manufacturers' Associatoin and was elected its president. Last November he was chosen to succeed himself in that office.

He was a Scottish Rite Mason, a member of the Royal Arcanum, Legion of Honor, Ancient Order of United Workman, and Knights of Honor. He was one of the organizers of the Sons of the Revolution and was a member of the Merchants' Club.

The wife of Mr. Shultz was a niece of the venerable lawyer, Jacob Brown, of Cumberland.

RICHARD B. DEAR.

At his home, 381 West Sixth street, Superior, Wis., after a severe surgical operation, Mr. Richard B. Dear, aged 60 years. The wife of the deceased was formerly Miss Ridie J. Jamesson, of Bull Run, Va., who was a sister of the late Mrs. William A. Daily, of Oakland, with whom she resided for a number of years.

MRS. HARRY L. MOORE.

Mrs. Harry L. Moore, wife of the superintendent of the White Rock Sand Company, located a few miles west of Oakland, died at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Brown, at Clarion, Pa., Monday morning, after a few days' illness. Mrs. Moore, accompanied by her husband and little child, left Oakland Friday, December 24th, for their former home to spend the holiday season with relatives, expecting to return here within a short time. They were on the train which was wrecked at Weber's station, east of Oakland. Mr. Moore, as well as his wife, had made a number of friends in and about Oakland and the death of the lady is deeply regretted by many.

CLAUDE WILLIAM SHANHOLTZ.

Claude William Shanholtz, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shanholtz, of Thomas, died December 27, 1909, from the effect of burns received by his clothes taking fire from an open stove. He suffered severely until God took him unto Himself. It was hard for the parents to give up their little son, but God knows best and where he is there is no suffering or pain, neither will there be any stain of sin upon him. He has passed to the world from which he will not return, but they who are left can go to him. When they see him God will wipe away all tears from their eyes and comfort them as a father comforts his children. Little Claude was born May 6, 1908, and died December 27, 1909, aged one year, seven months and twenty-one days. He was buried at Deer Park, the funeral service being conducted by the writer. C. W. HUDSON.

MRS. ALMIRA TURNER.

At her home in District No. 3, Wednesday evening, Dec. 22, 1909, Mrs. Almira Turner, wife of Joshua Turner, aged 71 years, 2 months and 12 days. Nine children were born to them of whom one (Emma) is dead. The eight living children are Silas Turner of Milledgeville, Ill.; Mrs. Laura Layman, of Newell, Iowa; Mrs. Jennie Weaver, of Parsons, W. Va.; Mrs. Sarah C. Frost, of Frostburg, Md.; Mrs. Annie Durst, Henry, William and George, of Shade Mills. Mrs. Turner was a true woman in every sense of the word, being a sincere christian, an affectionate wife and mother and a good neighbor. Her greatest care was always for her home and family. The funeral took place the following Monday at 12 o'clock at New Germany, Rev. Charles S. Stover, pastor of St. Paul charge, preached the funeral sermon and spoke in a most impressive manner to the family and friends gathered. Mr. Turner and family have the sincere sympathy of their many friends and neighbors in their sad bereavement.

JOHN J. FAHERTY.

Died at the home of his mother, Mrs. Mary Faherty near Hutton, Monday night, after an illness of two months of diabetes, John J. ("Number") Faherty, aged thirty-eight years. The deceased was born at Hutton where he resided his entire life time and was an employe of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad for a number of years. About three years ago in the capacity of brakeman he fell from his train when it was nearing Grafton and lost his left leg, since which time he was incapacitated from work and remained at his mother's home. He was a member of St. Peter's Catholic church of Oakland from which edifine he was buried this morning after a high mass celebrated by the pastor, Rev. James E. Connell. The deceased was a most exemplary man, jovial, kind and true to his friends. He leaves besides his mother three sister and four brothers, all of whom are grown. His father died about five years ago and three years later his youngest brother met with a gunning accident which resulted in his death.

Married.

LIVENGOOD—BROADWATER.—On December 27th, at Grantsville, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. Frederick Livengood and Miss Mary E. Broadwater were married in the presence of the immediate family by Rev. S. C. Stover, of St. Paul, Pa.

KIRBY—HARVEY.—On Decemcer 24, at Kitzmiller, by Rev. W. W. Sutton, in the presence of a few friends, Mr. John W. Kirby, of Kitzmiller, and Miss Ida Harvey, of Ryan's Glade.

MOORE—WILSON.—On December 26, at Kitzmiller, by Rev. W. W. Sutton, Mr. William J. Moore and Miss Fleda Cedelsia Wilson, daughter of Judge and and Mrs. Daniel Wilson, of near Kitzmiller.

WILSON—ENLOW.—Miss Grace Alta Enlow, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rueben Enlow, of Hoyes, was married December 23, 1909, at noon, to Mr. Robert S. Wilson, of Connellsville, Pa. The bride was beautifully dressed in white while the groom wore the conventional black. The bride's sister, Miss Margaret Enlow, acted as bridesmaid and her uncle, Mr. Adolphus Enlow, was best man. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. W. Hudson, of Mt. Lake Park. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson will make their home near Connellsville, where Mr. Wilson is engaged in dairying.

Under the provisions of the Humphreys amendment to the inter-state commerce law, which became effective on January 1st, 1910, liquor dealers in all parts of the country who have a market for their stuff outside of the state where they are licensed to do business, are experiencing some anxiety. Under the amendment to the law above referred to dealers in Oakland who make shipments to points in West Virginia are compelled to mark each package shipped, stating the contents, the quantity and the name of consignee in full. As it is a United States law Uncle Sam has seen fit to set the fine high enough, which is $5,000, for any violation of the statute. With this law effective and the strong arm of your Uncle Samuel ever ready to pounce down upon those who disregard it there is likely to be but few violations for non-compliance.

Sales Advertised.

By reference to the advertising columns of THE REPUBLICAN a number of pieces of real estate are to be sold at trustees' and mortgagee's sales within the next thirty days. All the properties advertised are exceedingly well located and are desirable farms.

Elopers Frustrated.

Dallas Shaw, 30 years old, and Hazel Hawkins, 15 years old, elopers, were halted at Grafton Friday by Chief of Police Mays while enroute to Oakland, Md., where they intended to be married. They were placed under arrest at the instance of L. B. Hawkins, a brother of the girl, whose objection to the proposed marriage was that she was too young. A charge of abduction against Shaw was dismissed and he was released to go his way alone, while the brother took the girl back to her home in Fairmont.

Miss Grace Loar who spent a week in Grafton with her brothers, returned to her home in Oakland last Saturday, accompanied by Mr. George Loar who was the guest here over Sunday of his mother.

A horse valued at two hundred dollars, the property of Mr. George Helbig, of Oakland, was taken sick one day last week and died within a few hours thereafter. The animal was apparently paralyzed.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Bennett Cunningham, of Pittsburg who were here during the holiday season visiting Mrs. Cunningham's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Sowers, returned to Pittsburg Monday morning last.

Don't miss the performance of "Old Farmer Hopkins" at the opera house, Tuesday, Jan. 11. 1000 square yards of special scenery is used in this production. Prices 50, 35 and 25 cents. Benefit Mountain City Band.

Mr. E. A. Weimer will open a branch shoe store in Keyser, W. Va., which will be in charge of his brother Charles of Mountain Lake Park. Mr. Weimer has secured an excellent location in Keyser and we wish him success.

Messrs. Ralph Thayer, Fred. Townshend, Stanley Mitchell, Edward and Milton Sincell, Harry McComas and Frank Palmer are among those who have returned to their respective schools from Oakland to resume their studies.

Mr. Horace Coddington returned to Oakland Thursday evening from Kansas City, Mo., where he has been employed for the past several months in construction work by a Pittsburg firm. After remaining here a short time visiting relatives he will return to the west.

Dr. W. W. Davis, after spending a week in Baltimore with his family, returned to the Park Monday morning and on Tuesday ice cutting on the lake was resumed, which however, ceased again yesterday when the rain commenced falling. The ice is about eight inches thick, as clear as it can be and unless the warm weather continues quantities of ice will be cut from that already frozen on the lake.

Mr. Edward E. Sollars, Jr., who is taking a medical course at the Maryland Medical College, returned to school Monday after having spent the holidays near Oakland with his parents. He was accompanied to Baltimore by his sister, who will remain in that city for a few weeks.

Verily, the old order passeth. In West Virginia a man is arrested and held under $300 bond for crying "amen" too strenuously during a revival meeting. By this standard of evangelical decorum the shouting and "jumping" that went with the pioneer camp-meeting would doubtless constitute a capital offense.

Dr. Henry W. McComas accompanied Mrs. G. A. Fraley to Baltimore last Sunday night where the latter will receive treatment from a specialist on nerve diseases. Mrs. Fraley has been somewhat of an invalid for the past six months or more, and her friends trust that she may return to her family completely restored to health.

Mr. J. B. Cheuvront, superintendent of the Northern Natural Gas Company, was painfuully injured Monday when the horse he was riding fell on the ice, catching Mr. Cheuvront beneath it. It its struggles to regain its footing the horse trampled on his right hand nearly severing one of his fingers and lacerating another very severely.

The following daughters of Elder and Mrs. Joel Gnagey, who reside a short distance west of town, are visiting their parents during the holidays: Mrs. Sherman Peck, of near Somerset; Mrs. Harvey Speicher, of Accident, and Miss Grace Gnagey, who is engaged in missionary work for the Church of the Brethren in and about Pittsburg.—Meyersdale Republican.

The plant of the Grafton Daily Republican, which has been in operation for little over two years past, was closed down Tuesday by Constable S. A. Shroyer, who levied on the machinery and presses for unpaid accounts in his hands. By the action the Republican ceases as a newspaper. It has not yet been learned just what action will be taken in the matter by the officers of the Republican Publishing Company, but it is understood that the company will be dissolved.—Grafton Sentinel.

The snow which fell last week and the week before to a depth variously estimated at twenty to twenty-four inches, has all disappeared. A thaw set in on Saturday afternoon which continued Sunday and Monday with the result that the waters rose to an alarming degree, flooding the lowlands and for a time threatened to overflow portions of the town. The ice on the Little Yough ran out Monday afternoon doing little or no damage. At Crellin the small bridge spanning Snowy Creek was carried away.

An exchange puts it this way: "We live in a land of high mountains, high taxes, low valleys and low wages, big crooked rivers and big crooked statesmen, big lakes, big pumpkins and big men with pumpkin heads, silver streams that gambol in the mountains and pious politicians that gamble in the night, roaring cataracts and roaring orators, fast trains, fast horses and fast young men, sharp lawyers, sharp financiers and sharp toed shoes, noisy children, fertile plains that lie like a sheet of water, and a thousand newspapers that lie like thunder.

Mr. Joseph Rembold, of Horseshoe Run, Preston county, was in the city yesterday on business and when asked concerning the court house removal from Kingwood to Terra Alta he became enthusiastic over the latter location. When it was suggested, however, that Terra Alta or at least the immediate community thereabout, may possibly become possessions of Maryland, Mr. Rembold remarked that he had no fear of the outcome of the boundary line case and was not as yet ready to become a resident of Garrett county. When he does all who are acquainted with him will extend a hearty welcome for he is an excellent, wide-awake, progressive citizen.

Monday the juveniles got back to the school grind with all too brief a Christmas holiday. The routine of school work will now go on with the jotting of the days as they pass by the little folks. An early Easter gives promise of a few days more of abandonment of books, and before that comes Washington's Birthday as an oasis in the desert of learning. The little folks are fine at keeping tab on holidays and one of their chief practices in calculation is that of counting the days of toil between the times when school days are for a while forgotten. It will not be a great while before the summer vacation, when they will have a long relief. Not only the schools, but the colleges are in harness again, or, to speak with more accurate figure, the machinery of college life is again humming. Not in all cases, however, as many of the colleges give their students until next Monday. With these institutions the entrance upon the new year means really getting down to the chief work of the year.

China Plate for Coal Scuttle

IN his Irish Sketch Book, Thackeray relates an incident, in part, as follows:

"One word more regarding Widow Fagan's home. When Peggy brought in the coals for the drawing-room fire, she carried them—in what do you think?"

" 'In a coal scuttle, to be sure,' says the English reader, down on you as sharp as a needle.

"No, you clever Englishman, it wasn't a coal scuttle.

" 'Then it was the fire shovel,' says the brightest of wits, guessing again.

"No, it wasn't the fire shovel,——

" 'Oh, I have you now; it was the bucket where the potatoes were,' says Snooks.

"Wrong again! Peggy brought up the coals—in a CHINA PLATE."

Users of natural gas will see one bright and shining moral in the tale, standing out from the many that can be deducted. It is the fact that Peggy had to go after the fuel and take something with her in which to bring it, consuming time and labor, not to mention the danger to the CHINA PLATE, nor the chance of breaking her neck going down and coming up the stairs.

There are no such difficulties for users of natural gas to overcome. All they have to do to get a fire is to turn on the stopcock, and the fire is there, low, medium or full force. There are other reasons, however, why the use of natural gas appeals strongly to patrons of The Northern Natural Gas Co.

"Prior to the installation of natural gas, I paid $108 a year for electric light and artificial gas, and $25 for coal, a total of $133. During the year 1908, I paid for natural gas for light and heat $33, thus giving me A NET SAVING OF $100 OVER PREVIOUS YEARS. The cost of installing the equipment to get these results was $33.

——O——

A second letters reads:

"Before natural gas was installed in my store, I paid $107.60 for electric light annually and $60 a year for coal. For the year 1908 the total of my natural gas bills was $55 for both heat and light. MY NET SAVING, CONSEQUENTLY, OVER PREVIOUS YEARS WAS $112.60. The cost of equipping my store, everything included, for natural gas was $100.

——O——

The first letter published above if from a Frostburg, Maryland, merchant tailor, and the second letter is from a store keeper of the same place. But for business reasons the signers do not care to have their names published.

DIRT ROAD PROBLEM

Good Results Can be Obtained Through Drainage System.

STAGNANT WATER AN ENEMY.

It Is One of the Chief Evils of Highways of Earth—Good Road Work of an Illinois Institution—Bad Drainage Expensive.

In the movement for good roads to have practical results it is well to recognize the fact that over large sections of the country rock or gravel roads are, for local and economic reasons, unattainable and even unnecessary. Dirt roads will prevail in the more strictly rural districts for many years to come, possibly until aeroplanes and dirigible balloons take the place of the good old farm wagon.

Therefore it will be well to look around and try to learn from the experience of others how such roads have been made in other countries sufficient for all the needs of rural life, what has been found to be the chief enemy to overcome and how the conquest has been effected.

The one great enemy of dirt roads is stagnant water, which, after heavy rains, and especially in clay soils, is unable to get away. Realizing the solvent properties of water, it is easy to understand how destructive its continued presence is to the solidity of a dirt road and therefore how necessary is its removal.

It is not only the surface water of heavy rains or melting snow that has to be got rid of. The action of what science knows as "capillarity," the constant rising of water from great depths toward the surface, has also to be contended with. That this natural process is always going on is well understood, though its causes and methods of action still form matter for debate. To catch and control this water coming thus and to establish what is known as a water plane some three or four feet below the surface of the ground, where it can do the most good to vegetation, and, as a sort of side issue, the least harm to the roads, has been sought for and found in the modern scientific system of land drainage.

Some time ago the use of brush filled drains was very effective in a section of Illinois where the soil is much of the nature of the Kansas gumbo. An institution which owned a farm of 400 acres, along one side of which ran a road much used for general traffic and which that institution had agreed to keep in order in lieu of paying the road rates, found that a considerable amount of the time of the farm teams was taken up in hauling wagons and buggies of bemired travelers out of the slough which constituted about a quarter of a mile of this road where it ran through a ravine with high old osage orange hedges on each side, which had not been trimmed for twenty years. It had been the custom to administer doses of gravel and of refuse from a coal mine every now and then, but the road incontinently swallowed them up and asked for more. Old country experience suggested drains, and as no pipe or tile was to be obtained the old hedges were cut down to a height of three feet, and ditches eighteen inches wide and from three to four feet deep were dug on each side the road and filled with the brush, well stamped in and topped up with a good depth of soil. The roadbed was nicely rounded up, and in a very short time the ancient morass gained the reputation of being one of the best bits of roads in the neighborhood.

ROLLER WITH "SPUDS" TO COMPACT EARTH ROAD.

The tiles and pipes used for this drainage work are made of a porous clay, unglazed, the water entering them not alone and only, but percolating through their whole length. This can be easily proved by sealing up both ends of one of them and burying it three or four feet in any damp place. In a week or two when dug up it will be found full of water. Of course when a proper and fairly even fall (about two inches to a hundred feet) is given to a drain made of these pipes it will carry the water to any distance desired. The bottom of a drain must be kept level and the pipes laid so carefully together that no earth can get in between any two of them.

Since the general desire seems to be for good roads without prejudice as to what means or materials are used to produce them it would be well for some of our farmer readers to try the effect of a few of these drainpipes where they can be produced, brush where no pipes are to be had, on their own private roads where water is too abundant.

BUILDING A HOME.

How to Secure the Best Effects at a Small Cost.

Persons of limited means who are building houses in the country will find that better effects may be secured with soft wood stained with a thin varnish than with inexpensive and badly finished hard woods. For example, a cheap quality of oak treated in the highly glazed fashion one often sees has nothing to recommend it, while soft woods hold most exquisite shades; also the work of applying the surface finish may be done by an inexperienced woman after a few trials on odd pieces that give one an idea about putting on the liquid evenly. Soft woods, well seasoned, will not warp, and white ones take color best. If a water stain is applied with a wide brush it permits the grain to show through. This may be differently treated when dry if one likes variety. If this finish is carefully rubbed with a dry cloth while wet the wood shows a different color effect than if left to dry without rubbing.

Another tone is secured by rubbing the polish after it is dry and then applying a small quantity of thin furniture oil. A shellac or sizing that may be fixed by the local painter will also bring another tone into the effect.

Green and brown lend themselves to this treatment better than any other shade, and really astonishingly pretty tints may be developed from either when the wood is treated in this manner. The surfaces should be smooth, so that no fancy corners will appear in doors or windows. This is no loss to a person who possesses good taste, for the so called ornaments that are turned out by thousands every day do not add to the room's attractiveness.

In a small and inexpensive house, where the ceilings are low, wooden door handles are prettier than glass or metals. They are more in keeping with a cottage or bungalow plan and are also inexpensive.

Very good raftered ceilings may be made at comparatively small expense if thin beams of rough whitewood are used. These are laid on edge and stained to match the rest of the woodwork. The ceiling that rests on them is narrow boards dovetailed together.

Diamond panes add tremendously to the artistic appearance of a small house in the country and do not greatly increase the cost of building. The lower sash should contain one big pane, not to detract from the effect of the many small ones above.

How to Make Bran Baths.

One of the latest things for the nervous woman who is trying to reduce her fractious nerves is the bran bath just before retiring at night. This not only has a soothing effect, but incidentally softens and whitens the skin. To make the bath buy ordinary bran at a feed store and keep it in a tin box away from mice. Make a bag of cheesecloth from twelve to eighteen inches square and stuff it with bran until about as full as a pine pillow. This bag is put in a bathtub half filled with warm water and squeezed until the water is brown and bubbly. It is not well to remain in the water longer than five or six minutes, and if possible the bather should rest ten minutes and then be massaged. If there is no one to do the massaging one can rub the body thoroughly with a rough towel or knead it with the hands.

How to Make a Novel Photo Holder.

An odd background for photographs is an animal skin such as may be found in the art departments of the large stores.

They cost about a dollar each and come in a variety of colorings. Crosses are cut on the skins with a sharp knife, one cross for each picture. Then the corners are taken back, and there is a blank space in the size of the photograph which is glued to the back of the skin. When all are in place it is hung upon the wall.

How to Relieve Inflamed Eyes.

Every one suffers at some time or other from a slight inflammation or irritation of the eye caused by straining it in some way or by some foreign substance getting into it. In such cases the skin of an egg will afford relief. Take the thin inner skin out of the egg and put it on the top of the lid and place a bandage over it. The inflammation will soon go down, and the pain will leave the eye.

How to Decorate a Fancy Cake.

If you have a large iced cake that you wish to decorate for a fete or a table of a bazaar the quickest and easiest way to fasten the decorations of vines and flowers is to pin them securely with the smallest size invisible hairpins—new ones naturally. These pins hold the trimmings securely in place and if carefully put in do not make unsightly marks on the cake.

How to Stiffen Candles.

As every one knows, warm weather plays havoc with candles, causing them when used on the dinner table or about the room for illumination to take on a decided droop. This can be completely obviated by keeping the candles for several hours before they are to be used in the icebox, where they harden sufficiently to last through an evening.

How to Adjust an Extension Table.

A table that is just the right size for the number of guests to be entertained is much better than one that is too large. Often the addition of a leaf makes the table out of proportion. One ingenious housekeeper has simplified this problem by having one of her leaves split in half for occasions when only slightly more elbow room is desirable.

AT THE JUNCTION.

The Situation That Grew Out of a Long Wait.

By DONALD ALLEN.

[Copyrighted, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

Miss Carrie Mayberry had made a journey of seventy miles up the state to pay a month's visit to her aunt. She had had to change cars at a junction en route, but the conductor had been so courteous and there had been so many passengers changing with her that she had not minded the ten minute wait. In returning after her visit was up things were different. The conductor was a crossgrained old chap who had no good looking daughter of his own, and then the only other passenger to get off and take the G. and B. road was a young man, who proceeded to saunter up and down the platform without giving Miss Carrie a second look.

As if these three or four things were not bad enough, she learned that the train she had to wait for was three hours behind time. She did not learn this from the young man—oh, no! He found out for himself and then kept the information to himself, though he must have known what a hurry she was in to get back home and see pa and ma. He just didn't care whether she got home that day or the week after.

Miss Carrie learned about the lateness of the train from the red headed depot agent. It was a country junction. The depot and his house were the only two buildings there. The only landscape for three miles around was made up of a spotted cow, a swamp, a haystack and a water tank. It took the red headed man just one hour to get ready to come out on the platform and say:

"Your train was three hours late an hour ago; now it's only two hours."

"What—my train late!" was the exclamation. "Why didn't you tell me so when I got off?"

"No good. You'd have had to stay just the same."

The young man saw her look of chagrin, disappointment and anger from the flour barrel on which he was sitting, but did not come forward and take the red headed man by the neck or speak words of consolation to her. She looked at him and mentally called him names—real hard names.

The agent had a home, a wife and two children. The home was quite near, and the right thing would have been to invite Miss Carrie to tarry there. He didn't do the right thing. He didn't care whether she walked the platform or roosted on the haystack.

And that young man—a nice specimen he was! Of course Miss Carrie had made up her mind when she first got off that if he tried to scrape acquaintance she would promptly freeze him out, but that was on the understanding that the G. and S. train was on time. Now it was hours late, and that made all the difference in the world. He ought to know that it did.

Just after the red headed man had told Miss Carrie that she still had two hours to wait she looked at her watch and found that it had stopped. There was no clock in the depot. The young man had a watch, which he frequently consulted in a somewhat ostentatious way, but would the girl humble herself to ask him what time it was? Never in this world! There were some yellow flowers growing alongside the tracks twenty rods away, and he could have jumped down and culled her a bouquet.

The two hours were about up when the red headed man went out to Miss Carrie to say:

"Your train is another two hours late, making five hours in all. Mebbe it will be six, but I'll say five to you."

"And I—I've got to wait two or three hours more?" she almost screeched.

"Unless you want to walk."

The young man was at the far end of the platform inspecting a patent washing machine that had arrived by freight, and yet he must have heard the message and known her feelings. If not, why did he grin? For a minute Miss Carrie looked around for dynamite to blow him off the face of the earth, but then it began to rain, and she had to seek shelter. The young man also sought shelter.

The sitting room was about twelve feet square. It contained a rusty stove and a single bench. Its windows had not been washed since the surrender of Lord Cornwallis, and the only picture on the walls was that of a young lady with long hair and holding in her hand a bottle of the stuff that did the trick. Miss Carrie took one end of the bench and the young man the other. For twenty minutes she gazed at her toes and he at his. Then they gazed at the rusty stove. Then they raised their eyes as high as the long haired girl and kept them there a long time. She could have grown another foot of hair while they looked.

Then the red headed man came in and said he guessed it was going to rain and went out again. As it had been pouring for half an hour his observation struck home. The young man wished to himself that he had such a father-in-law, and Miss Carrie wished to herself that he would come to the Boston weather bureau and run the weather for awhile.

Then the young man consulted his watch. The girl wished it would stop with a bang, and she walked over to one of the windows to see if the cow still stood out on the marsh. He walked over to the other to see if the haystack still stood upright or had a Pisa tower lean to it. Silence for twenty minutes. The two could almost hear more rust gathering on the stove. Then, all of a sudden, Miss Carrie gave way. She had been wanting to cry about something for three weeks past. The something had come. There were tears and sobs.

"What's—what's the matter?" asked the young man.

"You are!" she answered fiercely.

"How am I—I"—

"You know. Here I've been for a whole week, and you haven't—haven't even spoken to me! No, you haven't, and I'm ready to tell you what I think of you!"

"But, you know—you know"— he faltered.

"Of course I know! Was it my business to come up and speak to you first? You knew I was impatient. You knew I was lonesome. You knew I had nowhere to go. And—and you just walked and walked and walked, and you wouldn't even look at me. Where are your manners, sir? Are you a stick of wood or a young man?"

"But I flirted with a girl once, and she froze me," lamely protested the young man.

"But am I that girl? Are all girls alike? Did that girl have to wait five or six weeks at an old junction? I—I don't want to flirt. I want to talk—just talk. I want to know when that old train is coming, when it's going to stop raining, what time it is, if the curl has come out of my hair in this dampness and lots and lots more. Why, if you hadn't been a chump—I mean if you had been a talker—we might have had a real long visit, and I could have told you all about my Aunt Sarah."

It wasn't too late to make amends. The young man hitched nearer and began to talk, and half an hour later, when the red headed man came in to say that the train had concluded to be two additional hours late, the couple gave him no attention, and he went to the house and said to his wife:

"Well, they've took to each other at last, and I just heard him ask her if she would correspond. If it ain't a marriage within a year, then I'll dye my hair and grow chin whiskers."

Reached the Limit.

An old sailor noticed something suspicious about a sack of meal that was being swung by a crane at Port Nolloth on to his hip. The sailor told the captain there seemed to be something moving in that particular sack, and the captain said:

"Aha, a stowaway, I guess! Keep it till the last. Then sling it to the yard and let it hang there."

The sailor kept the sack till the last. Then he swung it up over the hold, and as the winchman was going to lower it he shouted:

"No, no! Don't lower down! Let her hang!"

And there the sack hung in midair. The ship put out to sea. The sack swung this way and that with the rolling of the waves. Now it spun like a top. Now it bumped against the mast. And for nearly three hours this swaying and banging, this bumping and spinning, went on, but never a sound came from the sack.

Finally the captain winked and shouted:

"That sack's damp. Drop it overboard."

There was a muffled aerial shriek, and the sailor lowered the sack with a great splash into the sea; then he hauled it up again at once.

"Lemme out! Lemme out!" spluttered a terrified voice, and the sack was opened, and out rolled a gigantic Kaffir, his superb endurance at last broken.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

Liberty Versus Greens.

A colored man from Georgia had lived in Washington but a few days when he was arrested for some slight violation of the city ordinances. Upon hearing that the negro was in jail the secretary of the colored Y. M. C. A. secured the services of a minister to go with him and sign the prisoner's bail bond. They reached the jail shortly before noon and told the negro the object of their visit. In response to the proffered kindness he said:

"Mistah Johnsing, I sho is glad you all is gwine tah git me out, but I wants you all to fix it so I can't git out tell late dis ebenin'."

Of course the two Samaritans were somewhat taken aback by the unusual request. But a moment later they lost their breath when in answer to the secretary's question the Georgia negro replied in a whisper:

"Well, sah, dey's a-gittin' dinnah ready, an' dey's cookin' greens, an' I sho would like to git some o' dem greens befo' I leabes dis place!"—Lippincott's.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson II.—First Quarter, For Jan. 9, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. iii, 13, to iv, 11—Memory Verses, iv, 10, 11—Golden Text, Heb. ii, 18—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

While the people were in expectation or suspense and men were reasoning in their hearts as to whether John was the Christ or not, Jesus, being about thirty years of age, came to John to Jordan to be baptized of him (Luke iii, 15, 23). The Jews had sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to John to ask him if he was the Christ or Elijah or that prophet, but John replied that he was neither the one nor the other, but only the voice of one crying in the wilderness, "Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Isaiah" (John i, 19, 23). Then after His baptism John pointed Him out as the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world and whom men are to follow, and men hearing John followed Jesus. We are not good witnesses unless those who see and hear us follow Jesus because of us. According to our lesson, John at first refused to baptize Jesus, feeling his own unworthiness, but Jesus said, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness" (verse 15). Remembering the first recorded utterance of Jesus, "I must be about my Father's business" (Luke ii, 49), how suggestive is this second utterance, "Suffer it to be so now." As believers in Him and therefore His representatives here we should always be about His business, and in reference to all that He appoints us, however unnecessary and uncalled for many things may seem to us, we should remember His words, "Suffer it to be so now." Whatever God appoints is right and best, and we manifest His high righteousness by cheerful submission to all that is right in His sight. Thus we shall be approved of Him in some sense as Jesus was. When Jesus began thus publicly to identify Himself with sinners, for those whom John baptized confessed their sins (verse 6), but Jesus had no sins to confess, the heavens were opened and the Father testified to His delight in His Son, and the Spirit came as a dove and abode upon Him. Thus we see the Father, Son and Holy Spirit in this great event. It seems to me that this testimony from the Father covers all the previous life at Nazareth, while the testimony at the transfiguration (xvii, 5) covers all His public life. He could truly say of Himself in relation to His Father, "I do always those things that please Him" (John viii, 29). We can never be satisfied with ourselves while we stay in these mortal bodies, but we can walk with God in fellowship if we are always well pleased with His Son Jesus Christ. In the seven chapters in which we find the phrase "Heaven opened" (Ezek i; Matt. iii; John i, Acts vii and x, Rev. iv and xix) we have in each a vision of Christ. He is always the center of adoration by the hosts in heaven and the redeemed on the earth. If Jesus, who must have been, like John, filled with the Spirit from His birth (Luke i, 15), needed a special filling or anointing for His public ministry is it any wonder that so few have any public ministry unto Him when so few seem to know or care anything about a special anointing of the Spirit? His desire is for many to stand before Him, to serve Him, to minister unto Him (II Chron. xxix, 11), but He has to say to the many: "I would, but ye would not;" "Ye will not come unto me." The same devil who blinded and led astray Adam and Eve is still blinding the minds of the lost to the light of the glorious gospel and the minds of the saved ones to the light of the glory of God and His kingdom. To submit to God means to resist the devil (Jas. iv, 7; I Pet. v, 8, 9), and until we have learned something of his devices and how to resist and overcome him we are not qualified for service as witnesses unto Christ. God did all He could for the comfort and happiness of Adam and Eve, but the devil told them that he would do better for them and make them like God. The devil's lie won and has been winning the crowd ever since by his suggestions on the same three lines. Something for the body, something for the mind and the power to lord it over others seem to cover the most of his devices—good for food, pleasant to the eyes, a tree to be desired to make one wise (Gen. iii, 6). Bread for the body, the esteem of men, the world and its glory. The first may include all gratifications of the body, the second all that might give us praise from men and the third every phase of dominion over others. Whatever you desire get it; do or be something wonderful in the eyes of man; get power over men by gold or politics or in any way the devil may suggest. How does our Lord reply? Things for the body are not important in comparison with the life and health of the soul, the food of which is the word of God. To desire greatness in the eyes of others is called tempting the Lord our God. To bow down to the devil for the sake of worldly advantage is forbidden by "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and Him only shalt thou serve." Would we live in fellowship with God and in the comfort of the ministry of the angels it must be by rejoicing in the Lord our righteousness and in a hunger for a greater manifestation of it in us; by seeking to magnify His name, not ours.

A Favorite.

The fellow with a smiling face
Finds friends at every turn.
He doesn't have to search the streets
Nor for companions yearn.
For people like to shake his hand
And look into his eye
And catch the twinkle lurking there
For every passerby.

The good right hand of fellowship
Extended is to him
Or be it in the market place
Or in the social swim.
For in the radiance of the face
Of this same smiling one
The people like to sit and bask
As flies bask in the sun.

The children greet him on the street,
For he is just their style.
They stop their play when he comes round
And throw back smile for smile,
And even babies in their cabs
Look up and say, "Ah, goo!"
And he looks down at them and smiles
And says, "The same to you."

He harvests pleasures as he goes,
His friends his praises sing,
And as for foes—well, on the square,
He hasn't such a thing.
The world looks very bright to him,

And best of all, as you'll observe,
It doesn't cost a cent.

MATRIMONIAL CHAIR IN THE EDITOR'S OFFICE

Seven Assistant Editors Have Fallen Victims to Cupid's Wiles.

At Winsted, Conn., Lydia Todd s married. Everybody knew she vould be, as soon as she got a job s assistant editor on the Thomas- on Weekly Express, Frank Eth- ridge, editor and publisher.

There are only three chairs in he sanctum of the Weekly Ex- ss—the editor's chair, the chair hat guests sit in when they come n to ask the editor if he would ot rather have cabbage instead of eal money for last year's sub- criptions, and the magic matri- nonial chair.

Etheridge cannot keep an as- istant editor because of the spell hat chair throws over them. even occupants of it have married within three years. It is an arm- hair with arms that fit close round the waist and has a nice ack cushion with a picture of a an handing flowers over a wall a girl.

The editor-in-chief did not sus- ect the chair at first. He thought hat his troubles were due to the ct that the assistant editor al- ays had to read the spring poetry nd the verses about love that ere contributed by Thomaston oets.

But one week the editor broke is own chair by falling on the ack of it suddenly when an old ubscriber came in to pay for three ears in advance. As there was vacancy in the assistant editor- hip due to a recent marriage, theridge took the vacant chair hile his own was being re- aired. He had not sat in it three ays until he went and got mar- ed himself. Then he knew hat the trouble was and wrote a iece for his own paper about the hair.

Ever since the story of the hair became known many maids Thomaston have been standing line waiting for the next va- ancy.

Miss Todd, the latest assistant ditor, went to New York on hristmas Day and was married n the "Little Church Around the Corner" to William B. St. John, a foreman in the cloak factory in Thomaston.

What Is a Home.

What is home for? Peace.
What do many of us make it?
A place for relating trials.
A place for displaying tempers.
A place for being disagreeable.
A place for dispute.
A place for haste.
A place for fault-finding.
A place for fretting and worrying.
A place for tears.
A place for snarls.
A place for growling.
A place for swearing.
A place for meanness, such as one but a home companion would rgive; for ugliness such as none ould inflict upon a stranger.
Place opposite this: Home, a ace for rest, for cheer, for warmth, r comfort, forforbearance; a place r peace, repose; a place where e soul may extend toward a bler, better life; Home!
The word itself comes from the nskrit "ksena," meaning abode, ace of rest, security.

Blighting Infleence of Monoply.

In an address in New York on Tuesday last Mr. Pinchot, Chief Forester of the United States, discussed a new and striking aspect of the problem of conserving the natural resources of the nation. The American people, he said, have made up their minds that these resources must be conserved. The question of vital importance is, to whose benefit shall the conservation of the coal lands, the forests and the water conduce—to the welfare of the nation or to the advantage and profit of monopolists? The issue, in Mr. Pinchot's view, is sharply drawn between special and privileged and self-seeking interests on one side and the rights of the masses on the other, "between government by men for human welfare and government by money for profit."

Mr. Pinchot maintains that monopoly leads inevitable to a lowering of moral standards, and that the ultimate result is to increase the number of "corner loafers" and to promote the traffic of the "white slave" traders. This is putting the case with almost startling candor. Yet the argument of the Chief Forester is, on the whole, sound and worthy of thoughtful consideration. When, as he says, monopolies obtain control of the sources of production, opportunities for employment are restricted and vast numbers of men and women find it increasingly difficult to make a fair living. Desperation is followed by demoralization and ultimately by degradation in the case of many unfortunate persons. It is undeniable that the country has made phenominal progress in a material way, but despite and not on account of the growth of monopolies; and it has had to pay the price—a terrible one—in the undermining of morals and in the wreck of character which can be traced directly to the results of monopoly.

Mr. Pinchot's warning is an impressive one. It concerns an evil which is the prolific source of evils. It does not make the situation less intolerable to reflect that some of the monopolists who have acquired immense riches through special privilege are in their private lives, model citizens, and in their personal transactions conform to the accepted code of morals. But if such men, in the exercise of the advantages which they possess through monopolies, are absolutely indifferent to the welfare of the masses, if they extort undue profits from the poor, if they perpetuate their special privileges through political corruption and by debauching legislative bodies, they are, however blameless in private life, public enemies. These men might be shocked to hear that they are responsible in any way or to any degree for the moral degradation of the victims of monopoly. But this, in effect, is Mr. Pinchot's indictment.

In the social and moral, as well as in the economic sense, monopoly of the sources of production and of the necessaries of life has inflicted grievous injury upon the people of the United States. WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

TWO AND A GUIDEBOOK.

The Combination Worked Wonders In Two Days.

By M. MACLEAN HELLIWELL.

How it did rain! Barbara pressed her woebegone face against the windowpane and strained her eyes in a vain endeavor to catch a glimpse of the gleaming white of the distant monument. She had been in the beautiful capital of her country nearly twenty hours, and she had seen nothing—absolutely nothing—of it. Nearly twenty hours of a few precious days of her visit gone in impotent, heartbreaking waiting for Jupiter Pluvius to exhaust himself and retire in favor of old Sol.

As a fresh gust of wind drove a volley of raindrops in a yet fiercer onslaught against the glass and dashed them in scurrying streams down the dripping asphalt the girl's head drooped despairingly, and she sighed.

The young man who for some time had been watching her sympathetically over his book now threw it aside and stepped to the other window.

"What a day!" he said as the ivy, clinging desperately to the wall, was tossed hither and thither by the boisterous wind.

The girl's face brightened, and she turned to him impetuously.

"Oh, thank goodness you have spoken at last! I was going to start the conversational ball myself. I simply couldn't stand the silence any longer. Do you know I have not uttered one word this morning since I ordered my breakfast. It's an unprecedented record, but the strain has been awful." She dimpled roguishly, and a faint flush rose in her cheek. He might think her very bold, this handsome young stranger, but she really could not help it. The limit of her silent endurance had been reached. She must speak or—perish.

But the idea of boldness never entered the young man's head. He was thinking how very pretty she was, how soft and curly her hair, how piquant her dimpled smile and how becoming the little tinge of pink in her round cheek. He laughed in comprehending sympathy.

"Why, I wanted to speak to you long ago, but didn't like to venture. Isn't it the very dickens of a day? Who could go sightseeing in this?" as a fresh fury rattled the windows.

The girl's face fell again.

"Who, indeed?" she echoed disconsolately. "Think of coaxing all winter for just three days of Washington and having the whole of one of them like this!"

"It is rather rough," said the young man. "I'm in precisely the same box myself—that is, for coaxing read managing. But it only increases one's agony to look at it. Won't you sit down?"

He turned a rocking chair with its back to the window, and as Barbara dropped into it he threw himself into the sofa corner opposite.

"Is this your first visit to Washington?" he asked.

"My very first. Father comes here on business every spring, but he hates to be bothered, and I could never persuade him to bring me before. He poked his head into my room before I was up this morning to say that he would probably not see me again today as he had oceans of business to do and an official dinner tonight, and he enjoined me most emphatically not to think of going out as long as it rained. I have written letters to every one I can think of, and if it doesn't clear after luncheon I'll go to bed."

The young man laughed and looked at his watch.

"Why, it's a quarter to 2," he said. "Suppose we have luncheon now, if you will honor me, and perhaps the outlook will be brighter by the time we have finished."

The girl rose with alacrity.

"I'm ravenous," she declared, "but I simply could not face that great dining room again all by myself. I positively cannot swallow unless I have some one to talk to while I'm eating. My breakfast this morning was martyrdom."

That luncheon was the jolliest meal Barbara had ever eaten and, she maintains, the most delicious. When it was over and they adjourned to the stately drawing room her companion left her for a minute. When he returned he brought with him a couple of books and a huge bunch of violets.

"These," he explained when Barbara had arranged the flowers upon her person to her satisfaction, "are guidebooks—one to Washington in general, the other to the Congressional library in particular. As the rain god is still in command of affairs, suppose we just 'do' the capital and library right here where we are. It's really, when you think of it, much the more satisfactory way. If we went to the actual buildings we'd have to walk our feet off on the hard floors. We'd have to lose our breath climbing innumerable stairs or else have our brains addled by being jerked up and down in elevators. We'd dislocate our necks tilting our heads back to see the pictures on the ceilings. And at the end of the day we'd probably come back to the hotel cross, tired and dissatisfied, having doubtless forgotten to look at the one thing above all others we particularly wanted to see. Now, with these valuable little books we can defy the elements and study at our ease every detail of the buildings—exteriorly and interiorly—but we can absorb priceless knowledge about them that all the gazing at the originals could never tell us. What do you say, shall we begin with the library?"

Barbara's eyes sparkled. "It's the inspiration of a genius!" she cried ecstatically. "Yes, let us begin with the library by all means, and you may read its history aloud before we look at the pictures."

By dinner time they knew more about the capitol and the wonderful Congressional library than many a native Washingtonian, and they had also learned the height of Washington's monument and all the details in connection with its construction.

After they had dined they repaired to the palm room, where, to the accompaniment of sweet music, each unfolded to the other various chapters of personal history, which, strange to say, they found even more interesting than the history of their country.

Barbara's sympathetic attention and undisguised interest encouraged her companion to discourse at length upon his occupation, prospects, hopes and ambitions, a compliment she returned in full, being inspired to confidence by the delightful discovery that her new acquaintance was actually the Arthur Howard of whom "Cousin Tom" was always talking, who had been his Fidus Achates at Yale and his comrade in arms in Cuba.

The precious hours flew only too quickly now. When at last Barbara felt compelled to say good night she tripped blithely to bed, happy in the knowledge that she had another whole day in Washington and that, no matter how busy her father might be, she would not have to spend it alone.

Not even the undeniable fact that it was still raining when Barbara pulled up her window blinds the next morning could dampen her buoyant spirits.

By a strange chance Mr. Howard reached the dining room door just as Barbara and her father appeared, and papa having cordially greeted "the Mr. Howard who nursed Cousin Tom through that dreadful fever in Cuba," the three went in to breakfast together.

"I'm sorry, little girl, to have your visit turn out so dull," said Barbara's father as they were leaving the dining room, "but there's a meeting of directors this morning, and I'll have to be with Bryce up to train time this afternoon, so I'm afraid I can't show you around today any more than I did yesterday."

"If you and Miss Warren will permit me," cried Howard eagerly, "I shall be only too delighted to be her cicerone. Mine is purely a sightseeing visit."

"Capital!" answered Mr. Warren. "I have a great respect for Tom's judgment, and I leave my daughter in your care with perfect confidence. Only don't take her out if it rains hard." And, accepting a hasty kiss from Barbara, the busy man hurried away.

"Suppose," suggested Howard as they wandered into the drawing room, "that we read up the Smithsonian institution and the Corcoran Art gallery this morning. Then if it clears we can go out right after luncheon and drive around the city. By that means we can at least see the outside of all the places of interest, which will be better than vainly attempting to see the inside of only one."

Mr. Warren reached the door of his hotel that evening in a heavy downpour just as a closed carriage drove up, from which he was amazed to see his daughter and her escort emerge.

In spite of the rain and the thick, gloomy fog that enveloped everything Barbara's cheeks were flushed with happiness, her eyes gloriously bright.

"You've never been sightseeing in this weather!" cried Mr. Warren as they followed him in. "Are you both crazy? Where have you been?"

The young man stepped forward eagerly, but Barbara forestalled him. Laying her hand on her father's arm, she said coaxingly:

"No, dear, we're not crazy; just engaged, and we've seen the outside of everything, and"—

"And next year, sir, with your permission," broke in Howard, "we'll come back together, Barbara and I, and see the inside of them all."

"Engaged! Seen everything!" gasped the astonished old gentleman. "All inside of twenty-four hours!"

Barbara laughed.

"Two people and a guidebook can do a good deal in two days—if they understand how to study the guidebook!" she declared. And her father was forced to believe that they could.

Suicide's Favorite Days.

Curious official statistics are published in Berlin indicating the favorite seasons for committing suicide in Prussia. May, June and July are the "popular" months. Men prefer July, while women favor May. The fewest suicides take place in February. Thirty per cent of the male and 28 per cent of the female suicides occur in the springtime and the next most in the summer, autumn and winter in the order named.

Berlin registers an average of twenty suicides weekly in June. Youthful persons prefer the nighttime for suicide, while adults oftener choose the morning or afternoon. The fewest suicides occur immediately after sunset. Monday, Tuesday and Thursday are the "favorite" days. The fact that most suicides occur on Monday and Tuesday is attributed to the reaction after too joyful Sundays. Friday shows the fewest suicides, because people on the brink of despair often recover their courage in anticipation of the payment of weekly wages next day. The smallest number of suicides take place on Saturday (pay day) and Sunday, although the number of women who take their own lives on the Sabbath is relatively high. This is attributed to the fact that women who live alone feel their loneliness especially on Sundays. —Boston Transcript.

GRANGE BUSINESS.

Fire Insurance an Important Consideraton.

Thousands of Dollars' Worth of Farm Property Insured In Grange Mutual Companies at Small Cost—Some Interesting Facts.

The reports from the various counties at the state grange meeting show that many granges in New York are doing considerable in a business way for the benefit of their members, particularly in insurance. We glean the following facts from the reports of the delegates which appear in the published proceedings recently issued:

The Westchester-Putnam Fire Relief association carries over $450,000 in insurance.

Cortland County Fire Relief association has 1,257 policies in force, carrying $2,734,275.

The Patrons' Fire Insurance company of Cayuga county carries nearly $3,000,000 insurance.

Clinton and Essex Patrons' Insurance company reports over 1,600 policies, carrying $3,075,000 in insurance.

The Patrons' Fire Relief association of Tompkins county carries nearly $3,000,000 and is working to the satisfaction of its patrons.

The Patrons' Fire Insurance company of Otsego county carries $410,000 in risks at about half the cost of the old line companies.

St. Lawrence county has a membership of over 5,500 in thirty-five granges. Their fire relief association carries $10,000,000 of insurance.

Genesee County Patrons' Relief association is carrying over 1,700 policies, representing $3,900,000. The assessment last year was $1 on the thousand.

Broome county has two grange stores, doing a business of $15,000 to $20,000 a year. Binghamton grange, in that county, did a $15,000 business in coal, feed and grass seed last year.

In Clinton county the Patrons' Fire Insurance company carries risks of over $3,000,000, and the cost of insurance is about $2.75 per thousand, of which only 50 cents per thousand was for expenses.

In Columbia county one grange (Germantown) did a purchasing business of over $15,000 last year. The Columbia and Dutchess Insurance company had 2,700 policies in force Jan. 1, carrying $6,705,750 of insurance.

Out of the thirty-three granges in Steuben county ten own their own grange halls. The Patrons' Fire Insurance company, including also Livingston, carries $3,800,000, and the rate last year was $1.81 per thousand.

The Wayne County Fire Relief association is a strong feature of the Order in that county. The company now carries $8,253,437 in insurance in that county. The Pomona grange of Wayne has 800 members. Palmyra grange of that county has a $16,000 grange building.

The largest fire insurance association in the state is that of Jefferson county, which also does a business in Lewis county. On Jan. 1 it reported risks amounting to $14,108,992, of which over $10,000,000 is in Jefferson county. The assessment is only about $1 per thousand per year.

Monroe county, with a membership of 844 in its Pomona and 4,840 members in the county in subordinate granges, reports insurance business amounting to $7,908,316 on 3,325 policies. The losses last year were very large, being $16,248. The greatest trouble was the small boy with the match.

In Orange county the Ulster and Orange County Fire Relief association carries $4,000,000 insurance. In the seven years of its existence only one assessment of $1 per thousand has been necessary. The subordinate granges in Orange county own real estate assessed at $34,000 and did a commercial business of over $300,000 the past year.

Co-operation For Rural Improvement.

A personal letter to the writer from J. Horace McFarland, president of the American Civic association, with headquarters at Harrisburg, Pa., conveys the information that this association will be glad to co-operate with the grange on matters pertaining to rural improvement. The association has a section on rural improvement, headed by Dean Davenport of the University of Illinois. Mr. McFarland says, "There are many ways in which suggestions going through the grange would be effective, and the association will be glad to co-operate with you heartily and in detailed effort."

Grange Trophy Cup.

At the last session of the Ohio state grange a resolution was adopted instructing the executive committee to offer a trophy cup to the grange making the best exhibit of corn at the annual meeting of the Ohio Corn Improvement association, the award to be made according to rules of the association.

State Master Laylin of Ohio had several broken ribs and many bruises from a runaway accident a few weeks ago.

Mayfield (O.) grange has connected its grange hall with the homes of most of its 237 members.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

The Foundered Horse.

One attack of laminitis always predisposes to a subsequent attack, and with horses that have been foundered great care should be taken that they are not overdriven or subjected to inordinate concussion. No matter how slight the attack, a horse that has suffered from laminitis is always to be considered unsound.

In acute laminitis there are certain systematic symptoms of a febrile character which assist materially to a diagnosis. The respiration is quickened, the pulse is full, strong and frequent, and there is often profuse perspiration. The feet are hot, and there may be a slight depression or sinking above the coronet. In a few hours the coronets become full, the puffiness often extending as high as the fetlock, and the arteries of the pastern throb in a manner easily felt on handling. When the fore feet only are affected the animal stands with them well in front of him, and, resting upon the heels, the hind feet are placed very much forward so as to take as much weight off the fore ones as possible. It is a difficult matter to get the horse to allow one foot to be lifted because of the great pain caused when increased weight is put on the opposite foot. He is very much disinclined to move, and when he is made to he goes stiffly and on the heels. The weight is never brought forward over the toes on account of the great pain due to the compression of the inflamed laminae and sensitive structures at the front part of the hoof. The action is always cramped, and the want of freedom of movement gives rise to the impression among inexperienced observers that the muscles of the shoulder and chest are implicated, and this, along with the distressed breathing, promotes the idea that the animal is suffering from inflammation or congestion of the lungs; hence the term "chest founder," a purely conjectural term, the condition which it is supposed to describe having no existence in fact.—S. S. Cameron in American Cultivator.

Care of Breeding Hogs.

In raising hogs to be used as breeders the object is strength rather than fat. They are not to go to market at six to ten months of age, but to grow on to maturity. They should be pushed for rapid growth, but must be fed for a growth of frame and bone—not fattened on corn, but expanded by a feed rich in protein. At six, eight or ten months of age they should show more length of body and more scale than the market hogs and be smooth and well covered, but not so fat as for market.

This can be very easily done by feeding a mixed grain ration with 10 per cent of tankage or 10 per cent of oil-meal. Use corn, barley and oats ground together, mixed thickly with water and fed at once while sweet. It is much better to mix three pounds of milk to one of grain. If one has no milk the next best feed is 10 per cent of tankage. If one has the corn and does not want to buy the mill feeds he can use 80 per cent of corn and 20 per cent of tankage and have a well balanced ration.—A. J. Lovejoy Before Illinois Farmers' Institute.

Keeping the Teeth Right.

A bulletin of the Colorado experiment station says: Remember that the horse's food is not cooked, and therefore his teeth must be in good condition to properly masticate his food. It will well pay every farmer to examine the teeth of all his horses at least twice a year.

It is worse than throwing feed away to give it to horses that can neither masticate nor digest it. Poor feed and bad teeth are responsible for three-fourths of all the colics and other digestive disorders of the horse. Horses are worth money. It pays to keep these things in mind.

The Disk Plow.

The disk plow is adapted to soil which becomes at times very hard, or what is known as baking land. This soil breaks up in large lumps and interferes with the operation of the moldboard plow. It is found quite generally throughout the south and west. Another soil which may be plowed to good advantage with the disk plow is the sticky gumbo soils, in which a moldboard plow will outscore. In this case the scrapers may be set so as to keep the disks clean. The disk plow will not work at all in tough soil. It is only adapted to stubble plowing.—Country Gentleman.

Lice on Horses.

A horse will soon get rid of lice if turned on grass and kept away from the infested stable, says the Rural New Yorker. When that has been done cleanse the stable, fumigate, disinfect and whitewash it and afterward keep it clean, light and perfectly ventilated. The horse may be aided in getting rid of his pests by clipping him and washing him twice a week with a 1-50 solution of coal tar dip to which flowers of sulphur have been freely added.

Dust Baths For Hens.

Have boxes of fine earth in the feed room for the hens to dust in. One quart of sifted ashes from hard wood mixed in the earth is excellent. Lay in a supply of fine, dry earth to last throughout the winter. The earth should be kept dry.

Hens in good health having access to the dust bath will usually keep free from lice. The house should be swept clean every morning.

THE PEPPER TREE.

More Adaptable Than Any Other For Street and Roadside.

Each successive year that we experiment with street and roadside trees brings a growing and well merited appreciation of the pepper tree. For all situations, all soils, general conditions and variety of treatment there is none to compare with this our finest of trees. Outside of the polelike eucalypts we have none that make a finer or more shapely growth. In fact, its shapely growth is not equaled in our long list of street or garden trees, and the pleasing green is of the brightest shade. We may have trees that surpass in some points, but when all are considered it will be found that the pepper averages higher than any other.

In its general adaptability it occupies a similar position to the maples of the Mississippi valley, the elms of New England and the oaks of the "sunny south." One who has visited these sections will have noted how these sorts predominate in the different great natural divisions of our country. In some cities, notably Washington, may be found the trees of all sections save southern California, and could they grow the pepper tree it is safe to say it would be found on more than one-half the streets of our national capital. It has now been grown in all parts of the west where the climate will allow.

One is always sure of the pepper, for few ever die at any stage, and of all our trees it is the most drought resistant. If sown from seeds nearly every seed will grow, and the resultant seedlings are no more care than they are later in life. They may be successfully transplanted at any age or at any time of the year. Like all other sorts, it will best develop with some care for the first few years, and for at least three years it should be carefully pruned, irrigated and the soil kept loosened about the trunk. When planting the holes should be dug both wide and deep, and no raised sidewalks or broken curbs will result. Properly planted, pruned and cared for, every pepper tree will become a thing of beauty. It is not natural for the pepper to be gnarly and ill shaped.

This tree, like our native live oak, should be allowed to head low for the first few years and the branches shortened in until the stem grows sufficiently stout to support a higher head, when the lower ones should be removed and in this way cleared below annually until the desired height above the ground has been reached. If trees be planted fifty feet apart and the treatment given for the first few years as herein outlined no fear need be entertained for the ultimate growth, as seldom does one demand care with years of age except lower hanging limbs removed to clear the way for driver and pedestrian. The amount of care and the attendant expense are no greater than for other trees, and some require more treatment. It is usual to plant peppers in the crudest manner possible and leave them to shift for themselves. In spite of this neglect, coupled with some abuse, the pepper usually develops into a fine tree. With intelligent care it easily takes first rank for every purpose where perpetual shade with a maximum of beauty is desired.—Los Angeles Times.

No Standing Still.

Aggressive merchants everywhere are alive to the fact that no store can grow in favor if instead of constantly seeking progress it stands still and relies upon the reputation it has acquired.

Some merchants, however, seem to be of the opinion that being so well known, having so good a standing in the community, people are practically obliged to come to them. Others appear to think that if every now and then they offer "stupendous values" and give the public sensational bargains they can create so great and lasting an impression that people will overlook their shortcomings, such as inattentive or discourteous service, unreliable merchandise, etc., and notwithstanding that such shortcomings seem to be increasing instead of decreasing will give them the bulk of their trade. Such merchants evidently forget the well known axiom that most people have short memories for favors extended to them.

Every merchant if he wishes his business to continue growing must constantly make whatever improvements and innovations are needed for the comfort and convenience of his customers and must from time to time introduce such features as are calculated to make his store more attractive. He will not be wrong if he regards such methods as a form of insurance just as necessary to his peace of mind and progress as other means of protection which long ago came to be regarded as essential.

Health and Cleanliness.

If every individual in a town appreciated the fact that he is to some extent responsible for the condition of the public health and in order to keep his conscience clear would keep his own back yard, cellar, alley and street in good condition, the reports of the commissioner of health would show the result of the multiplied effort in a still greater decrease in the death rate. Disregard of the laws of health arises not so much from antagonistic views in relation to proper sanitary measures as from the tendency to undervalue the homely little facts and little opportunities of everyday life.

Prizes For Artistic Dwellings.

To encourage the beautifying of the city the municipality of Paris awards three gold medals annually to the designers of the most artistic dwellings. The owners of these homes are relieved of half their annual taxes.

FAMOUS HAGERSTOWN ALMANAC

Has Been Textbook for Farmers for Over a Century.

At this time of the year every farmer in Fayette county is getting an almanac for his home for reference all through the coming year and this gives rise to a few thoughts on the Hagerstown Almanac, which has enjoyed such an immense popularity in this part of the country for upwards of a century.

Many a grandfather of today can remember when as a boy he sat by the old Yule log and read the Hagerstown Almanac as one of the important volumes of his home. For 113 years it has been read in Pennsylvania, its weather predictions studied and its advice carefully considered. One Uniontown man says his great-grandfather bought this almanac and the three succeeding generations have always bought and the copies of years ago have been handed down in the family.

In the early days when books were scarce many families used the Hagerstown Almanac as a text book to teach the children to read. Even Poor Richard's Almanac, published by Benjamin Franklin, did not attain the popularity in this section that was enjoyed by the Hagerstown Almanac, which is now in appearance very much the same that it was as far back as the oldest inhabitant can remember.

Every farmer still wants an almanac, but it is not the household text book now that it was 15 years ago. But the Hagerstown Almanac still has a wonderful hold upon the people and it is on sale at all the country cross roads stores in the agricultural districts of Pennsylvania as well as in larger towns and cities.

Despite the fact that other almanacs are given away the Hagerstown Almanac is still in demand and maintains its standard price of 10c. Druggist Frank Huston has been selling this book for 42 years and has a number of customers who have been buying this almanac from him for upwards of a quarter of a century. He now orders five gross, or 720, each year for his Uniontown and Connellsville stores.

In the winter season when the farmers are kept in the house many of them study the almanacs carefully. The housewives use the almanac as a diary and record in it when they set their hen, when the calf is born, when they plant the early vegetables, and keep in it a general record of doings about the farm.

The country people by the use of their almanacs doubtless become better informed than their city cousins on astronomical data and weather conditions. These books give conjectures on the weather, aspects of the planets, chronological cycles, movable festivals, household recipes and a conjecture of useful and entertaining matters, anecdotes, etc., and many farmers swear by their almanacs and follow the signs given in them.

Each day in the year is governed by some sign. The sign of the twins is a good time to plant cucumbers or other vegetables, as it indicates there will be plenty of them.

The sign of the flower girl is a good time to plant posies, because there will be plenty of bloom. However if corn or grain is planted in this sign it will go into bloom rather than into fruition and ripening.

The sign of the quarter moon with the semi-circle down indicates that the canoe is floating and that it is wet weather. Then when the semi-circle rest on the top it is dry weather.

The sign of Leo, the Lion, is a good time to set out trees or plant anything you desire to grow into strength and thriftiness.

The sign of the crab is a good time to put grass seed, potatoes or vegetables in the ground, or anything which is intended to be rooted in the ground. The sign of the crab is not so often used, however, because it points to the heart.

During the last few decades medical almanacs have been improving and some are considered sound in their advice. The Hagerstown Almanac is not a medical almanac. It gives conjectures and prognostications of the weather, recipes for the farmer and his wife, pertinent advice, entertaining information, bright sayings and a few advertisements. Its cover page and subject matters are gotten up in the same style as in the past. On the back is a large multiplication table which old residents say they have never seen produced anywhere else.

In the book itself we find the following wording and spelling: "Hagers-Town Town and Country Almanack. Published by John Gruber. Carefully calculated for the horizon of Maryland, but will serve for the adjacent states without material variation. German almanacks are also to be had."—Connellsville Standard.

No. 1637 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate in Garrett county, Maryland, belonging to the parties to this cause.

The bill states that on the 19th day of January, 1895, Jeremiah Guard and wife executed and delivered to Delilah Guard, Annie Humberson and Frank Humberson, her husband, Alice Campbell and Robert Campbell, her husband, Effie Guard, and William Guard and Catharine Guard, his wife, a deed for one hundred acres of land, situate in Garrett county, which deed recited and set forth the contribution of each of said grantees to the purchase money for said farm, as appears by reference to said deed, a certified copy of which, recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 28, folio 125, etc., is filed with the bill as a part thereof; that Newton Guard, mentioned in said deed, was the father of the said Alice Campbell, Annie Humberson, William Guard and Effie Guard, and had departed this life intestate prior to the execution of said deed, and that the said Delilah Guard was the widow of the said Newton Guard, and the mother of said grantees of Jeremiah Guard, and has since departed this life intestate leaving the said Alice Campbell, Annie Humberson, William Guard and Effie Guard as her only children and heirs at law; that the said Alice Campbell, Robert Campbell, Annie Humberson, Frank Humberson, and Effie Guard, who sues by her next friend, Dorsey Guard, are all residents of Garrett county, Maryland; that after the execution and delivery of the aforesaid deed, William Guard and Catharine Guard, his wife, were divorced, a vinculo matrimonii, in the State of Pennsylvania, where they were then residing, and thereafter, the said Catharine Guard intermarried with the said George T. Hatfield, who now resides in the State of Illinois, the said William Guard being a resident of the State of Pennsylvania; that said real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interest therein, and that in order to make division of said interests, it will be necessary to sell said real estate and divide the proceeds thereof amongst the parties according to their several interests; the bill then prays for a decree directing a sale of said real estate, and that the proceeds be divided among the parties to this cause, according to their respective rights and interests, and for general relief.

It is thereupon, this 28th day of December, 1909, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 26th day of January, 1910, give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 15th day of February next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

YOUNG MAN KILLED AT SWANTON SATURDAY NIGHT

Mahlon McIlvaine Sweitzer Hurled to Death By Train No. 12.

Mahlon McIlvaine Sweitzer, a son of Mr. John J. Sweitzer of Swanton, was killed on the railroad at Swanton about 9:30 o'clock Saturday evening, January 8th, 1910. Speculation is rife as to the manner of the actual occurrence, and opinions widely differ.

It appears after nine o'clock in the night young Sweitzer arrived with a buggy and horse in the rear of the store on the South side of the railroad. After talking a brief while with two young men he drove in the direction of his home; this was the last time he was seen alive. From the rear of the station building he followed a narrow way down the south margin of the railroad, a distance of about two hundred yards to a close proximity of a crossing over the railroad track. Here the curves in both directions are acute, permitting very short views either up or down, and no doubt, he discovered a freight train rounding the curve going west on the opposite track, because it can be seen in the snow that he backed the horse and buggy as far from the track as the near bank would allow. The noise of that train kept him from hearing an approaching train on the closer rails going east. As the engine of the westbound freight left the way clear he drove down a few yards turned sharply to the left on the crossing just in time to be caught by No. 12 running east. The buggy was demolish, only fragments left along the track. Sweitzer, an agile young man, less than twenty year of age, either sprung forward or was dashed forward by the suddenness of the impact, landed in a central position between the bars of the north bound track. In the fall upon a crossie the neck apparently was dislocated with embrasure and perforation about he head and face as the only mutilations. The horse, most strange to say, escaped injury without a scar.

What Mr. Murray Says.

Mr. Oscar G. Murray, president of the B. & O. R. R. Co., has published a very able and strong defense of the affairs of the company from 1896, the date the receivers took charge, until the present time. The article was written in reply to the recent criticisms of the Baltimore Sun, and it must be conceded that Mr. Murray makes a strong case, so far as his personal direction and management is concerned, but it does not dispose of the allegation that the Pennsylvania road is not the dominating power in its control.

ELECTION DAY IN THE BANKS.

Few Changes Made in Boards of Directors of County Institutions.

In compliance with the legal requirements the stockholders of the various National Banks located in Garrett county met Tuesday and elected directing boards for the ensuing year. There were few changes made; in fact, the majority reelected the boards without any changes whatever. In no instance was there a contest, which speaks well for the management of the financial institutions of the county.

The result of the elections is as follows:

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF OAKLAND—All directors re-elected: F. A. Thayer, N. U. Bond, M. N. Wilson, A. G. Sturgiss, E. E. Sollars, W. A. Smith, R. A. Ravenscroft, Owen Treacy, C. E Ellithorp, C. E. Hilleary, E. H. Sincell and D. M. Dixon.

GARRETT NATIONAL OF OAKLAND—All directors re-elected: Daniel E. Offutt, Gilmor S. Hamill, John M. Davis, George W. Legge, John T. Mitchell, William R. Stull and Scott T. Jones.

FIRST NATIONAL OF FRIENDSVILLE—All directors re-elected: Leslie E. Friend, John W. McCullough, Walter W. Savage, Davis S. Custer, Harry M. Rumbaugh, William H. H. Friend, Horace R. DeWitt, Robert C. McCandlish and John T. Geary.

FIRST NATIONAL OF GRANTSVILLE—All directors re-elected: Cortez H. Jennings, Uriah M. Stanton, Eli Stanton, G. C. Keller, W. A. Hitchens, Frank Watts and John O. Getty.

FIRST NATIONAL OF KITZMILLER—A change was made in this board, those elected being as follows: R. A. Ravenscroft, C. E. Hilleary, R. A. Smith, F. A. Thayer, J. T. Bishop, S. S. Bender, A. C. Smith, Dr. H. P. Copeland, C. M. Wilson, Dr. W. G. Drinkwater, Wade Sapp, L. C. Bray, L. C. Hamill, B. F. Feichtner and E. J. Hamill.

No Kick Against Checks Under $1.

Ordinary checks used to pay debts do not come under the United States statute to be retained in the new criminal code now being drawn prohibiting the writing of a check for less than $1. The statute applies, attorneys says, only to the shinplaster and promissary notes in vogue during the Civil war.

"The statue has been obsolete these many years," it is authoritively stated. "The statue refers to notes 'intended to circulate as money.' Writing a check in payment of a bill and designed to figure in a single transaction would not be considered 'money.' The law was necessary in the days of shinplasters following the Civil war and is all right to have on the statute books yet, but it has no practical bearing on conditions today."

HOUSE GIVES DIRECT SLAP TO GOVERNOR

Power Taken From Speaker By Majority—Committee Retains Right To Appoint.

ANNAPOLIS, MD., Jan. 11.—All Annapolis is agog today over the direct slap given Governor Crothers in the action taken by the House of Delegates last night in putting through the report of the Committee on Organization over the head of Speaker Peeples. Carville D. Benson led the fight, mustering 67 votes, while the opposition, which included all but a few of the Republicans, could count only 24. Benson made his fight as a declaration of the ability of the House to attend to its own business.

Resentment has been strong on the part of the older members at the part Governor Crothers took in organizing the House by selecting the Speaker. It was the first opportunity formally to resent this interference. In order to accomplish the end he had in view it was necessary for Benson to muster two-thirds of the members present. The move on his part was, therefore, a bold one. Its very boldness seems to have been a factor in carrying it through despite the fact that an effort was made by Delegate Pairo, the Republican floor leader, to beat the movement. Pairo could not hold his forces in line.

Linked with the slap at the Governor is the declaration on the part of the House that it does not propose to stand for too much economy in the conduct of the Legislature. Strict economy is one of the pet hobbies of the Governor.

That the Governor was beaten so badly in the skirmish was due in great measure to the fact that Speaker Peeples had so managed his part in the play as to indicate that while economy was an excellent thing it was not intended to apply to him and to Cecil county. In the report of the Committee on Organization that was read out in the House last night provision was made for the selection of 51 employees. Three of them came from Cecil and one was Adam M. Peeples, the son of the Speaker. The Speaker as the chairman of the Committee had previously approved this report.

As soon as it made its appearance in the House he moved that it be referred to the Committee on Rules that he had just announced. His reference was not an inconsistent one, as the report also provided that such additional employees as should be named should come before the House with the recommendation of the Committee on Organization, whereas the rules require that all appointments shall be made by the Speaker. This move was construed as an effort on the part of the Governor to have the report sidetracked with the 51 employees provided for.

It was then that Benson came boldly to the front with his declaration that no one had profitted more in the matter or employees than the Speakers himself, that he had signed the report, that the House could consider its affairs without outside influences. He moved to suspend the rules in order that the report of the Committee should be immediately adopted.

T. Leigh Marriott has with the Committee on Rules a resolution designed to accompiish economy. He also has a grievance with the Governor for the part he took in selecting the Speaker. He forgot his grievance, however, in the interest of his resolution and of economy by supporting the Speaker with the hope that when both resolutions were in the hands of the Committee he could secure an amendment to the report of the Organization committee fixing the number of people who could be employed. He said he could give bond to run the House with fewer men than the report named. He asked that the report be allowed to go to the Committee so that some adjustment could be made. Henderson of Montgomery urged the House to stand with the Speaker because adverse action would be accepted as a direct slap at Governor Crothers.

Benson had spoken of "outside influences" and "Big Si" Cummings of Montgomery had urged the members to assert their independence of such influences, but the rules do not permit the mention of a name on the floor. This slip on Henderson's part gave Benson an opportunity to have him called to order under the rules. This, however, was only an indication of the determination of the Baltimore county man to lose no point in the fight he was making. His knowledge of parliamentary proceedings saved him a moment later when the vote was announced, for the Speaker first ruled the motion lost, acting under the impression that two-thirds of the whole membership was necessary to cerry it through, whereas it was shown that two-thirds of the members present was the real requirement. Under the first ruling he had lost by a fraction. Under the new he had won out by a nose.

John J. Mahon, Democratic boss of Baltimore city, is here today "on general principles," to use his own explanation. To take the belief of several lobby loiterers, however, John J. came down to Annapolis this morning to take a book over the field of battle, whereon Carville Benson of Baltimore county slaughtered the wishes of Governor Crothers last night in the economy fight.

Speaking of economy, Mr. Mahon declared that it was all right, within limitations less parsimoniously imposed than the ideas of Governor Crothers.

"Economy is all rght," said Mr. Mahon as he left the side of Max Ways, the Senate secretary, "but I don't believe in carrying it to such an extent as to cripple the proceedings of the House and Senate. I can hear all about protests from some of the members of the House concerning the program as suggested by Governor Crothers and others. The people don't want the Legislature to be parsimonious.

"Why, even in the matter of stationery the economy is getting a little too strong for some of the members, and I understand that some of you newspaper fellows would like 'em to be a little more liberal.

"No, I did't come down to look into the mix-up last night when Mr. Benson is said to have slapped the Governor's ideas. I haven't even seen Mr. Benson nor the Governor since I have been here. Understand, I believe in proper economy, but not in parsimony."

The Garrett members are assigned to the following committees:

Mr. Chappell—Emigration, pensions.
Mr. Bolden—Roads and highways, Section 24, Article 3 of the Constitution and on amendments to the Constitution.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. WILLIAM WILBUR KNOX.

From a Pittsburg paper of last Friday the following notice of the death of Mrs. William Wilbur Knox, of Alliance, Ohio, is taken. For the past ten years Mrs. Knox has spent the summer in Garrett county with Mrs. E. Fundenberg, of Oakland:

"A message yesterday announced the death of Mrs. William Wilbur Knox at Alliance, Ohio. Death resulted from a stroke of paralysis. Mrs. Knox, who was Miss Georgiana Josephine Morse, lived near Chicago until her marriage to Mr. Knox, whose father, Rev. Jeremiah Knox, won distinction by successful methods of horticulture on his farm, "Lesmore," on the hills and in the valleys of what is now the borough of Knoxville. The son conducted the farm at Rev. Knox's death. A little over a decade ago and for many years previous, "Lesmore" was the scene of many entertainments and open-hearted hospitality, and the hostess was not only popular for her generosity, but for her appreciative, sympathetic mind, keen wit, sense of humor and loyal friendship. After the death of her husband in Europe several years ago, Mrs. Knox spent much of her time in travel and finally took up her residence in Alliance, Ohio. Two children, Mrs. Joseph Patterson, of Philadelphia, and Charles Knox, who since his marriage has lived in Virginia and Washington, survive."

MISS VAUDA THASHER.

Miss Vauda Thrasher, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Thrasher, of Deer Park, died Sunday night at the home of her sister, Mrs. W. H. Faust, near Lexington, Georgia, after a few days' illness of what was thought by her physician to be tonsilitis. Miss Thrasher went south several months ago and was engaged in teaching near Lexington when she was taken ill. She resided with her sister, who was married two years ago to Rev. Faust, when that gentleman was engaged in ministerial work in Garrett county. Immediately upon the receipt of the news of their daughter's death Mr. and Mrs. Thrasher left for Georgia. The latter was taken ill on the train and when it arrived in Cumberland it was deemed inexpedient for her to go any further and she returned home, Mr. Thrasher continuing the journey alone. As yet no word has been received from him and it is not known whether the funeral will occur in Georgia or the remains will be brought home for interment. The deceased young lady was well and favorably known by a large circle of friends and her untimely death will be learned of with deep regret. She was aged twenty-one years and prior to going south taught the Chadderton school for two years.

FRIENDSVILLE HAS ONE CASE OF SMALLPOX

And the Entire Communities Is Very Much Wrought Up Over It.

At Friendsville, twenty-five miles down in the county from Oakland, has a real scare over a case of smallpox which developed there on Saturday last, the sick man being Wallace Shaffer, who is boarding at the home of Arthur Chisholm in that town, and the result is that the schools have been closed as a precautionary measure against the further spread of the disease, all pubilc gatherings, such as church services, have been called off, and business is at a standstill.

Mr. Shaffer arrived at Friendsville a few days prior to developing the disease, from a point near Pittsburg, where he contracted it. He circulated among the people in the town and upon being taken ill the open hearted residents of the town did all they could to alleviate his sufferings by waiting upon him and attending to all his needs. As a result a number were exposed and have a chance of contracting the disease. All such, however, as soon as the case was pronounced smallpox by Dr. Mason, who was called, have been quarantined and vaccinated and there are hopes of no other cases developing.

THE PHEASANT LAW.

A Correspondent Thinks Its Provisions Are Wise and Should Be Kept Intact.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Well, the political campaign in Garrett has been fought, the last gun has been fired and the trenchant blades of our terrible warriors are hanging harmlessly in the halls of peace.

In the lull of the storm an opportune moment may be employed to consider affairs that have survived the battle.

An old resident of Garrett, flat-footed in manner of speech, was heard to remark: "When a representative in the Legislature begins to make laws for birds I think but little of him" Such is commonly known as "peanut legislation." Since that sage remark there has been such a confusion of enactments and repeals involving all generations of birds that we begin to feel anxious for a Moses to lead us from the wilderness of years of wonderings to the borders of a promised land.

Maryland's assembled wisdom will soon be focused on many problems but, we trust, on none more hurtful than "birds." Seriously, our people might do well in giving a full and clear expression of belief as to a game law desired for Garrett, and in that way trace through the wilderness of many tamperings the path to be followed—so make known the popular will that it may be woven into a popular law.

Paying rather more than an ordinary notice last fall to the public wish in the nature of a pheasant law, I found almost as many opinions as there were expressions regarding a measure desirable for adoption, and little if any concurrence of thought in any section. My conclusion is the law in this particular as it stands today should not be disturbed; and that, if fairly enforced, will as fully preserve the pheasant and respect the reasonable privilege of the resident as any scheme likely to be framed, giving the pheasant eleven months of protected homes and propogation, and the resident one shooting month for either table luxury or sale in the county. The method seems to be sanctioned by sound reason and verified by experience.

The pot-hunting class, desiring an unrestricted capture and barter of the bird as a chattel in the market at an exhorbitant price, would rather sacrifice the whole breed in a single season than miss the high premium from the outside bidders, a premium so excessive as to raise a tireless army of trappers and hunters in a battle of extermination. A better judgment looking to the limited right of the resident and a surer preservation of this incomparable game should prevail.

The pheasant is a superb bird and an aboriginal settler here long in advance of the first clatter of the white man's axe in these mountain wilds. He does not prey upon the seedman's crops and seeks those haunts less visited by the foot-steps of men. No one can behold his strut nor watch his flight and resist the charm his beauty inspires. Let us be generous to him and considerate to ourselves by liberally awarding him that protection the strong can confer upon the weak and not often found in "Peanut Legislation."

Existing laws equal the need and our officials should see that its infractions are followed bp its penalties.

County Editors Organize.

With a membership of 61 editors of county papers throughout the State, the Maryland Press Association was formed Wednesday at a meeting at the Hotel Rennert, Baltimore. The organization has no political significance, but was formed to further the business interests of the county papers. The following officers were elected:

President, Col. W. S. Powell, Ellicott City Times; vice presidents, Messrs. C. O. Melvin, Pocomoke Ledger-Dispatch, and Sterling Gault, Emmitsburg Chronicle; secretary and treasurer, W. S. McCombs, Havre de Grace Republican; executive committee, Messrs. George R. Ash, Cecil Democrat, Elkton; Joseph M. Street, Harford Democrat, Belair; P. B. Englar, Carroll Record, Taneytown, and W. W. Burton, Ellicott City Record.

Must Have Been Bad There.

A Piedmont special to the Wheeling Intelligencer says:

"Gigantic gorges of ice near the Piedmont public school have endangered the lives of the teachers and pupils. The creek is the highest in recent years and school has been dismissed until the gorges break. Never in the history of Piedmont has there been so much ice collected on the streets of the city. All streets are a solid glare of ice, making walking very dangerous. Many people have fallen and badly injured themselves.

BUSINESS AT HOME.

Effective Method of Fighting the Catalogue House.

TWO PROMINENT FEATURES.

Retail Merchants Can Compete by Buying In Bulk, Paying In Cash at Bedrock Prices and Selling Strictly For Cash.

Many retail merchants have found that the most effective method of fighting the catalogue houses is to meet them with their own weapons. There is no question that the two great features of the mail order business are publicity and price. The publicity is gained through the catalogue, the price through buying or manufacturing in large quantities and selling direct. The small retail merchant can compete with the big houses on both lines. By watching opportunities, buying in bulk and paying cash at bedrock prices and, what is still more important, selling for cash he can match the mail order prices or sell under them. As for publicity, he can meet catalogue with catalogue, a method that many merchants have found highly profitable.

I have before me an account of a case in point. It is published in the National Hardware Bulletin and recounts the experience of J. M. Thompson & Sons, a retail hardware firm of Owatonna, Minn. In the spring of 1908 this house issued its first catalogue and recently got out a third one. It has doubled its business in that short time, although it had a thriving trade before. Its first catalogue was a thirty-two page, costing $50 a thousand; the last one, sixty-four pages, costing $85 per thousand. By electrotyping its pages it avoids setting much new matter. The general style of the catalogues follows that of the mail order houses. Distribution is made through the mails, although personal inspection of goods is invited rather than orders by post, and the advantage is pointed out that the customer thus has the advantage of seeing what he gets and is not buying a pig in a poke, as with the big catalogue houses.

In the introduction to their second catalogue the Thompsons make the following announcement:

"We are fully aware that this is a progressive age and a time when nearly every one is well read and posted and knows exactly what he wants or nearly so and wishes to buy and will buy where he can at the best value for his money; also that the time has gone by when one man wishes to pay another's bad debts or to pay big interest on his purchases by having them charged for from three months to three years. For this reason we sell hardware for cash, as it is the only way we can sell at the lowest prices and at the prices at which we are continually selling.

"This store does for you what the catalogue house does not. For your convenience we keep at all times a carefully assorted stock of seasonable hardware. You can come to our store and make your selection from the actual goods and not by pictures. Another advantage in buying from us is that if you buy an article that is not what it should be, in your opinion, you can come to us and talk it over personally, and it is one of our inflexible rules that we satisfy each customer in the fullest sense of the word, both in regard to price and quality. We can show only a small part of our stock in this catalogue. It is enough, however, for you to compare prices with all other competition."

Insistence is made on the cash feature, and to it Mr. Thompson, the senior member of the firm, attributes his success.

There is no reason why retail merchants should not adopt this method in other cities and villages not only in the hardware line, but in all others. It would require work, but what business man expects to succeed in this age without work? It entails expense, but so does any sort of advertising. The only question is, Will it pay for itself? The mail order houses find that it pays and pays big. Such small retail merchants as have tried it have come to the same conclusion. In this light it can be regarded like any other advertising, as an investment that brings in more than the original expenditure.

The advantages of the catalogue are obvious. It is a convenience to the housewife and will for this reason usually be preserved. It creates demand, as does any advertising that is worth while. It can be consulted by the family at the fireside, and as prices are given it simplifies shopping and enables the customer to figure in advance as to his outlay. It brings in trade. It familiarizes the public with the firm's name. It can be mailed to all possible customers in any radius selected. It may even result in mail orders or in orders sent by one farmer with another. It cuts off the orders of the distant houses, for the reason that any purchaser, other things being equal, would rather trade at home than abroad. For one thing, he can inspect goods; for another, deliveries are quicker; for a third, he keeps the money in his own community; for a fourth, he knows with whom he is dealing.

As a method of winning home trade, try the catalogue. If it does not pay for itself it can be abandoned. But I feel certain that once given a fair test it will become a fixture with any up to date merchant. Give your local printer an order, mail it out judiciously and watch your trade grow.

THE LOVE PHILTER OF IKEY SCHOENSTEIN

Wedding Bells Rang, Though the Potion Went Astray.

By O. HENRY.

[Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.]

The Blue Light drug store is downtown, between the Bowery and First avenue, where the distance between the two streets is the shortest. The Blue Light does not consider that pharmacy is a thing of bric-a-brac, scent and ice cream soda. If you ask it for pain killer it will not give you a bonbon.

The Blue Light scorns the labor saving arts of modern pharmacy. It macerates its opium and percolates its own laudanum and paregoric. To this day pills are made behind its tall prescription desk—pills rolled out on its own pill tile, divided with a spatula, rolled with the finger and thumb, dusted with calcined magnesia and delivered in little round pasteboard pill boxes. The store is on a corner about which coveys of ragged-plumed, hilarious children play and become candidates for the cough drops and soothing sirups that wait for them inside.

Ikey Schoenstein was the night clerk of the Blue Light and the friend of his customers. Thus it is on the east side, where the heart of pharmacy is not glace. There, as it should be, the druggist is a counselor, a confessor, an adviser, an able and willing missionary and mentor whose learning is respected, whose occult wisdom is venerated and whose medicine is often poured, untasted, into the gutter. Therefore Ikey's corniform, bespectacled nose and narrow, knowledege bowed figure was well known in the vicinity of the Blue Light, and his advice and notice were much desired.

Ikey roomed and breakfasted at Mrs Riddle's, two squares away. Mrs. Riddle had a daughter named Rosy. The circumlocution has been in vain—you must have guessed it—Ikey adored Rosy. She tinctured all his thoughts. She was the compound extract of all that was chemically pure and officinal. The dispensatory contained nothing equal to her. But Ikey was timid, and his hopes remained insoluble in the menstruum of his backwardness and fears. Behind his counter he was a superior being, calmly conscious of special knowledge and worth. Outside he was a weakkneed, purblind, motorman cursed rambler, with ill fitting clothes stained with chemicals and smelling of socotrine aloes and valerianate of ammonia.

The fly in Ikey's ointment (thrice welcome, pat tropes) was Chunk McGowan.

Mr. McGowan was also striving to catch the bright smiles tossed about by Rosy. But he was no outfielder, as Ikey was. He picked them off the bat. At the same time he was Ikey's friend and customer and often dropped in at the Blue Light drug store to have a bruise painted with iodine or get a cut rubber plastered after a pleasant evening spent along the Bowery.

One afternoon McGowan drifted in in his silent, easy way and sat, comely, smooth faced, hard, indomitable, good natured, upon a stool.

"Ikey," said he when his friend had fetched his mortar and sat opposite, grinding gum benzoin to a powder, "get busy with your ear. It's drugs for me if you've got the line I need."

Ikey scanned the countenance of Mr. McGowan for the usual evidences of conflict, but found none.

"Take your coat off," he ordered. "I guess already that you have been stuck in the ribs with a knife. I have many times told you those dagoes would do you up."

Mr. McGowan smiled. "Not them," he said, "not any dagoes. But you've located the diagnosis all right enough. It's under my coat, near the ribs. Say, Ikey, Rosy and me are goin' to run away and get married tonight."

Ikey's left forefinger was doubled over the edge of the mortar, holding it steady. He gave it a wild rap with the pestle, but felt it not. Meanwhile Mr. McGowan's smile faded to a look of perplexed gloom.

"That is," he continued, "if she keeps in the notion until the time comes. We've been layin' pipes for the getaway for two weeks. One day she says she will. The same evenin' she says nixy. We've agreed on tonight, and Rosy's stuck to the affirmative this time for two whole days. But it's five hours yet till the time, and I'm afraid she'll stand me up when it comes to the scratch."

"You said you wanted drugs," remarked Ikey.

Mr. McGowan looked ill at ease and harassed—a condition opposed to his usual line of demeanor. He made a patent medicine almanac into a roll and fitted it with unprofitable carefulness about his finger.

"I wouldn't have this double handicap make a false start tonight for a million," he said. "I've got a little flat up in Harlem all ready, with chrysanthemums on the table and a kettle ready to boil. And I've engaged a parlor pounder to be ready at his house for us at 9:30. It's got to come off. And if Rosy don't change her mind again"— Mr. McGowan ceased, a prey to his doubts.

"I don't see then yet," said Ikey shortly, "what makes it that you talk of drugs or what I can be doing about it."

"Old man Riddle don't like me a little bit," went on the uneasy suitor, bent upon marshaling his arguments. "For a week he hasn't let Rosy step outside the door with me. If it wasn't for losin' a boarder they'd have bounced me long ago. I'm makin' $20 a week, an' she'll never regret flyin' the coop with Chunk McGowan."

"You will excuse me, Chunk," said Ikey. "I must make a prescription that is to be called for soon."

"Say," said McGowan, looking up suddenly—"say, Ikey, ain't there a drug of some kind—some kind of powders—that'll make a girl like you better if you give 'em to her?"

Ikey's lip beneath his nose curled with scorn of superior enlightenment, but before he could answer McGowan continued:

"Tim Lacy told me he got some once from a croaker uptown and fed 'em to his girl in soda water. From the very first dose he was ace high and everybody else looked like 50 cents to her. They was married in less than two weeks."

Strong and simple was Chunk McGowan. A better reader of men than Ikey was could have seen that his tough frame was strung upon fine wires. Like a good general who was about to invade the enemy's territory, he was seeking to guard every point against possible failure.

"I thought," went on Chunk hopefully, "that if I had one of them powders to give Rosy when I see her at supper tonight it might brace her up and keep her from reneging on the proposition to skip. I guess she don't need a mule team to drag her away, but women are better at coaching than they are at running bases. If the stuff 'll work just for a couple of hours it'll do the trick."

"When is this foolishness of running away to be happening?" asked Ikey.

"Nine o'clock," said Mr. McGowan. "Supper 's at 7. At 8 Rosy goes to bed with a headache. At 9 old Parvenzano lets me through to his back yard, where there's a board off Riddle's fence, next door. I go under her window and help her down the fire escape. We've got to make it early on the preacher's account. It's all dead easy if Rosy don't balk when the flag drops. Can you fix me one of them powders, Ikey?"

Ikey Schoenstein rubbed his nose slowly.

"Chunk," said he, "it is of drugs of that nature that pharmaceutists must have much carefulness. To you alone of my acquaintance would I intrust a powder like that. But for you I shall make it, and you shall see how it makes Rosy to think of you."

Ikey went behind the prescription desk. There he crushed to a powder two soluble tablets, each containing a quarter of a grain of morphia. To them he added a little sugar of milk to increase the bulk and folded the mixture neatly in a white paper. Taken by an adult this powder would insure several hours of heavy slumber without danger to the sleeper. This he handed to Chunk McGowan, telling him to administer it in a liquid if possible and received the hearty thanks of the back yard Lochinvar.

The subtlety of Ikey's action becomes apparent upon recital of his subsequent move. He sent a messenger for Mr. Riddle and disclosed the plans of Mr. McGowan for eloping with Rosy. Mr. Riddle was a stout man, brick dusty of complexion and sudden in action.

"Much obliged," he said briefly to Ikey. "The lazy Irish loafer! My own room's just above Rosy's. I'll just go up there myself after supper and load the shotgun and wait. If he comes in my back yard he'll go away in a ambulance instead of a bridal chaise."

With Rosy held in the clutches of Morpheus for many hours deep slumber and the bloodthirsty parent waiting, armed and forewarned, Ikey felt that his rival was close indeed upon discomfiture.

All night in the Blue Light drug store he waited at his duties for chance news of the tragedy, but none came.

At 8 o'clock in the morning the day clerk arrived, and Ikey started hurriedly for Mrs. Riddle's to learn the outcome. And, lo, as he stepped out of the store who but Chunk McGowan sprang from a passing street car and grasped his hand—Chunk McGowan, with a victor's smile and flushed with joy.

"Pulled it off," said Chunk, with elysium in his grin. "Rosy hit the fire escape on time to a second, and we was under the wire at the reverend's at 9:30¼. She's up at the flat—she cooked eggs this mornin' in a blue kimono. Lord, how lucky I am! You must pace up some day, Ikey, and feed with us. I've got a job down near the bridge, and that's where I'm headin' for now."

"The — the — powder?" stammered Ikey.

"Oh, that stuff you gave me!" said Chunk, broadening his grin. "Well, it was this way. I sat down at the supper table last night at Riddle's, and I looked at Rosy, and I says to myself: 'Chunk, if you get the girl get her on the square. Don't try any hocus pocus with a thoroughbred like her.' And I keeps the paper you give me in my pocket. And then my lamps fall on another party present, who, I says to myself, is failin' in a proper affection toward his comin' son-in-law, so I watches my chance and dumps that powder in old man Riddle's coffee. See?"

Women and Eating.

"Considerable fun has been poked at women for their choice of viands in public eating places," said a trained observer, "but I've noticed that even there they are more sensible than men in some respects. Three large, middle aged women were taking luncheon near my table the other noon. The largest woman, who was dressed in black, called for two portions of broiled fish and bread and butter. There was an abundance for the trio, and when the fish course had been finished the waiter asked them if they would have something else.

"'Nothing more,' said the largest woman, who was paying the check, and she said it in a determined sort of way that brought the repast to an abrupt close. You might have thought that they were never going to have anything more to eat as long as they lived.

"Now, if a man invites friends to take luncheon with him he orders twice as much as anybody wants and then keeps on ordering, through ice cream, coffee, crackers and cheese and cordials, for fear that he'll be set down as scrimpy. The guests of that largest woman couldn't have got another bite if they had sat up and begged for it."—Providence Tribune.

The Doctor's Gift.

Dr. Robert Glynn-Clobery, a delightful old character described in "Reminiscences of Cambridge," was a fellow of King's college, where he resided. During a long illness he attended a poor man, of whose family party a pert, talkative magpie made one, and as the patient observed that Dr. Glynn-Clobery always when paying a visit had some joke with the bird he thought that perhaps the doctor might like to possess it.

Accordingly, when the poor man was well again, with overflowing gratitude, but with no money to pay a bill, he thought he could do no better than make his kind friend a present of the magpie, and so the prisoner in its cage was conveyed to his rooms in King's college.

The bearer met with a kind reception, but was desired to carry the bird back with him.

"I cannot," said the doctor, "take so good care of it as can you, but I shall consider it mine, and I intrust it to you to keep for me, and as long as it lives I will pay you half a crown weekly for its maintenance."

A Hard Working River.

The hardest working river, the one most thoroughly harnessed to the mill wheels of labor in the United States, probably in the world, is the Blackstone. It is not a large river either. Its drainage area is only about 458 square miles, and in its power producing section it is only forty-three miles long, a very Tom Thumb of a river as rivers go in America. Yet the doughty little stream produces 23,000 horsepower, fifty for every square mile of its drainage area. If you will figure out this amount of horsepower in terms of coal you will find that the busy little stream represents a capitalization of about $25,000,000. This is twice the developed horsepower of any other important river.

Almost a hundred mills, catching with their whirling turbines its water almost from the very source in the city of Worcester, Mass., line its banks and grow in size and importance till in Woonsocket and Pawtucket, R. I., you have some of the largest of their kind in the country.—Technical World Magazine.

TRADE AT HOME.

Loyalty to Locality Proves to Be the Best Spirit.

The man who buys his goods of a mail order house and expects his neighbors in Emporia to buy goods of him or, buy labor of him or to buy professional service of him is economically a leech. He is sucking industrial blood out of the town and gives none back. He sends his profits out of town like a Chinaman and has no more right to a standing in a community than a foreigner. We are all neighbors industrially in this town, and the man who sends away for his goods is not one of us. He is another industrial system and deserves no man's support in Emporia.

The fact that this is economically wrong is recognized by the mail order houses themselves. They protect their customers as thieves by offering to keep people from knowing where the mail order goods come from. The mail order houses have no "tags" on their goods. They say in their catalogues that none of their goods are marked and that no one knows where they were bought. If it is proper to hide the place of purchase of an article it is wrong to buy the article at that place. Only the man who steals is ashamed to say he got anything he has. There is such a thing as "tainted" dry goods, "tainted" groceries and "tainted" furniture. All of such that are not bought at home of men who have befriended you, to men whom you owe a living, are "tainted."

It is time to change and get together. It is time to begin to reform ourselves and not our neighbors by buying everything at home whether the neighbors do or not. And now is the time to begin.

The thing to do is for all of us to turn over a new leaf.—William Allen White in Emporia Gazette.

BEAUTIFYING THE TOWN.

Wonderful Results Can Be Realized by Persistent and Skillful Endeavor.

In the past few years the passion for the "town beautiful" has become a national ideal. City councils have taken up the work, philanthropists have contributed fortunes, and civic associations have put their shoulders to the wheel. That every one knows. But what scarcely any one knows is that the movement began in the brain of a quiet, unassuming woman in Springfield, O.

Miss Jessie M. Good was an assistant in the Springfield library and had been for sixteen years. One day in an interval of her work she happened to pick up a magazine and read therein of how the village of Stockbridge, Mass., in order to attract summer tourists had formed a local improvement society to clean the town. That was her inspiration. Clean the town! Why should not all towns be clean? Why were dusty streets, littered sidewalks, disfiguring vacant lots, treeless highways and unsightly back yards necessary? Why should not every town have parks and public gardens?

Miss Good told her plan to the editor of a floriculture magazine published in Springfield and wrote an article about it for him. The idea spread, letters came in shoals, and Miss Good and D. J. Thomas, the editor, calling a convention of those interested, formed the American League of Civic Improvement. That was in July, 1901. A year later at a meeting in Buffalo the American Park and Outdoor Art association merged with the league under the title of the American Civic association, which now embraces every state in the Union.—Hampton's Magazine.

The Billboard Nuisance.

Everybody knows that a billboard is a nuisance and an eyesore and that it damages all property in the neighborhood. We fail to see why there should be such hesitancy upon the part of the courts in plainly saying so. No man or corporation should be permitted to ravage around and injure other persons' property by stables or billboards or other nuisance merely because he owns adjoining property or has a lease upon it.—Telegraph, Colorado Springs.

Public Waterworks and Sewerage.

Where a town gets its supply of water from private wells and the slops from every house are thrown into the back yard typhoid fever is the prevalent disease and the undertaker and marble cutter are the busiest men in town. Public waterworks and sewerage should be seen to above all else.

To Attract Capital.

Keep your streets clean and well graded, paved or graveled where possible if you would attract capital. Have plenty of water. Keep buildings well painted, residences neat and attractive, pay your debts, secure low taxation and encourage factories suitable to location.

Lift Up.

Lift up your life.
Be not a weakling, fearful of defeat;
But, with a spirit equal to the strife,
Surmount each ill you meet.
Dare to believe in your own destiny
And in that faith achieve the victory

Lift up your town.
Imbue it with the spirit of success.
At home give cheer; abroad speak its renown
Through deed and tongue and press;
Make beautiful its ways and prospects; raise its vision to the goal of better days.

Lift up your land.
Thrill with the tale of her heroic years.
With her great mission let your heart expand.
Be not ashamed of tears
When her flag snaps its music in the breeze,
For man grows more man stirred by things like these.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

THE man with neither home not friends is fixed to have a whaling good time except for one thing—he has no money.

As soon as weddings go out of fashion we won't hear so much about divorce being on the increase.

Sometimes it is hard to be well and keep on good terms with your doctor too.

Some flirtatious girls appear to carry a sort of mental rubber stamp that they endeavor to impress upon the men they meet.

The Home Grown Brand.

Life is not all sunshine.
Often there are days
We cannot discover
Any warming rays,
But when storm clouds gather
And obscure the sky
You can make a little
If you'll only try.

With a bit of practice
You can make a grade
That would in its working
Satisfy the trade.
But if you are busy
Make enough, I pray,
Just for home consumption
On a dreary day.

No one, you have noticed,

With a grouch that didn't Know enough to quit,
And a crusty manner
Doesn't put you right
With some worth while people
Who for you will fight.

MANUAL LABOR WILL NOT FIGURE IN THE FUTURE

Edison Says Machinery Will Do the Work, Men Watching It.

Thomas A. Edison, looking into the future, thinks the prospect of the laboring man is a particularly bright one.

"In 200 years, by the cheapening of commodities, the ordinary laborer will live as well as a man does now with $200,000 annual income. Automatic machinery and scientific agriculture will bring about this result." Mr. Edison says, in the current issue of the Independent. "Not individualism but social labor will dominate the future; you can't have individual machines and every man working by himself. Industry will constantly become more social and interdependent. There will be no manual labor in the factories of the future. The men in them will be merely superintendents watching the machinery to see that it works right.

"The work day, I believe, will be eight hours. Every man needs that much work to keep him out of mischief and to keep him happy. But it will be work with the brain, something that men will be interested in, and done in wholesome pleasant surroundings. Less and less man will be used as an engine, or as a horse, and his brain will be employed to benefit himself and his fellows.

"The clothes of the future will be so cheap that every young woman will be able to follow the fashions promptly, and there will be plenty of fashions.

Communication with other worlds has been suggested. I think we had better stick to this world and find out something about it before we call up our neighbors. They might make us ashame of ourselves.

"The monorail does not appeal to me. It was a fundamental mistake that our railroads were built on a 4 foot 9 inch gauge instead of a 6-foot gauge, which we will probably have to come to yet.

"The aeroplane of the future will, I think, have to be on the helicopter principle. A sucessful air machine must be able to defy the winds. If Wright's aeroplane had one-twentieth of its surface, the wind would not effect it. The helicopter principle is the only way to rise above the atmospheric conditions. By increasing the velocity of propeller revolutions the size of the machine can be diminished and thereby be vanquish the wind. A helicopter could have foot-size planes distributed on a 100 to 150 foot circle and controlled from the center by wires.

"Chemical food has been worked out pretty well by Emil Fischer and his students, but it won't be a commercial proposition. You can't beat the farm as a laboratory, commercially speaking. If we should dry up like Mars and couldn't raise vegetables on this earth, we might turn to a chemical diet.

"Society will have to stop this whiskey business, which is like throwing sand into the bearings of a steam engine.

"Among the many problems which await solution in the future one of the most important is to get the full value out of fuel. The wastefulness of our present methods of combustion is tremendous.

"There is not as much power in a ton of 40 per cent dynamite as there is in a ton of coal.

"Everything in nature would burn up if it were not for the fact that nearly everything except coal is already burned up. Iron would burn and make a good fuel—if in a very fine powder—but it has already been consumed in nature's furnace.

"We may discover the germ of getting all the power from fuel tomorrow, and then again it may take a long time to find it.

"To get rid of friction in our machines is one of the future problems. The only machine without friction that we know of the world and it moves in the resistless ether."

WHAT IS BEING DONE AND SAID IN GAY PAREE

New Hospital for Sick American Students—Styles for Next Spring.

PARIS, Jan. 9.—One of the most timely and at the same time practical charities of particular interest to American women who may become ill in Paris, is that which has just been announced in the establishment of a free bed for students in the new American hospital here. Under the patronage of a number of the best known women of the American colony, a fair was held at which various useful articles were sold and refreshments offered, resulting in the receipt of a reasonably large sum with which to endow the bed.

What a blessing this will prove to the American girl or women, comparatively friendless, alone and with but little means, in Paris, cannot be over estimated, for scarcely a week passes that the case of a worthy but helpless American woman is brought to the attentions of members of the American Colony, with the object giving aid to such sufferers.

Queer sights, indeed, are to be seen at the public auction house, which, by the way, is one of the sights of Paris, when the effects of the famous Hotel Drouot are to be sold at public auction.

The law of France provides, that the personal and household effects of a deceased person may be sold at public action, and it was for this reason that the effects of the late Sibyl Sanderson, the well known singer, were disposed of in that way. The wigs she used in various theatrical parts numbered into the hundreds, while the collections of boots, shoes and slippers almost filled a small room.

The leading dressmaking establishments of Paris at present may be not inaptly described as in the chrysalis state. The styles for next spring and summer is being completed, notwithstanding the fact that women of fashion are at this moment wrapping themselves up in fur garments, and about the middle of January will be shown to the compatatively favored few, among whom, I am glad to say, I am numbered. The public at large, however, will not be given an opportunity to see what is to worn until about the latter part of February.

As far as head-gear is concerned—toques, or rather turbans, continue to lead, for the moment. Immense things they are too—fur or velvet being the favorite material used. So huge are they, that they cover not alone the entire head, but the ears as well.

As far as velvet is concerned one may choose whichever color bests suits the fancy, but bright green is very popular. Equally bright red and also purple, in all its variety of these colors are becoming, especially when worn with one of the large mesh black veils, but which must have no dots, a fashion which is infinitely less trying on the eyes and far prettier in effect.

No rose without a thorn. The public of the French metropolis is having its troubles with it subway railroad, or "metro," as it is called here. From far down the Rue de Rivoli and along the Champs Elysees to the Etoile may be heard the underground rumble of the subway trains which, while carrying the public swiftly from one part of the city to the other, is proving to be such a nuisance the people above ground and occupying houses along its route, that many of them are moving away, even from handsome and up-to-date apartment houses and private residences, and taking new quarters away from the racket and disquieting sounds. Many prefer going to the country, with its comparative inaccessibility, rather than to lose sleep and rest as a result of the disturbance.

Near the Pound' Alexandre is a magnificent residence or "hotel," as they are often termed in France, which has been for sale at a sacrifice for many months, but for which no buyer can be found, for the reason that the subway trains to Versailles and its environs run directly beneath the structure, the reverberation being almost unendurable. Attempts have been made to sell the property to some rich American, in the hope that he would either not object to the noise, or possibly would not realize the detriment to the property caused by the subterranean racket, but without success, for the American who is shrewd enough to have gained sufficient money to enable him to purchase such property at the price demanded, is a wise enough business man, not to be inveigled into making such an investment.

Miss Anna Klumpke, an American girl and a talented member of a talented family, who has made Paris her home for some time, and who was the intimate friend and confidante of the late Rosa Bonheur, the famous French woman known the world over, who left her chateaux and estate, including her famous paintings, to Miss Klumpke, has written a book, soon to be published in English in the United States, telling of the life and works of one of the most celebrated women the world has ever known. It is to be illustrated and will be an invaluable addition to the world of letters.

Miss Bonheur's famous work, "The Horse Show," which has been seen and admired by hundreds of thousands of persons, is hung in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

SOME HISTORIC HAPPENINGS OF JANUARY.

The first month in the year has always been a fateful one in English history, but it began most specially to be recognized as such during the reign of Charles I. It was on January 4, 1842, that the attempt was made to arrest the five members. On the tenth of the month, three years later, Archbishop Laud, was beheaded, and January 30, 1649, saw the king's own head laid upon the block.

There is probably no act of parliament which has ever been the cause of such amazing dissentions and discord as that which brought about the union between Great Britain and Ireland. This came into force upon January 1, 1801. It was in the same month that Richard Trevithick, the Cornish inventer, perfected the first steam locomotive which ever moved upon an English road.

The great William Pitt, the most able prime minister who ever controlled the destinies of the kingdom, came into office at Christmas, 1783, and died in January, 1806. His great rival, Charles James Fox, born in January, 1749, only survived Pitt six months.

One of the greatest boons that a nation ever received from its government was conferred upon Great Britain on January 1, 1840—namely, penny postage. Adhesive stamps had been invented by Mr. James Chalmers of Dundee, six years previously, and these superceded Mulready's envelope later in the same year.

January has for a long time past been a very notable month in the history of the British royal family. On January 25, 1858, the Princess Royal was married to Prince Frederick William of Prussia. The German kaiser was born in January, 1859.

Prince Henry of Battenberg's death occurred on January 20, 1897, and the duke of Teck's life came to an end on the twenty-first of the month, 1900.

One year later, on January 22, 1901, came the end of the most famous reign in English or any other history. Queen Victoria died at 6.30 on the fateful evening.

In northern latitudes no nation fights in winter if it can possibly be avoided, and yet January has seen some of the toughest struggles of modern war. January, 1871, holds the record for fierce fighting. During that month there were no fewer than six terrific battles between the French and the Germans. The latest was Gen. Trochu's grand sortie from Paris, which ended in his defeat and in the extinction of the last hopes of Paris and her citizens.

Jumbled Words.

Here are some sentences that it is fun to repeat quickly:

She sells seashells by the seashore.

Seven selfish shellfish shoved some shrimps sideways.

Prudently peel prime potatoes.

Royal rulers rarely really read riddles.

Faint flames frequently feed fierce fires.

Truly rural.

Echo Answers.

What must be done to conduct a newspaper aright? Write.

What is necessary for a farmer to assist him? System.

What would give a blind man the greatest delight? Light.

What is the best counsel given by a justice of the peace? Peace.

What cry is the greatest terrifier? Fire.

Humpty Dumpty.

Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall,
Yet Humpty Dumpty feared not a fall.
For the king and his men had promised when
He fell they would put him together again.
So there he waited for some one to pass
Till Alice came "through the looking glass"
And said as she saw him sitting there,
"Why, it's Humpty Dumpty, I declare!"

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JANUARY, 13, 1910.

GET ready for a spring real estate boom.

THOSE who expect little from the legislature will not be disappointed.

LET the Governor insist upon economy in the large things as well as in minor items.

THE DEMOCRCTIC bosses are going to have the time of their lives at Annapolis this winter.

MARYLAND Democrats are having troubles enough. With the House arrayed against Boss Crothers and his figure-head, Speaker Peeples, and strained relations existing between the Executive and Mr. Vandiver an open break is expected at any moment.

OUR Democratic Governor is talking about another amendment to our constitution. It is a mighty good thing for the people of this state that the framers of our constitution made the Governor's term only four years. If our present one had a longer term the Lord only knows what would become of us. He can do more talking and less performing than any governor we have had since the creation of the state. He and a lot of other Eastern Shore politicians are endeavoring to fasten their grip upon the whole state. Do the people of Baltimore and Western Maryland, who pay the bulk of the taxes of the state, intend to be still and allow this to go on? We think not.

THE MINORITY AT ANNAPOLIS.

As a result of the ballot trickery that was perpetrated in the eleven Wilson law counties of this state at the last general election the party that is responsible for the placing of the trick-ballot law in the statutes is in control of the legislature which organized last week. The powers that profited by the trick-ballot law are not only in control at Annapolis, but dominate in both branches of the legislative assembly in such a way that any opposition on the part of the minority in eitner branch to the further extension of the ballot-law trickery or other forms of legislation designed to accomplish political unfairness seems well-nigh hopeless. But one man, unafraid and fighting steadfastly for the right, is a power. The people of Maryland will be taking note of what goes on at Annapolis during the session which has just begun. The minority representation, small though it be, is yet in position to perform a most valuable service to the state. For one thing, it can make it certain that nothing at the state capital shall be done under cover. The fight which the minority will have to wage may seem to be a losing one at short range, and yet it may prove to be a winning one at long range.

It is safe to say that never before in Maryland history was there a legislature so completely controlled by outside influences in the matter of organizing its working machinery as this 1910 Assembly. For weeks before the members of the two branches assembled at Annapolis it was known just who was to be president of the Senate, who the speaker of the House and who had been picked to fill the desirable appointive places in both branches. The majority members of the two branches upon assembling at Annapolis last week simply ratified the program that had been prepared for them. This demonstration at the very beginning of the session that there is a power outside of and superior to the legislature possesses a significance which will be generally noted. Already there is talk of newly devised statutory schemes for juggling the electoral system in this state. The apparent assumption of those who are responsible for the forecast that the electoral system is to be further tampered with is that the majority representation in the two branches can be depended upon to push through whatever political legislation the outside and controlling powers may demand. The manner, of course, in which the two branches were organized from outside is, to say the least, unpleasantly suggestive of a legislative procedure that may be directed and controlled from outside.

The Governor's message to the legislature suggests that another attempt will be made to frame a disfranchisement scheme aimed to deprive one particular race of the rights of citizenship granted to other races. Twice the people of this state have rejected the proposition to segregate and discriminate against the negro race by a specially formulated disfranchising scheme. The people will never by majority vote, in any election that fairly records popular opinion, approve any such deformation of ths state's electoral system as was aimed at in either the Poe or the Straus disfranchisement proposition. If a third disfranchising amendment is to be prepared and pushed through the 1910 legislature, it will have no chance before the people unless the electoral machinery is in advance more extensively tampered with than it was in advance of the last election. And the premonitory signs are not lacking which indicate that such tampering is in contemplation. The Brewington scheme is suggestive of an audacious and defiant control of the election machinery in this state for the accomplishment of unscrupulous partisan purposes, as has not been attempted since the Democratic machine was overthrown in the election of 1895.

There is no doubt whatever that the bosses who are completely in control of the machinery of the Democratic party are in the saddle at Annapolis, and all the signs indicate that there is a definitely planned program for juggling and distorting the electoral system of of the state to the intent of perpetuating their own power. The Republican minorities are too small to block the game which the powers in control are determined to play. But these minorities can perform a great service by showing up the game—by disclosing to the common view the sinister motives that are involved. The minorities can wage a persistent fight for decency and fair play and for the restoration o an honest and fair electoral system and such a fight fearlessly and ably waged, though it may not change the program that has been arranged for the 1910 legislature, will not be lost in the greater swing of events that will not be limited to the ninety-day session.

MARYLAND FRUIT.

An imprssion has gained general prevalence in recent years that the best apples in the world are now grown in the Rocky Mountain region of the United States and along the northern section of the Pacific Slope. It therefore come somewhat in the way of a pleasing surprise to Maryland fruitgrowers to be informed that "since December 14, 1908, the Maryland State Horticultural Society has exhibited fruit three times in the West in competition with the foremost apple sections of the Western country, and out of a total of 86 entries has won 70 prizes, 44 of which have been gold medals fand first premiums." At the Rocky Mountain Apple Exposition, held in Denver last week, Maryland apples won 50 per cent. of the first premiums, and the remaining 50 per cent. of first premiums were distributed among 15 states.

Maryland is a great fruit state. Thirty years ago this state produced nearly one-half of all the peaches marketed in the world. California and Georgia in recent years have been growing more peaches than Maryland, but this state probably yet leads in the production of strawberries, and, as the story of the prize winnings at the Western apple exhibitions go to show, can grow apples of as fine quality as can be produced in any other region. But apples are not grown as extensively in Maryland as in some regions of the West or in some of the counties in the northwestern section of New York. There are few orchards in Maryland that cover 100 acres, while in Oregon and the State of Washington 200, 300 and even 1,000 acre orchards are to be found.

Apples should be more extensively grown as a market crop in this state. There are reports from the Western apple sections of growers realizing $200 net per acre from their apple orchards. If this sort of profits can be made out of apples in Colorado or Oregon, equally good results can be realized here in Maryland. This state has the proper climate and the right kind of soil for growing apples, but watchful and intelligent care is necessary here, as everywhere, to the accomplishment of ideal results in applegrowing or in any other branch of fruit culture.

Drink of Whiskey Kills Boy.

Ralph Hemphill, aged 8 years, son of John Hemphill, of Downville, Washington county, died as the result of a drink of whiskey taken from a bottle in a banter with his brother, Farber Hemphill, aged 10 years. Wyncoop Shipley, uncle of the boys, took the whiskey home and put it into a cupboard, where the boys found it. Farber swallowed a quantity of the liquor, but it did not stay on his stomach. Ralph drank a quantity and fell over in a spasm. A physician was summoned, but the boy died in a few hours.

APPLICANTS FOR ENUMERATORS

Should File Their Papers On Or Before January 25.

A call for more applicants for places as census enumerators has been issued by supervisor of census John J. Stump. He urges all persons in his district desiring to serve to obtain their application forms at once and to file them with him before January 25, when he must stop considering new applications in order to prepare for the "test" of the previous applicants on February 5. After this he will examine and rate the papers until about February 22, when he will forward his list of designations as enumerators, with their "test" papers, to Census Director Durand, who will carefully go over and rerate the papers of the successful candidates before giving his consent to the issue of commissions to them by the supervisor. By the middle or latter part of March all the enumerators will have been commissioned and in receipt of detailed instructions concerning their work.

To quiet any qualms relative to the "test" of the qualifications of applicants, to be made February 5, the supervisor has obtained some information from the Census Director concerning the "test" of Twelfth Census enumerators. It has been officially stated that the 1910 "test will be very similar to the one in the preceding census and will consist in requiring applicants to fill sample schedules from printed narratives concerning census facts. As the rural enumerators are to carry both the population and agricultural schedule, they will be "tested" with samples of both, but the city enumerators, who carry the population schedule alone, will be required to prove their ability by filling a sample of that schedule.

The "test" population schedule narrative in 1900 was in part, as follows:

"The enumerator of the forty-fifth enumeration district of the ninth supervisor's district of the State of Pennsylvania, in the village of Port Royal, Londonderry Township, Schuylkill County, begins his enumeration June 1, 1900, at No. 201 Burton street.

"This house is occupied by a single family, consisting of Patrick O'Leary, his wife, Margaret, and his son, James.

"Patrick came to this country from Ireland (where he was born of Irish parents) in May, 1870, when he was just 22 years old. Three years after his arrival he was married to an Irish girl who had come over from his native village a year before. As soon as possible he became naturalized. He can read and write and speak English, and owns a good house, free of incumbrance, which he has bought from his earnings, as a teamster, in which occupation he has had steady work during the past year.

"Margaret, his wife, is also of Irish parentage, and was born in January, and is nearly four years younger than her husband. She has had two children, only one of whom is living. She can read and speak English, but has to make her "mark" for her signature.

"James was born in Harrisburg, February, 1875. He has a good common school education, works at any sort of day labor, and secured nine months' steady work during the past year. He is not married.

"In the next house, 203 Burton street, the enumerator found an English woman by the name of Mrs. Jane Parker, a widow, occupying a rented house with her single daughter, Virginia, and her married daughter, Nellie E., and the husband of the latter, Albert Johnson.

"Mrs. Parker came to this country 34 years ago, has a good education, is a dressmaker by trade, and has constant employment. She was 50 years old last April, and is of Scottish birth on her mother's side. She has had four children, three of whom are living and one of whom has died.

"Virginia is of English parentage, has been through the local schools and has been a saleswoman for eight months of the past year; she was born in Philadelphia in March, 1877.

"Nellie E. was 28 years old last January, and has but recently married. She was born in Baltimore, reads, writes and speaks English.

"Albert Johnson, the husband of Nellie, was born in New York City, of Welsh parents, November, 1865. He is in the grocery business and keeps his own books and accounts."

It seems comparatively simple, according to the supervisor, to draw out of the above statement the required details for the population schedule and to enter them under the proper column divisions relating to location, name, relationship, personal description, nativity, citizenship, occupation, education, etc.

About all such a "test" can do is to evidence the legibility of an applicant's handwriting and his ability to determine where to write in the sample schedule the facts clearly stated in the narrative.

The agricultural schedule narrative for 1909 was very similar, except that the facts stated relate to farms and farming operations.

Before the "test" February 5, the supervisor will send each applicant a list of instructions concerning filling in the "test" schedules, which will still further simplify the subject and insure the passing of the test by those who possess only an ordinary common school education and practical common sense.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT

Cash System Adopted By J. M. Davis & Sons.

OAKLAND, MD., January, 1910.

For several years we have endeavored to show our customers the necessity of buying for cash and on January 1st, 1907, adopted a cash system. The plan was fair to all but for various reasons was not carried out as fully as it should have been. We now find many open accounts on our books, all of which are due and should be paid, the majority of them small, but amounting to several thousand dollars, scattered among several hundred people and in many cases difficult to know just where they live or how to reach them with a statement of their account, and when we do find them our experience has been that less than ten per cent. remit promptly and in many cases the account is lost or expense of collection takes all profit so that those who pay cash have to pay profit enough to overcome such losses or buy the goods where they can get them at cash prices from the merchant who sells for cash.

We are trying in every way possible to sell our class of goods as low as they are sold in our large towns and business centers, but in order to do this must insist on carrying out the cash system, or where time is given, a note that can be used.

Should you owe us a bill we hope you will make arrangements to pay us promptly as we must collect up all old accounts, and where it is impossible to pay cash close the account by note on or before March 1st, as our plan is not to charge any goods on open account after that date and then to place unsettled accounts in the hands of a collector.

We want your trade and have gone to great expense to have an up-to-date hardware and house furnishing store and propose to treat everyone as fair as possible and to sell goods at rock bottom prices to cash buyers or to parties giving their note who are worthy of credit.

The manufacturers, jobbers and merchants in general are all adopting a cash system, especially on steel goods, and it is impossible for merchants to sell goods on the same terms and make the profit of former years. This has been brought about by the methods adopted and selling for cash at a small per cent. to draw trade from our smaller towns and country districts, thus making it necessary for the smaller merchants to adopt similar plans instead of carrying the accounts on their books.

We are making this change for several excellent reasons and only after carefully considering all sides of the question. We believe it will be in every way a distinct gain to our customers even more than to ourselves.

In a cash business all losses on bad accounts, for whatever cause, are avoided; bookkeeping and collection expenses are done away with; there is no possibility of disputes and wrangles over accounts; the merchant always has ready money to buy goods at the lowest spot cash prices and to profit by all discounts.

To make up for these losses and various expenses we have been forced to charge enough for our goods to cover them by the profits. Every store doing business on a credit basis must do this—or quit.

The people of this community want low prices, they want us to meet outside competition, to which they must pay cash. We can do it on a cash basis—in fact can guaraatee you at least a good per cent. saving on your purchases.

This change of policy does not mean a sacrifice of quality or going back on the standards we have set ourselves. In every single item we can and shall give you better goods for the same price or the same article for less where there has not been an advance in prices.

This change, too, implies no question of our reflection on anyone's ability to pay what he honestly owes or his willingness—it simply gives us the means to serve all our customers better.

The generous patronage you have given us we appreciate. We want you to continue it and shall make it richly worth your while by the much closer prices cash business will enable us to quote.

Mail and telephone orders will receive prompt attention, payable on receipt and approval of goods.

Trusting that our plans and service will meet with your approval and that we may have a continued share of your patronage, we remain,

Yours,

J. M. DAVIS & SONS.

MEMORIAL SERVICE SUNDAY.

The Late David McCarty Remembered By St. Paul's Sunday School.

An interesting and impresssive service was held by St. Paul's M. E. Sunday school at the close of the session Sunday last.

Notice had been received that Mr. David McCarty, of Iowa, had passed away a few days before and as he was a scholar in this school, back in its early days, and was the son of the late Isaac McCarty, the founder, and its first superintendent, it was deemed proper that a memorial service be held and his death be made a matter of record in the school archives.

Many interesting reminders of the old days were brought in and were on exhibition after the service. Among them was the old family bible of the Loar family, bound in calf skin, in use almost a hundred years, and which in all probability was used at the first session of the school, for it was at the old Loar homestead, near Oakland, the school was organized in 1829. The old book was used on this occasion to read the scripture lesson from. Among the other relics was the minutes of the organization of the school and the old class books. On the latter were noticed the names of a few of the scholars of those old days who still survive, but the large majority have gone over to the other side to test the realties of the things they were then taught. Among the names we find William White of Joseph, Nicholas Merrill, Abraham J. Wilson, Mrs. Helen Ashby and possibly one or two more. All of these have now passed their 80th milestone and one is well up in the 90's.

The services were opened by an old but appropriate hymn, after which assistant superintendent, Mr. E. H. Sincell, in a few well chosen remarks, presented the following resolution:

WHEREAS, Information has come to Saint Paul's Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, that on the 20th day of December last, at his home near Fairfield, Iowa, David McCarty, Esq., one of the pioneer members of this school, passed from earth to Heaven full of years and in the enjoyment of the Christian's hope of eternal life and bliss beyond the grave.

AND WHEREAS, Mr. McCarty was a member of this Sunday school as far back as the year 1834, when his father, the late Col. Isaac McCarty was its Superintendent, whose memory is revered as its founder, more than three-quarters of a century ago.

AND WHEREAS, David McCarty continued as a member of this school until 1854, when he removed to Iowa, where he was identified with the same line of work until called to his heaveniy reward.

AND WHEREAS, From the time of the death of his father, Col. Isaac McCarty, until the year 1904, the early and now priceless records of this school were carefully preserved by David McCarty, at which time he delivered the same to our beloved Superintendent. Rev. John M. Davis; therefore be it

Resolved, By Saint Paul's Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, Oakland, Maryland, that in the death of David McCarty the Church militant has lost one of its most faithful and respected members, but the Church triumphant has been enriched by the ingathering of a soul that will be a prince unto the King; and be it further

Resolved, That for the death of David McCarty, we mourn not as those who have no hope, knowing that he has entered into the rest provided for the children of God; and be it further

Resolved, That we owe a debt of lasting gratitude to David McCarty for faithfully preserving the early records of this school, and delivering them to us to be handed down to posterity as a part of the history of primitive Christian endeavor in this community.

Let us incorporate, as a further memorial to him, some of his last words to this school, open the occasion of the celebration of its Seventy-fifth anniversary, June 1904 1904.

"Go forward, fear not, falter not, be steadfast, be true;
"Though the way may seemed closed,
t will upon for you,
Your faith may be tried, but the sea
will divide,
And Jesus, the Savior, will pilot you through."

And be it further resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the school, and a copy be forwarded to the family of the deceased.

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
FRED. A. THAYER.

Oakland, Maryland, January 9, 1910.

Rev. John M. Davis, superintendent emerituis, then addressed the school. His remarks were very appropriate to the occasion, recalling many of the scenes of the old days, and extolling the life of this former scholar, and exhorting the members of the school to follow in his footsteps. The resolutions were adopted by a rising vote, after which Rev. Williamson, the pastor of the church, offered an impressive and touching prayer and the services closed with another appropriate hymn.

Work Will Be Heavy.

According to the statements made by officials of the B. & O. railroad regarding plans for betterment and maintenance work during the coming summer, expenditures by the maintenance department will exceed those of any previous year. Early in January of each year division officials send reports to general headquarters showing the amount of money required to keep tracks in condition during the year. Some of the divisions are asking for about 50 per cent more money than was expended in 1909 and about 10 per cent more than was appropriated in 1907. It is pointed out that on account of the retrenchment on the line maintenance work since August 1, 1907, has been comparatively light.

The Oakland Electric Company

Mr. Julius K. Monroe, of Kingwood, West Va., was in Oakland Monday and Tuesday making a preliminary observation of the water power at Swallow Falls and the grading necesary to build a railway from that point to Oakland and Mountain Lake Park. Mr. Monroe came here at the solicitation of Mr. Hiram P. Tasker, who has for several years devoted his time and energies in getting this property before capitalists and electrical engineers with the view of building and equipping a railway to be operated by electricity to be developed by the waters of Swallow Falls.

Mr. Samuel Lawton and his two sons, Messrs. Arthur and Will, have formed a copartnership and will embark in steam and electrical engineering, gas fitting, etc., in a room yet to be secured, but which will be centrally located. The gentlemen composing the firm are all practical men and work entrusted to them will be satisfactorily executed.

The funeral of ex-conductor John Faherty, son of Mrs. Mary Faherty, who died Monday at Hutton, of a dropsical affection, took place Thursday morning at Oakland, with services in St. Peter's Church, Rev. Connell officiating. Interment was made in the Catholic cemetery. Quite a large concourse of relatives and friends attended the funeral, including former associates in the B. and O. railroad service.

Mr. G. A. Fraley went to Baltimore Tuesday afternoon where he will remain until after his wife, who is a patient at Johns Hopkins Hospital, is operated upon for the removal of a tumor which has formed upon her brain. Mrs. Fraley's condition, from last reports, were not at all unfavorable for her ultimate recovery but a serious and somewhat dangerous operation will be necessary and which will be performed either today or tomorrow.

"Old Farmer Hopkins," which was presented in the opera house in Oakland Tuesday night and repeated last night, was well attended and a handsome sum was realized by the Mountain City Band, under whose auspices the play was presented by Mr. Frank S. Davidson and a company composed of local talent. Every one taking part in the presentation of this highly entertaining pastoral play acquitted themselves admirably. The music before the play and between the acts was furnished by the band.

These are the days for sausage. There is no use for a person to stick up his nose at sausage, for sausage is good when it is made right. It is the response of the food world to the polar breeze that blows through the morning. It is as sweet as a plate of strawberries on a mild June day. But it must be made right. Good sausage is an art product. It is made up of judgment, taste and skill. It is a combination of ingredients that correlate with one another as the fragrance and the blush of the rose. The butcher doesn't understand this. Generally he throws in some scraps and odds and ends, and especially the odds, dabs on some salt, pepper and sage, grinds it out, and the confiding customer buys it because it is sausage. He doesn't like it very well, but he eats it, and everything goes. The other day we saw a customer in a meat shop direct the making of his own sausage. He selected the meat, simonpure cuts off the best parts, had it ground and took it home to season it there. That man knows how to take care of himself. He knows art from a bull's foot. He appreciates the true sentiment of sausage.

Riches in Small Things

One of the greatest problems of any business is how to keep expenses down and yet maintain the necessary standard required not only to keep the business going but to increase it, if possible, year by year. Minimum of expense and maximum of efficiency are the watchwords of all successful business enterprises.

It is an old story to keen observers of business economies that the largest savings often are to be gained in the seemingly unimportant things, the everyday needs that most people accept as they find them and never think to change. The man who invented the metal top containing erasers for lead pencils made a fortune out of the little contrivance. Stumps of trees left in denuded forests are vertable gold mines, now that lumber is high, discarded automobile tires and other rubber articles are worked over into new goods at immense profits. And so it goes.

For years a well-known business man of Cumberland paid out large sums for coal and electric light. He did so because other business men were doing the same thing. Then he decided to depart from the custom of years, and he installed natural gas. What happened is told in the following letter:

Hotel Anderson, 13 and 14 Front Street.
Cumberland, Md., July 27, 1909.

GENTLEMEN—I used natural gas during the year 1908 in my hotel for cooking and lighting, AND I WOULD NOT USE ANYTHING ELSE, AS I AM BETTER OFF FINANCIALLY BY THE INSTALLATION. For the complete year my gas bills were $133.25. The year before, 1907, I paid for electric light $295; coal, $92.50; a total of $387.50, THUS SAVING ME $254.25 FOR THE YEAR, not to mention the saving in labor and dirt that goes with coal.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) J. D. ANDERSON.

—o—

Pretty good saving for a year, isn't it? Better, yet, when you stop to think that Mr. Anderson will continue indefinitely putting money into his own pocket this way.

Mr. Anderson, like many others now using natural gas, had to equip his hotel for its use. The cost of installation, including running of lines, two gas ranges, five heating stoves, four inside arc lights, two outside arc lights, water heater and numerous small lights, was $135.

In other words he fitted out his hotel with natural gas and SAVED ENOUGH MONEY out of his first year's savings TO PAY FOR THE WORK AND EQUIPMENT AND STILL HAVE $119.25 LEFT to put in the bank. Think it over!

Easter Occurs Late in March.

Easter comes exceptionally early this year, in fact, earlier than any other year since 1900. The first full moon after March 22 will appear March 25, therefore, Easter, which is always the first Sunday after this occurence, will be March 27. Easter will not be so early again, except in 1913, when it comes on March 23, until 1921, when it falls on the same date as this year.

It is also observed that in regard to double holidays 1910 will give us one more than 1909, since Lincoln's birthday comes on a Saturday. Memorial day, as well as Independence day, comes on a Monday, while Christmas falls on a Sunday which will, in all probability, be observed the following Monday.

Special Services.

Monday evening a series of meetings conducted by Rev. G. R. Williamson, were begun in St. Paul's M. E. church. The services are being largely attended and an interest being manifested by many.

DRUMMER BOY OF RAPPAHANNOCK

Major Robert H. Hendershot Will Entertain Under the Auspices of the Schools.

Saturday evening, January 22nd, at the opera house, Major Robert Henry Hendershot, the "Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock," and his son, J. C. Hendershot, will give an entertainment under the auspices and for the benefit of the Oakland public schools

Major Hendershot has made a world tour with his drums and the music he hammers out of them. He will bring with him letters of recommendation from no less than four Presidents, including Abraham Lincoln and General Grant.

It is said that the Major's imitation of a battle and his imitation and explanation of an engine on a railway when going at full speed is worth twice the admission to the entertainment.

THE GIFT OF THE MAGI.

A Christmas Chronicle of Love and Dual Sacrifice.

By O. HENRY.

[Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.]

One dollar and eighty-seven cents; that was all. And 60 cents of it was in pennies—pennies saved one and two at a time by bulldozing the grocer and the vegetable man and the butcher until one's cheeks burned with the silent imputation of parsimony that such close dealing implied. Three times Della counted it. One dollar and eighty-seven cents. And the next day would be Christmas.

There was clearly nothing to do but flop down on the shabby little couch and howl. So Della did it. Which instigates the moral reflection that life is made up of sobs, sniffles and smiles, with sniffles predominating.

While the mistress of the home is gradually subsiding from the first stage to the second, take a look at the home. A furnished flat at $8 per week. It did not exactly beggar description, but it certainly had that word on the lookout for the mendicancy squad.

In the vestibule below was a letter box into which no letter would go and an electric button from which no mortal finger could coax a ring. Also appertaining thereunto was a card bearing the name "Mr. James Dillingham Young."

The "Dillingham" had been flung to the breeze during a former period of prosperity when its possessor was being paid $30 per week. Now, when the income was shrunk to $20, the letters of "Dillingham" looked blurred, as though they were thinking seriously of contracting to a modest and unassuming D. But whenever Mr. James Dillingham Young came home and reached his flat above he was called "Jim" and greatly hugged by Mrs. James Dillingham Young, already introduced to you as Della. Which is all very good.

Della finished her cry and attended to her cheeks with the powder rag. She stood by the window and looked out dully at a gray cat walking a gray fence in a gray back yard. Tomorrow would be Christmas day, and she had only $1.87 with which to buy Jim a present. She had been saving every penny she could for months, with this result. Twenty dollars a week doesn't go far. Expenses had been greater than she had calculated. They always are. Only $1.87 to buy a present for Jim—her Jim! Many a happy hour she had spent planning for something nice for him, something fine and rare and sterling, something just a little bit near to being worthy of the honor of being owned by Jim.

There was a pier glass between the windows of the room. Perhaps you have seen a pier glass in an eight dollar flat. A very thin and very agile person may by observing his reflection in a rapid sequence of longitudinal strips obtain a fairly accurate conception of his looks. Della, being slender, had mastered the art.

Suddenly she whirled from the window and stood before the glass. Her eyes were shining brilliantly, but her face had lost its color within twenty seconds. Rapidly she pulled down her hair and let it fall to its full length.

Now, there were two possessions of the James Dillingham Youngs in which they both took a mighty pride. One was Jim's gold watch, which had been his father's and his grandfather's. The other was Della's hair. Had the queen of Sheba lived in the flat across the air shaft Della would have let her hair hang out the window some day to dry just to depreciate her majesty's jewels and gifts. Had King Solomon been the janitor, with all his treasures piled up in the basement, Jim would have pulled out his watch every time he passed just to see him pluck at his beard from envy.

"TWENTY DOLLARS," SAID MADAME.

So now Della's beautiful hair fell about her, rippling and shining like a cascade of brown waters. It reached below her knee and made itself almost a garment for her. And then she did it up again nervously and quickly. Once she faltered for a minute and stood still, while a tear or two splashed on the worn red carpet.

On went her old brown jacket; on went her old brown hat. With a whirl of skirts and with the brilliant sparkle still in her eyes she fluttered out the door and down the stairs to the street.

Where she stopped the sign read: "Mme. Sofronie. Hair Goods of All Kinds." One flight up Della ran and collected herself, panting. Madame, large, too white, chilly, hardly looked the "Sofronie."

"Will you buy my hair?" asked Della.

"I buy hair," said madame. "Take yer hat off and let's have a sight at the looks of it."

Down rippled the brown cascade.

"Twenty dollars," said madame, lifting the mass with a practiced hand.

"Give it to me quick," said Della.

Oh, and the next two hours tripped by on rosy wings. Forget the hashed metaphor. She was ransacking the stores for Jim's present.

She found it at last. It surely had been made for Jim and no one else. There was no other like it in any of the stores, and she had turned all of them inside out. It was a platinum fob chain, simple and chaste in design, properly proclaiming its value by substance alone and not by meretricious ornamentation, as all good things should do. It was even worthy of the watch. As soon as she saw it she knew that it must be Jim's. It was like him. Quietness and value—the description applied to both. Twenty-one dollars they took from her for it, and she hurried home with the 87 cents. With that chain on his watch Jim might be properly anxious about the time in any company. Grand as the watch was, he sometimes looked at it on the sly on account of the old leather strap that he used in place of a chain.

When Della reached home her intoxication gave way a little to prudence and reason. She got out her curling irons and lighted the gas and went to work repairing the ravages made by generosity added to love, which is always a tremendous task, dear friends—a mammoth task.

Within forty minutes her head was covered with tiny, close lying curls that made her look wonderfully like a truant schoolboy. She looked at her reflection in the mirror long, carefully and critically.

"If Jim doesn't kill me," she said to herself, "before he takes a second look at me he'll say I look like a Coney Island chorus girl. But what could I do—oh, what could I do with $1.87?"

At 7 o'clock the coffee was made and the frying pan was on the back of the stove, hot and ready to cook the chops.

Jim was never late. Della doubled the fob chain in her hand and sat on the corner of the table near the door that he always entered. Then she heard his step on the stair away down on the first flight, and she turned white for just a moment. She had a habit of saying little silent prayers about the simplest everyday things, and now she whispered, "Please, God, make him think I am still pretty."

The door opened, and Jim stepped in and closed it. He looked thin and very serious. Poor fellow! He was only twenty-two—and to be burdened with a family! He needed a new overcoat, and he was without gloves.

Jim stopped inside the door, as immovable as a setter at the scent of quail. His eyes were fixed upon Della, and there was an expression in them that she could not read, and it terrified her. It was not anger nor surprise nor disapproval nor horror nor any of the sentiments that she had been prepared for. He simply stared at her fixedly with that peculiar expression on his face.

Della wriggled off the table and went for him.

"Jim, darling," she cried, "don't look at me that way! I had my hair cut off and sold it because I couldn't have lived through Christmas without giving you a present. It'll grow out again. You won't mind, will you? I just had to do it. My hair grows awfully fast. Say 'Merry Christmas,' Jim and let's be happy. You don't know what a nice—what a beautiful, nice gift I've got for you."

"You've cut off your hair?" asked Jim laboriously, as if he had not arrived at that patent fact yet even after the hardest mental labor.

"Cut it off and sold it," said Della. "Don't you like me just as well anyhow? I'm me without my hair, ain't I?"

Jim looked about the room curiously.

"You say your hair is gone?" he said, with an air almost of idiocy.

"You needn't look for it," said Della. "It's sold, I tell you—sold and gone too. It's Christmas eve, boy. Be good to me, for it went for you. Maybe the hairs of my head were numbered," she went on, with a sudden serious sweetness, "but nobody could ever count my love for you. Shall I put the chops on, Jim?"

Out of his trance Jim seemed quickly to wake. He infolded his Della. For ten seconds let us regard with discreet scrutiny some inconsequential object in the other direction. Eight dollars a week or a million a year—what is the difference? A mathematician or a wit would give you the wrong answer. The magi brought valuable gifts, but that was not among them. This dark assertion will be illuminated later on.

Jim drew a package from his overcoat pocket and threw it upon the table.

"Don't make any mistake, Dell," he said, "about me. I don't think there's anything in the way of a hair cut or a shave or a shampoo that could make me like my girl any less. But if you'll unwrap that package you may see why you had me going awhile at first."

White fingers and nimble tore at the string and paper, and then an ecstatic scream of joy, and then alas, a quick feminine change to hysterical tears and wails, necessitating the immediate employment of all the comforting powers of the lord of the flat.

For there lay the combs, the set of combs, side and back, that Della had worshiped for long in a Broadway window—beautiful combs, pure tortoise shell, with jeweled rims, just the shade to wear in the beautiful vanished hair. They were expensive combs, she knew, and her heart had simply craved and yearned over them without the least hope of possession. And now they were hers, but the tresses that should have adorned the coveted adornments were gone.

But she hugged them to her bosom, and at length she was able to look up with dim eyes and a smile and say, "My hair grows so fast, Jim!"

And then Della leaped up like a little singed cat and cried, "Oh, oh!"

Jim had not yet seen his beautiful present. She held it out to him eagerly upon her open palm. The dull precious metal seemed to flash with a reflection of her bright and ardent spirit.

"Isn't it a dandy, Jim? I hunted all over town to find it. You'll have to look at the time a hundred times a day now. Give me your watch. I want to see how it looks on it."

"THEY'RE TOO NICE TO USE AT PRESENT."

Instead of obeying, Jim tumbled down on the couch and put his hands under the back of his head and smiled.

"Dell," said he, "let's put our Christmas presents away and keep 'em awhile. They're too nice to use just at present. I sold the watch to get the money to buy your combs. And now suppose you put the chops on."

The magi, as you know, were wise men—wonderfully wise men—who carried gifts to the Babe in the manger. They invented the art of giving Christmas presents. Being wise, their gifts were no doubt wise ones, possibly bearing the privilege of exchange in case of duplication. And here I have lamely related to you the uneventful chronicle of two foolish children in a flat who most unwisely sacrificed for each other the greatest treasures of their house. But in a last word to the wise of these days let it be said that of all who give gifts these two were the wisest. Of all who give and receive gifts such as they are wisest. Everywhere they are wisest. They are the magi.

Music as Medicine.

From the days of Saul and David music has no doubt been the means of alleviating, if not of actually curing, many serious cases of mental disease. Modern experience has proved this conclusively, and many instances may be quoted from ancient history.

Pythagoras commended music in the treatment of the insane, and Thales when a pestilence ravaged Sparta found in music his most powerful means of combating it. Henocrates soothed maniacs by it, and Theophrastus held that even the bites of venomous reptiles were rendered less fatal by subjecting the victims to the influence of melody.

When Philip of Spain was in a morbid and desponding condition Farinelli, the vocalist, was sent for by the queen, with a party of musicians, to sing and play in the adjoining room. The effect was a speedy and rapid cure.

Both Buckman and Hafeland relate instances in which music has cured cases of St. Vitus' dance, and Becker and Schneider demonstrated practically its influence in different cases of hysteria.

The Sheridan Wit.

Thomas Sheridan, the Irish clergyman and grandfather of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, the dramatist, had a great distaste for metaphysical discussions, whereas his son Tom, the actor, had a great liking for them. Tom one day tried to discuss with his father the doctrine of necessity.

"Pray, father," said he, "did you ever do anything in a state of perfect indifference—without motive, I mean, of some kind of other?"

Sheridan, who saw what was coming, said, "Yes; certainly."

"Indeed?"

"Yes, indeed."

"What, total indifference—total, entire, thorough indifference?"

"Yes, total, entire, thorough indifference."

"My dear father," said Tom, "tell me what it is that you can do with total, entire, thorough indifference?"

"Why, listen to you, Tom," said Sheridan.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson III.—First Quarter, For Jan. 16, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. iv, 12-25. Memory Verse, 23—Golden Text, Matt. iv, 16—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Luke tells us that Jesus, being full of the Holy Ghost, was led by the Spirit into the wilderness, being forty days tempted of the devil, and that after the temptation Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee (Luke iv, 1, 2, 14). If we desire a sequence of the events in His life we may have to consider before His return to Galilee the whole of John i, 19, to iv, 54. But, confining ourselves as far as possible to our lesson portion, we should consider John's brief ministry and the reason of his imprisonment. He was filled with the Holy Spirit from his birth, and Jesus said of him, "Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist" (Luke i, 15; vii, 28). He was a Spirit filled, God sent man, in very truth the Lord's messenger. Yet his ministry was not what men count a success. Just a few months' public ministry, then imprisonment because he dared to rebuke sin in high places (Mark vi, 17-19), and then his martyrdom to please a wicked woman. But he was approved of God from first to last, and some time we'll understand. The devil could not conquer Jesus Christ, but he was permitted to torment and to kill His faithful messenger.

In connection with Jesus leaving Nazareth to make His home in Capernaum we must read Luke iv, 16-31, and note how, after He had in the power of the Spirit read the Scriptures and spoken in the synagogue at Nazareth, His own townsmen thrust Him out of the city and attempted to kill Him. Then He came and dwelt in Capernaum, and great was the privilege of that city; yet see His words concerning it in Matt. xi, 23, 24.

Notice the oft repeated phrase "that it might be fulfilled" (chapters i, 22; ii, 15, 23; iv, 14; viii, 17; xxi, 4; xxvi, 56; xxvii, 35, etc.) and remember His resurrection words in Luke xxiv, 44, "All things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses and in the prophets and in the Psalms concerning Me." The quotation in our lesson from Isa. ix, 1, 2, leads on to verses 6, 7, and the King and the kingdom. So also in Isa. xlii, 6, 7, where He is spoken of as a light of the gentiles, the context says that He shall not fail nor be discouraged till He have set judgment in the earth (verse 4), or, in other words, till His kingdom comes. The darkness is everywhere, and is increasing, and we are right into the apostasy of unbelief and the setting aside of the written word and the living word of which we have in the word been forewarned. "For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth and gross darkness the people, but the Lord shall arise upon thee (Israel), and His glory shall be seen upon thee, and the nations shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising" (Isa. lx, 1-3). Jesus preached, as John had done, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (iii, 2; iv, 17), but both John and Jesus were slain and the kingdom was postponed till the risen and ascended Christ shall come again in power and glory preceded by the real Elijah, as foretold by Malachi and confirmed by Jesus (Mal. iv, 5, 6; Matt. xvii, 10-13). Read the last passage most carefully and see how the real Elijah shall be to Christ's second coming what John was to his first coming. Acknowledging that John had come in the spirit and power of Elijah and had been rejected, He says in unmistakable words, "Elijah truly shall first come."

Meanwhile He is calling unto Himself out of the world those who are willing to remain in the world as His witnesses, counting all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Himself and the glory of His kingdom. If we will follow Him it must be by denial or renunciation of self and a willingness to die daily that His life may be seen in us (Matt. xvi, 24, 25; II Cor. iv, 11). But He does not call us to this unworldly life without setting before us the kingdom, the glory and the rewards (Matt. xvi, 27, to xvii, 9). When Peter on one occasion said, "Behold, we have forsaken all and followed Thee—what shall we have, therefore?" Jesus told him of a new earth with the Son of Man in the throne of His glory and the twelve apostles on twelve thrones ruling the twelve tribes of Israel (Matt. xix, 27, 28). But listen to the last of the seven promises to the overcomers in Rev. iii, 21, and think of being with Him on His throne. He told Abram of the city which hath foundations; Moses had respect unto the recompense of the reward; Paul said that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us, but to the majority of believers today there seems to be no future glory worth mentioning, nothing and no one for which or for whom it is worth while to renounce the follies of this ungodly age and the pleasures of sin for a season. As Jesus went about all Galilee accompanied by His few faithful followers He preached the gospel of the kingdom and healed all manner of sickness and disease. He did not tell them to prepare to die, but told them of life eternal which He would freely give them, including the forgiveness of all their sins.

NEED OF THE HOUR.

A Closer Union in the Work of Grange Lecturers.

The Lecturer of the Michigan State Grange Suggests Specific Methods For Improving Present Conditions. Value of Directed Effort.

[Special Correspondence.]

"What in your opinion would strengthen the grange and grange work today?" you ask.

A closer union among the various lecture departments, national, state, pomona and subordinate. On the basis that the greatest mission of the grange is educational and that the lecturer occupies the position of a teacher, the organization should develop strong constructive plans for exploring and pre-empting the full possibilities of the lecture hour. The system with which its educational work is conducted should be made co-ordinate with that of other similar institutions devoted to agricultural and rural social uplift. As a whole, we will do our best under an aggressive, stimulating and directing force, emanating from the highest and permeating every degree of the order.

Some of the specific methods by which this closer union might be encouraged are:

First.—Through communications and advising by correspondence of the national lecturer with under lecturers.

Second.—Through up to date printed matter relating to grange history, accomplishments, progressive methods and present methods, made available for distribution from the national and state offices.

Third.—Through a few broad topics suggested to form the basis of uniformity in program work and to secure concentration of discussion throughout the order within a given time.

Fourth.—Through lecturers' conferences (a) at national sessions, which state granges should encourage and perhaps assist their lecturers to attend; (b) at state sessions, which pomona and subordinate granges should encourage and sometimes assist their lecturers to attend; (c) at pomona sessions, which subordinate granges should encourage their lecturers to attend.

THE GRANGE NEEDED.

It Must Aid In Keeping the Young Men on the Farm.

The drift of young people from rural homes to the city has shifted a heavier burden to the shoulders of those who remain, says a writer in the National Stockman. We no longer have the old methods of entertaining the young people in the country that were common forty years ago, when every schoolhouse had its singing school and literary society. The opera and moving picture shows are only in the towns. The bowling alleys, billiard hall, poolrooms and card tables are there also.

There is no better method of overcoming all these difficulties than to have in every community a good, live grange. It encourages education. It promotes social relations. It aids the backward. It broadens the horizon. It elevates the morals. It teaches thrift and economy. It promulgates new ideas and demonstrates old themes. It develops a progressive farmer who is equal to those in any other calling. It makes of farming a profession, dealing with scientific facts fully established. It dignifies labor and raises the toiling husbandman to a higher plane than he ever before has occupied. It is no new thing. For forty years it has toiled for the benefit of the masses. It is no untried thing. Its demands have been heard by congress and state legislatures. It seeks no mere selfish ends. All its past has been marked by widespread benefits.

Dimit, Not Demit.

In seeking honorable dismission from a grange a member secures a card known as a "dimit." This word is often spelled incorrectly "demit," for which there seems to be no valid reason. A writer in the American Agriculturist gives the correct derivation of the word as from the Latin dimittere, to send away. Webster defines it as to dismiss, let go or release. Demit is derived from the Latin demittere, to send or bring down, to lower. A dimit from an organization does not lower one, and no grange should accept bylaws from its committee with such spelling in the text.

Those senators and congressmen holding down the grange's demand for parcels post, postal savings banks and the grange good roads bill will never have any monuments raised to popular subscription, says the National Stockman.

National Secretary Freeman was one of the speakers upon the agricultural special run over the C. H. and D. lines in Ohio. Other speakers were Coverdale of Harmon and Secretary Snyder of the Ohio state board of agriculture.

Pennsylvania state grange will meet in the auditorium of the State college Dec. 21-24.

THE CHOICEST SPOT.

BY being busy with his work
Man misses lots of things
That to his gentle better half
Much solid comfort brings.
He cannot waste a single hour
In rushing toward old age,
And so he doesn't take the time
To read the women's page.

And that is why he doesn't know
The latest style in hair,
And what is new in winter hats
Or what a child should wear,
And how a party or a tea
Should be pulled off, and not Take all the money in the world
To boil one dainty pot.

He doesn't know what Paris has
To offer to the trade
Or what is proper for the house
Or what for a parade.
He thinks a hat is just a hat,
A gown is just a gown.
He knows not should the waist be hig
Or moved three inches down.

He doesn't know the newest way
A salad should be mixed,
And it is not within his ken
How tables should be fixed.
He knows it has no sporting news
When baseball is the rage
And misses half the joy because
He skips the women's page.

"How do you like the chicken?" asked the smiling host.

"Very fine," replied the polite guests in unison.

"The reason I asked you is because it died a natural death, and I was wondering if it made any difference in the flavor."

"Natural death!" exclaimed one of the others gasped and turned pale.

"Sure. We killed it with an ax. Isn't that a natural death for a chicken to die?"

TAFT USES THE AX; PINCHOT'S HEAD DROPS

Chief Forester Summarily Dismissed for Attack on Administration.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 7.—ifford Pinchot, chief forester, Dertment of Agriculture, was reved from office tonight by Sectary Wilson on orders from Presnt Taft. Overton Price, assoate forester, and Alexander Shaw sistant law officer in the fo esy service were also fired. This akes a clean sweep of every oosevelt official, who aided L. . Garvis in formulating his harges against Secretary Ballinr. It is said here tonight that ecretary of Agriculture Wilson, Roosevelt holdover, will resign on.

Pinchot's dismissal, it is prected, is likely to cause an open reak between President Taft and r. Roosevelt. The latter it is id, has been advising Pinchot om Africa in his fight against allinger and the politicians toight are predicting that the fur ill fly when Mr. Roosevelt returns in June.

It is felt here that Mr. Pinchot's tion in attacking the administation in a letter to Senator Dolver, made public yesterday, will o Mr. Pinchot more harm than nybody else.

That it was unprecedented for a ordinate to attack his superior the manner adopted by Mr. nchot.

Mr. Pinchot's neck dropped in basket because the President sidered that Mr. Pinchot has mmitted an offence without parel in official life in Washington; cause he has been defiant, inordinate and impertinent, and cause no circumstance connected th the controversy justifies his otinuation in office, since he has icly violated every administeve regulation and the respect in the President of the United tates.

At the White House today the merous callers discussed little se. The President himself had e matter uppermost in his mind. He had no sooner read the facts nected with Mr. Pinchot'c dese of Overton Price, assistant ief forester, and Law Officer aw, in giving to Special Agent avis information upon which to ack the administration, than he at for a number of his cabinet cers and went over with them the facts in his possession.

Today the subject was again n up at the regular cabinet Cting, which lasted two hours, da than the usual time. Mr. an hot's dismissal followed the net meeting, as stated above. ca no to

THE ELECTRICAL HOUSE OF 1910

New Order of Housekeeping Is Introduced.

For years the dream of the housewife has been a home in which all the domestic work could be done by electricity. That dream promises to be realized during the present year. Electricity is now being applied to half a hundred uses in homes and new uses are rapidly being added to this list. New York leads all cities in this movement. More families in New York now do all their cooking by electricity than in any other city. At least a hundred families in New York now do all their cooking by electricity, and there are twelve homes in which all the work—sewing, washing, ironing, sweeping and cooking—is done just by pushing buttons.

The electric kitchen of 1910 is a table with a row of knobs at the back. These knobs are for wire connections. Each utensil has a heater in the bottom. The cook, to set it going, plugs the short wire attached to the stew pan, or whatever it is, into a socket in the back of the table, just as a telephone girl makes a connection, and the pan beats up at once.

A new electric range has just been developed in New York. This looks like an ordinary range. It has pads on the top that are heated red hot by electricity. The cooking is done in ordinary utensils set on the tops of these pads. The new electric range has an oven, also what is known as a quick oven, for pies and similar things.

Besides its use in washing, ironing and cooking, for sweeping and for running the sewing machine and the pianola, electricity will be applied to many other devices in the electrical house of 1910.

The electric razor is one of the most recent innovations. Several are in use in New York. It is built on the principle of the lawn mower. It has several blades that turn at the rate of several thousand revolutions per minute. You connect it with an electric light globe socket and mow your face.

The electric shaving mug is more familiar. It heats the water in the mug. Of course, it will heat water for a nice hot drink. You can even make a cup of hot chocolate in the shaving mug.

Electric toilet articles are numerous already, and, of course, the electrical house of 1910 is equipped with them. Electric massage jiggers are well known. Almost every barber shop has one. A similar looking machine is now made for women. It contains small fans that revolve rapidly and blow a blast of hot or cold air for drying the hair.

The electric corn popper is another novelty. There is no need with the electric popper to wait for good coals. All you have to do is to put the corn in the popper, turn on the electricity and shake.

Electric heaters, of course, have been in use for a long time, and naturally the electrical house of 1910 is heated as well as illuminated by electricity.

The head of a family residing in an electrical house in New York pushes a button that closes the bedroom window before he gets out of bed in the morning. Then he pushes another button and that turns on the electric heater. Before he is out of his bath the water is hot in his electric shaving mug, and a push of the button sets his electric razor humming.

His breakfast is prepared on the electric range, with the bread toasted on the electric toaster on the table. When he has finished he takes his electric motor or an electric train to his office downtown.

After he has departed and the breakfast is out of the way, the house is swept and cleaned by the electrical devices, the linen is washed and ironed, and all the other work is completed with the aid of electricity. When the head of the family returns for dinner at 7 o'clock the meal has been cooked by electricity and is ready to serve.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything; Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

A DANGEROUS DOCTRINE.

It seems that the specialists in the agricultural department at Washington have lately conceived the notion that if the weeds are kept down in a field of corn by hoeing once a week the yield will be as much or more than if tended in the usual way with cultivator. A farmer not far from where the writer lives was asked to give this idea a test, and his report, made a short time ago, is in substance as follows: Six rows twelve rods long were planted in the open field, and during the growing season the only care given the plot was to cut off the weeds once a week with a hoe, while the corn on either side was given the customary treatment with drag and corn plow and also kept clean with hoe. At husking time the four middle rows in the uncultivated plot yielded 301 pounds of corn, while four rows of equal length beside it, cultivated as stated, yielded 261 pounds of corn. According to these figures, the uncultivated corn yielded at the rate of sixty bushels to the acre, while the other yielded but fifty-two bushels. It would seem in view of the enormous loss that is sustained by corn growers of the country annually through lack of proper cultivation of their fields that the above is a mighty risky doctrine for the department at Washington to promulgate. In the first place, so many of the conditions attending the experiment are unknown—namely, the character of the soil, which for the proper circulation of the air and moisture might need little or much cultivation, whether the cultivation given was of the proper kind, how thick the weeds were and how much cultivating the stirring of the soil with a hoe proved to be—that the value of the experiment in proving the idea entertained is largely vitiated. More than all this is the unavoidable fact that even if this hoeing method were preferable the labor situation is such as to make this way of handling any but very limited areas an absolute impossibility. Better would the department devote its energies to proving, as has repeatedly been done, that corn that is cultivated six and seven times during the growing season will yield from eight to twenty bushels more per acre than corn that is cultivated but twice. This is the kind of gospel that needs preaching to the indifferent and careless farmer, who if he were to adopt the hoe method could not be counted on to work the handle as vigorously as would be necessary to give ideal conditions and desired results.

A DEMAND FOR EXPERTS.

One of the boss grafters in a well known western fruit valley gets $5 per day for the time he puts in. This is cited merely to call attention to the fact that any man who will take the pains to equip himself as a practical horticulturist and fruit ranch superintendent can count on getting a generous salary, for there is a lot of money being invested in western orchards, and it is not likely that the wealthy owners will let a matter of $40 or $50 a month stand in the way of their getting the right kind of men to look after their properties. Land that will yield an annual net return of from $300 to $1,500 per acre is going to be well tended both as regards soil and trees, and he is a level headed fellow who fits himself to do this kind of work as it ought to be done.

MORE SUCKERS CAUGHT.

Farmers living near St. Paul who have the past few months shipped eggs, poultry and other stuff to one commission firm under the inducement of high prices offered find themselves bunkoed, the mushroom commission man back of the swindle having made off with about $3,000 of their money and leaving no tracks behind. He hired a store for a month, bought a typewriter and desk on the installment plan and expended enough energy to write and direct a batch of circular letters, resell the stuff shipped him and cash the drafts paid him. This type of swindle is being perpetrated well nigh every month in the year by grafters in large cities who are able to work their game because gullible victims bite at their bait in the shape of an offer of unusually high produce prices.

SMALL TOWN MARKET DAYS.

There are many small towns over the country which have been holding successful market days of late. These have had a social as well as a commercial aspect. People bring stuff of all descriptions which they want to get rid off to town, while just as many are on hand who want some of the articles which are offered for sale. Merchants profit by increase in sales through special price offers. Quite often a sports and amusement program is arranged, which entertains the crowd during the day and ministers to their fun loving instincts. The market day idea is spreading, and it is well that it is so.

The burning of a few strips of zinc in the furnace or cook stove is said to prove effective in removing the soot which has accumulated in the flues and pipes.

There are mighty few men who have the capacity to handle an automobile agency and run a farm or ranch as they ought to be run at the same time. Where this combination is attempted the real estate usually runs downhill.

The man who plants a tree whose shade he may not live to enjoy and of whose fruit he may not partake is a good citizen, for he has faith and is essentially unselfish. The country needs more patriots of this type and among the younger generation as well as the old.

A freak in grafting is reported by two brothers, miners, who have a garden near Delta, Colo. They grafted a scion from a four-year-old apple tree on to a service berry tree body, and in due time the inserted limb blossomed and bore two fine yellow apples. The union is a rather violent one and the results achieved quite unique.

In his book "Swine In America" Secretary Coburn of Kansas cites the case of a Colorado swine raiser who had excellent success with Hubbard squashes as a fattening ration for his pigs, securing a given result in one-half the time that he could with corn. He cut the squashes in pieces and fed them raw, the hogs eating them up clean, shell and all.

The wonderberry war goes merrily on and promises to equal in interest and partisan feeling the Cook-Peary polar scrap. Some folks are found who pronounce the wonderberry a vulgar weed perpetrated on the public at a long price, while as many others are equally warm in singing its praises. It seems to be a case where a fellow must hear the evidence presented and then be his own judge.

Considerably better heating results may be had with the deep fire box of the average steel range if the fire is checked quite a bit shortly after being started, especially if the draft is strong. This causes the flames to rise more directly to the griddles above and not scoot up the chimney unused. The air draft below the fire and the check draft in the pipe may be regulated to secure the above result.

A thought that should be consoling to the large class who have not become seriously inoculated with the money getting microbe is that its possession can add no essential element of content or happiness to lives and homes already provided with the necessities and comforts of life. Happiness is the result of an atmosphere and spirit developed in the heart and home and is not dependent upon the owning of large estates or fat bank accounts.

In selecting a material for the banking of the house it is well to use that which when packed down with a covering of snow will be the nearest air and wind proof. On this account earth from the garden can hardly be excelled. Straw or stable manure is good, but the odor from the latter may bother, while the ammonia gases likely to come from it may discolor the paint on the lower clapboards. A strip of tar paper extending from the ground to above the point where the banking will reach will obviate this latter difficulty.

A butter specialist gives the following suggestions for keeping the taint of silage from the milk of cows which have it as a ration: The silage should be fed only after milking, the floors should be kept clean and no silage allowed to accumulate in the alleys, no more silage should be fed than will be eaten up clean, corn should not be put into the silo too green, and none of it should be fed in a moldy condition, and, lastly, the stable should be kept well ventilated. In view of the well known susceptibility of milk to odors the above suggestions are timely.

A new idea has lately been hit upon by the proprietors of the Cafe Martin of New York city in the serving of their fancy fruits. An order was placed this season with a Hood river fruit grower for a number of boxes of bright red Spitzenburg apples which should have the word "Martin" appear on the red cheek in golden yellow letters. The grower secured this result by pasting the word cut in paper on the cheek of the apples just before the fruit began to turn red. At picking time these stencils or the obverse of stencils were removed and the fruit carefully packed. It is fair to assume that the process was a tedious one and that the grower got a fancy price for the fruit thus treated.

Some experiments which have been carried on at Murrysville, Pa., along the line of a manufacture of paper of different grades from fibers of the cornstalk seem to show quite conclusively that paper can be made therefrom at about one-half the cost of that manufactured from wood pulp. Provided this situation is as stated a large field would seem to be opened up for the utilizing of hundreds of thousands of tons of stalks that annually go to waste in the corn belt states, while one of the large factors in the destruction of our timber supplies would seem to be removed. The attention of a corn belt congressman has been called to these experiments, and he proposes to ask congress for an appropriation at the coming session which shall be used in the erection of a cornstalk paper plant that the matter may be given a thorough and official testing.

Every human being so blessed should be thankful for the physical strength wherewith to earn his daily bread and an appetite and stomach which will enable him to enjoy and digest it properly. These are common blessings, yet a good many people are denied them.

In making preparation for the winter food supply for the poultry it is well to keep in mind that both clover and alfalfa are excellent rations in the supplying of needed protein. The hens will devour all leafy parts of the legumes as eagerly as they will wheat or corn.

Limberneck is an ailment which now and then appears in flocks of poultry and seems to be due to a diseased condition of the neck, induced by poisons contained in partly decayed meat. The cure is to remove diseased fowls from those that are well and the feeding of ground bone and meat scraps that are fresh and untainted.

Carrots, beets and turnips which it may be desired to carry through the winter should be packed in barrels or bins with clean sand or dry earth, enough filler being used to keep the roots separated a bit. The place where such crops are stored should be both cool and dry so as to retard as far as possible the tendency to decay or sprout.

There is no profit and mighty little satisfaction in the end in buying fruit trees of unknown descent and dubious vitality of a foreign house at long prices when the same varieties guaranteed true to name and vigorous can be bought from the nearby nurseryman at more reasonable prices. Before placing orders for future deliveries with the foreign house it would be a good idea to write the nearby house and get prices.

Experiments which have lately been conducted in the bacteriological department of the University of Wisconsin seem to point quite conclusively to the fact that a good many cases of poisoning from the eating of ice cream are traceable to the keeping of the cream from which it is made for some length in cold storage, during which interval poisons are developed by harmful bacteria, whose work is not discernible from either texture or taste.

The apple crop of America—United States and Canada—is placed at 35,000,000 barrels, which is 12,000,000 barrels more than that of 1908. It is generally conceded that the crop produced east of the Mississippi river is larger and poorer than last season, while that west is lighter, but of superior quality. Some forecast of apple prices is inferable from the fact that a fellow is paying $4 or better per barrel for runty Ben Davis in November.

The covering of the strawberry bed, if it needs covering, should be deferred until the ground has frozen solid. Then enough clean straw or cornstalks should be scattered over the bed to shield it from the alternate thawing and freezing of the bright days and cold nights of the winter months. If the ground is frozen, as suggested, before the covering is applied this frozen body holds the plants in complete cold storage, it being easy to retard the growth and blossoming of the plants in the spring by simply leaving the covering on.

A rather unusual suit has been brought by an Iowa farmer against the tenant who has been working his farm the past year or two. The damages asked are $630, and the grounds of the suit are that the renter allowed cockleburs to grow on the place. It is possible that the tenant may bring countersuit for damages against the landlord for having allowed cockleburs to go to seed the year prior to his occupancy of the place. In any event the decision in the case will be viewed with interest, as it opens a very wide field for speculation and action.

In some sections of the west the wayfarer notes an interesting bird habit—a sort of joint food storage arrangement practiced by the yellow hammers and bluejays. As related by a resident of one of these localities, the flicker pecks holes in the bark of the yellow pine large enough to accommodate the acorns which fall from nearby oaks, one in a place. Worms pass from the bark into the acorn, where they fall easy prey to the sharp bill and spiked tongue of the flicker, while the jay, seeking the meat of the acorn, dislodges them, thus making room for those of the next year's crop. During the fall months one may observe acorns by hundreds thus stored.

Fortunate indeed are those folk who in the strenuous struggle of life for material possessions keep as intact as may be the instinctive, God given interest in and love for the beauties of nature scattered in profusion about them—in the soil beneath their feet, the flower and leaf that perfume and brighten the meadow or woodland path, the birds that minister sweet harmony to the ear, the rose tinted and cloud flecked skies of morn and eve, the starlit heaven at night and the speechless messages that all of these speak to him of an open heart and inquiring mind. Such tastes and likes are subtle and spiritual and should be cultivated as earnestly as one may. They give balm and comfort for the hurts of life.

Alice Campbell and Robert Campbell, her husband, and Effie Guard, infant, who sues by her next friend, Dorsey Guard, vs. William Guard, Catharine Hatfield and George T. Hatfield, her husband, and Annie Humberson and Frank Humberson, her husband.

No. 1657 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate in Garrett county, Maryland, belonging to the parties to this cause.

The bill states that on the 15th day of January, 1885, Jeremiah Guard and wife executed and delivered to Delilah Guard, Annie Humberson and Frank Humberson, her husband, Alice Campbell and Robert Campbell, her husband, Effie Guard, and William Guard and Catharine Guard, his wife, a deed for one hundred acres of land, situate in Garrett county, which deed recited and set forth the contribution of each of said grantees to the purchase money for said farm, as appears by reference to said deed, a certified copy of which, recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 28, folio 135, etc., is filed with the bill as a part thereof; that Newton Guard, mentioned in said deed, was the father of the said Alice Campbell, Annie Humberson, William Guard and Effie Guard, and had departed this life intestate prior to the execution of said deed, and that the said Delilah Guard was the widow of the said Newton Guard, and the mother of said grantees of Jeremiah Guard, and has since departed this life intestate leaving the said Alice Campbell, Annie Humberson, William Guard and Effie Guard as her only children and heirs at law; that the said Alice Campbell, Robert Campbell, Annie Humberson, Frank Humberson, and Effie Guard, who sues by her next friend, Dorsey Guard, are all residents of Garrett county, Maryland; that after the execution and delivery of the aforesaid deed, William Guard and Catharine Guard, his wife, were divorced, a vinculo matrimonii, in the State of Pennsylvania, where they were then residing, and thereafter, the said Catharine Guard intermarried with the said George T. Hatfield, who now resides in the State of Illinois, the said William Guard being a resident of the State of Pennsylvania; that said real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interest therein, and that in order to make division of said interests, it will be necessary to sell said real estate and divide the proceeds thereof amongst the parties according to their several interests; the bill then prays for a decree directing a sale of said real estate, and that the proceeds be divided among the parties to this cause, according to their respective rights and interests, and for general relief.

It is thereupon, this 28th day of December, 1909, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 28th day of January, 1910, give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 15th day of February next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

CUMBERLAND AND NEW HAVEN CONNECTION

Construction Work on New Railroad Is Soon to Start

BALTIMORE, Jan. 18.—President Benjamin F. Bush of the Western Maryland Railroad today confirmed the statement relative to the arrangement concluded between his company and the New York Central system, by which Baltimore will become the Middle Eastern terminus of the Vanderbilt chain of railroads.

Mr. Bush added that work on the extension from Cumberland, Md., to New Haven, Pa., which will link the Western Maryland with the Pittsburg and Lake Erie, a subsidiary of the New York Central, will begin just as soon as the engineering force can complete its plans and the weather will permit.

The contract between the companies has been signed, and all that remains to make it binding is the ratification by the boards of directors of the systems. Mr. Bush said it would require at least two years to build and equip the new branch, which will be 83 miles long.

The route of the George's Creek and Cumberland railroad, which is owned by the Western Maryland Railroad, will be followed from Cumberland to the Narrows, a distance of about three miles. This will carry the new line around instead of through the mountains. There will be one tunnel 3600 feet long about 20 miles west of Cumberland, near the summit of the Alleghenies.

The new road will be shorter than either the Baltimore and Ohio or the Pennsylvania to Pittsburg, and the managements of the Western Maryland and the Pittsburg and Lake Erie will inaugurate an energetic campaign to locate manufacturing plants in the territory they will serve.

While it is expected that coal will furnish the bulk of the traffic at the start, the roads will not overlook other classes of freight.

Grafton Republican Plant Sold.

The plant of the Republican Publishing Company, publishers of the Grafton Daily Republican, closed by Constable S. A. Shroyer, on account of financial difficulties, was sold Saturday afternoon to Thomas F. Welsh, for $250, under the hammer, the purchaser to assume the liabilities amounting to a sum in the neighborhood of $1,250, in liens and judgments, standing against the plant. No announcement has been made as to what disposition of the plant will be made by Mr. Welsh. Besides the $1,250 there are other claims against the plant, it is understood, which are covered by individual endorsements.

PREPARING FOR NEW ASSESSMENT

Which Will Be Made In the Counties This Year.

Tne Maryland Federation of County Commissioners, formed for the purpose of prepariug legislation pertaining to the counties, and composed of the county commissioners of all the counties of the State, decided upon a reassessment bill to be presented to the present session of the legislature calling for a reassessment of all county property, real, personal and mixed.

It was anticipated that there would be considerable opposition to the bill because it was not intended that it should include a reassessment of property in Baltimore city for State taxation. It was rumored that some of the commissioners considered it unfair, but there was no strong opposition to the bill. An amendment was offered by Mr. Alexander Hagner, of Washington county, which would include Baltimore city but the amendment was voted down by a vote of 14 to 2.

When Mr. Hagner offered his amendment he explained that he did not believe it would be constitutional to provide for a reassessment of property in one part of the state and not in all parts. Attorney General Straus gave an opinion, however, that he believed it would be constitutioual and that he did not believe the Federation had the power to extend its work beyond the purpose for which it is organized. He advised that the amendment be not adopted. Mr. Straus explained that he had not had an opportunity to look the matter up but that he felt that it would not be unconstitutional for the bill to go through as prepared.

The new bill is practically the same as the one now on the statue books, and and under which the assessment of 1896 was made. The law is believed now to be a dead one, in that it was passed for that paticular year. The law provides that the assessment be made this year; that the counties be divided into assessment districts; that the Governor appoint two assessors at large, and the county commissioners one for each district; that they receive compensation of $5 a day for actual service, and that all appeals from assessments by property owners be made to be a board of control and review, composed of the county commissioners, then to the Circuit Court of the county and finally to the Court of Appeals.

The difference in the new bill from the law of 1896 is that Baltimore city is not included in the new assessment; that the districting of the counties is left in hands of the county commissioners; that the Governor has the appointment of assessors at large without restriction to party lines, as was the case in the old bill, and that the pay of the assessors is increased by $1 a day.

TRAINS NEED NOT STOP ON SUNDAY

Sabbath Sanctity Preserved at Mountain Lake Park.

At Washington, last Thursday, the Interstate Commerce Commission dismissed the complaint of the Loch Lynn Construction Company, which owns and operates a summer hotel at Mountain Lake Park, filed before the commission against the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. It was complained that although the railroad's passenger trains stopped at Mountain Lake Park on week days, during the 24 hours extending from midnight Saturday to midnight Sunday during the summer months they do not stop at Mountain Lake Park, although they do stop on Sundays at Deer Park, which is three and a half miles east of the Park; at Oakland which is two miles west of Mountain Lake Park, and at Terra Alta, which is ten miles west of Oakland. This, it is charged, is an unjust discrimination against Mountain Lake Park, and the failure to stop trains compels the guests at the hotel, who come largely from Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia and New York, to drive two miles between Oakland and Mountain Lake Park when they arrive or depart on Sunday. Mr. G. M. Alexander appeared for the hotel company.

Mr. Allen S. Bowie, for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, asserted that the reasons for not stopping trains at Mountain Lake Park was an agreement between the company and the Mountain Lake Park Association, by which the railroad obligated itself not to stop its trains at Mountain Lake Park on Sunday in consideration of the deed to the land occupied by the railroad station. The Mountain Lake Park Association, through its counsel, Judge Thomas Ireland Elliott, intervened and assumed the burden of denying that unjust and undue prejudice and disadvantage existed. The Baltimore and Ohio expressed itself as neutral, declaring that it was perfectly willing to stop its trains if directed to do so by the commission.

Judge Elliott, for the intervener, stated that the Mountian Lake Park Association had acquired the land in Garrett county known as Mountain Lake Park, to be set aside as a summer resort for religious and educational purposes. Previous to the formation of this association other summer resorts founded upon similar principles had been interfered with in their maintenance of the sanctity of the Sabbath by the coming in of outside parties and for the purpose of precluding the possibility of such intrusion and avoiding interruptions which would necessarily be incident to the bringing in of Sunday excursion trains, it entered into an agreement with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad on November 6, 1883, under which it granted the land for the station to the road, conveying nearly two acres for the station, with the express understanding that the road would not stop any of its passenger trains at or near the station.

In 1901 the Loch Lynn Company purchased its hotel. The hotel property is 1,000 feet south of the Mountain Lake Park station in the incorporated village of Loch Lynn, the railroad tracks being practically the dividing line of the village and the property of the association. It is claimed that but for the association the hotel would not be in existence, nor would there be any station.

The commission ruled that the contract between the railroad and the association could not in any degree justify undue or unreasonable discrimination. A carrier could not justify unreasonable discrimination between localities in refusing to stop its passenger trains at a particular place on certain days by a contract not to do so. But in the performance of its passenger service a carrier, continues the commission, operates in a wide field of reasonable discretion in the adaptation of its service to the infinite variety of circumstances and conditions confronting it. Only such resulting discriminations are due and unreasonable are forbidden. The commission finds that the failure of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to stop its trains at Mountain Lake Park is not an unreasonable discrimination in view of all the facts, circumstances and conditions.

Brakeman Hurt on the Road.

W. J. Danser, a brakeman on the Cumberland division of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, who resides in Grafton, W. Va., was struck by a helper as he stepped from the front of his engine at Hutton Saturday, and he sustained some severe injuries to his eye in consequence. Otherwise he was uninjured.

PEACE MUST PREVAIL, SAYS SENATOR SMITH

Visits Annapolis And Prevents Open War With Crothers.

United States Senator John Walter Smith was in Annapolis Monday night.

He was there in the interests of harmony.

He advocated peace.

Incidentally, his friends let it be known that he favored more employees.

One week ago, in Washington, after the Benson revolt at Annapolis Ex-Governor Smith said:

"My place is now here. I had absolutely no knowledge of the developments there (in Annapolis), or of what was expected to develop."

ANNAPOLIS, MD., Jan. 19.—United States Senator Smith demands peace. He has notified his friends in the House of Delegates that peace must prevail. They have been told to go along with Governor Crothers. All the members of the House knows of Senator Smith's wishes today. He was here last night talking over the situation with friends. He came to restore harmony. Floor Leader Benson had previously been smoothed over. Now that Senator Smith's friends are to have no encouragement for being bad, they must fall in line.

Coupled with Senator Smith's demand for peace was a soothing lotion for the members of the House in the form of additional legislative employees. He is not, his friends say, in favor of taking down the bars. He wants to see the Legislature make a record for economy, but he does not think the economy program should be worked too hard. He feels it will prove to be a counter irritant to the soothing effects of his words. He believes the number of employees should be fixed, but the fixing should be so arranged that each member of the House will have one employee to his credit.

Intimations were flying about the corridor that Governor Crothers was willing to accept the peace, but was unwilling to concede the employees. The one-for-each-man prescription excluded the desk force and the stenographers. With these employes charged up against the counties from which they were named and included in the 71 as the total force to be named for the General Assembly in the House of Delegates, the expense account, so the economist claimed, would not be so bad. They might concede this, but more they would not concede. Here the situation rests as a cloud over the peace program.

Eight engrossing clerks were named for the House. Five of them were at work this morning. One, it was said, had been transferred to the folding room, another is ill in a Baltimore hospital and the third is enveloped in mystery. No one seems to know anything about him.

With Senator Smith at Annapolis last night were Congressman Covington, Col. Buchanan Schley, Ex-State Senator Marion V. Brewington, State Treasurer Murray Vandiver and others identified with politics in Maryland. All of them were for peace. Word had gone out that Governor Crothers was getting to feel more and more like a fight each day. Senator Smith made sure that his wishes for peace should not slip a cog, for he notified one of his close personal friends to come to Annapolis to pass the word down the line in case he should be unable to reach here from Washington, where he is looking after his duties in the Federal Senate. He came, however.

One of his close political advisors even urged him to go to the extreme of putting "Uncle Jim" Dawkins off the Ways and Means Committee of the House, upon which he had been voted a place by the whole House. Mr. Dawkins was to be asked to resign. If he refused, the effort was to be made to remove him. Senator Smith was not willing to go so far. He was, however, strong for peace at any reasonable price.

In the Senate the remnant of the "old guard" that survived the last election wears a happy, contented look; the remnant of the new guard is striving to rub away the wrinkle of disappointment in order to present a brave front, and the Legislative goslings are not yet quite sure how to look and feel, for they have not been able to appreciate just what happened to them last night when President Arthur Pue Gorman of the Senate handed in the committee assignments.

When President Peeples performed this service for the House he was met with a howl of disappointed rage. Nothing so undignified happened in the Senate, for the Senate is a dignified body and the Senators of Maryland would not think of violating the traditions of ages.

Senator Lee, of Montgomery, the head and shoulders of the "new guard," is the chairman of the committee on printing. This committee may perform some very important public duties before the session ends, but no one knows what they will be. In any event Senator Lee is allowed plenty of time to devise ways of getting the best of Senator Price of Wicomico, who has been designated by President Gorman as the Democratic floor leader.

Governor Crothers' nephew, Senator Crothers of Cecil, has been named as the chairman of the Committee on Executive Nominations. This is the committee to which the nominations made by the Governor are referred, and the selection was no doubt intended as a compliment to the Governor. President Gorman is protected pretty well, however, in the men he named to serve with Senator Crothers.

While the House Committee on Temperance looks pretty gloomy for "dry" legislation, the Senate Committee looks much worse. Senator Coady is its chairman. He comes from East Baltimore, which is not supposed to be especially friendly to the Legislative program that William H. Anderson, the agent of the Anti-Saloon League, has outlined. With him is Senator Sproesser of South Baltimore, which is not regarded as "dry" territory, and Senator Wells of Prince George's and Senator Miller of Washington, who fought and won as "wet" candidates, and the remaining member of the committee is Senator Bosley of Dorchester, who may be "wet" or "dry." It really makes no difference. He can't outvote four Senators.

President Gorman looked after his good friend, Senator Biddison, of Baltimore county, making him chairman of the Committee on Judicial Proceedings and also a member of the Committee on Rules.

Senator Campbell, of Baltimore city, received but few assignments of importance. He said that was agreeable to him, as the labor of looking after legislation proposed for Baltimore city occupied so much time that little was left for other work. He had expressed the wish, he said, to be relieved from as much work as possible on general committees.

The Committee on Corporations is regarded as a good one. Senator Moore, the chairman, is known to be very kindly disposed to corporations, and Senator Sproesser, as a City Councilman in Baltimore, often showed a decided disinclination to hurting them, but the other members of the Committee are not believed to be as considerate as either of these Senators.

Senator Speicher, of Garrett, was placed on the following committees: Civil Service and Election Reform, Elections, Public Institutions, Library and Printing.

Provision for good roads in Garrett count is contemplated by a bill to be introduced by Mr. Bolden. By this the County Commissioners are directed to appoint one or more road supervisors for each election district at a per diem rate of not less than $2, each to give bond for faithful performance of his duties. Each supervisor shall set aside 10 per cent. of all money intrusted to him, to be used for emergency repairs to roads or bridges. The County Commissioners may levy a regular road tax, and an extra or special tax may be voted by the residents of any district.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 19.—Governor Crothers has been overridden in his economy program. The House has taken the bit in its teeth as far as Legislative expenses are concerned, fully prepared to back up the action of the Committee on Organization, which reported back to the House today a recommendation for the appointment of 44 additional employes. The report was adopted after a short debate by a vote of 62 to 37.

The original report was for 51. This is supplementary. Only 39 of the number originally authorized were sworn in at once. Uncertainty exists as to whether these 12 are inclusive or exclusive of the 44 recommended, so the whole number of employes so far provided for amounts to either 83 or 95.

As the pay of the employes averages about $500, the expense is about $45,500, which, with the pay provided for the members, amounts to $97,000 for the House alone. The Senate has yet to be heard from. Moreover, this $97,000 is exclusive of the pay for the force needed to clean up the corridors. These men get only $1.50 a day. Authorized in the report are additional employes to be named by the Speaker. Rush of business toward the closing days of the session is generally taken as a justification for these additional men. As the last House of Delegates cost $114,000, and as provision has already been made by the House for the expenditure of $100,000, the hopes of the economists have certainly gone glimmering unless President Gorman comes to the rescue in the Senate.

NO NEW CASES OF SMALL-POX AT FRIENDSVILLE

But One Case Has Developed There and the Patient Is Rapidly Recovering.

The people of Friendsville and indeed the entire county of Garrett, are congratulating themselves upon the fact that the smallpox scare at Friendsville has about subsided, as there has been bnt one case, that of Shaffer, which developed about two weeks ago and who is now well on toward the road to recovery.

As a result of the smallpox in Friendsville business is at a standstill absolutely, nothing whatever being done in mercantile or other lines of trade. Farmers and those who usually do their buying at that town are staying religiously away and the result is the merchants are complaining.

Another result is many residents of the town are ill owing to the vaccination undergone by them. In some cases entire families are confined to their beds and are suffering severely.

THEY WERE MARRIED

After Many Trials and Hardships Couple Wed.

Dallas Shaw, aged 24 years, a well known young man of near Fairmont, W. Va., and Hazel Hawkins, aged 16 years, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Hawkins, of Winfield, Marion county, W. Va., not far from Fairmont, eloped to Oakland last Friday and at the livery barn of J. A. Kelly were married by Rev. W. D. Reed. January 1 they attempted to elope, but the plans were frustrated by the arrest of Shaw at Grafton at the instance of D. H. Hawkins, a brother of the girl, who intercepted the pair. Shaw was dismissed, the girl returned to her home and the incident forgotten. The girl has been attending school and last Thursday morning she started off, but her mother did not know that she had enough lunch to last two persons over a day. While on the road a double team drove up and the girl was helped in the buggy. The girl did not return in the evening and the parents became suspicious. She could not be located and when the incident of the man and the double team was recalled, it dawned on all that the girl had eloped with Shaw. They drove all the way to Oakland in zero weather and were married at the livery barn as above, afraid to go out upon the street before the knot was tied owing to their former experiences with policemen. The progress of the elopers was made very slow by almost impenetrable snowdrifts, their return to their former homes from Oakland requiring all day Saturday and Sunday.

Back to the Farm.

Nine hundred millions dollars' worth of agricultural products were exported from the United States last year, according to the Bureau of Statistics in the Department of Commerce and Labor. Secretary Wilson says that the total value of our farm products for that year was $8,776,000,000, so that a little more than 10 per cent of our farm product are sold abroad and the home consumers had to be content with the remaining nine-tenths.

This is a healthy condition, but doubtless helps to explain the high price of provisions in this country. Secretary Wilson thinks the high prices are due to the fact that there are too few farmers and too many distributors; too many young men rushing to the city, instead of staying at home and tilling the soil. He says:

"What we need is more farming. Too many persons are rushing to town and city and trying to make a living there, and not enough are staying in the country. Too many are trying to to get along without work and not enough of toem are in the business of producing something. One man could do the business of distribution where twenty are now engaged in it. That is the reason why the cost of living is high and people are complaining."

If we are to supply Europe as well as America with food stuffs we must increase the number of farmers with the increase in our population, and if farming is made and continues sufficiently profitable there will be no lack of farmers. The poor rewards of farmers in the past have driven the farmer boys to other pursuits. There will be a cry of "back to the farm" as soon as it is clear that there is money in farming commensurare with the toil which it exacts from those whose livelihood is the cultivation of the soil.—Philadelphia Press.

Mr. N. U. Bond was in the city Friday afternoon.

THE DIAMOND HORSESHOE.

A Mother Does Not Lose Faith In Her Son.

By AGNES G. BROGAN.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

She was the last one to enter the train, running breathlessly up the steps and pausing for a moment in the doorway—such a bright and happy picture, with glowing cheeks and sparkling eyes, that the passengers glancing in her direction half smiled sympathetically as she beamed upon them all.

The porter, showing his white teeth, hastened to lead the way to the only vacant seat, and the man behind anticipated her movement toward the window and pressed the spring and let in the fresh October air. The little old woman who had been sitting unnoticed close to the window drew a long breath gratefully. She was a shabby, worn little old woman, with wrinkled face almost hidden in the depth of an old fashioned Quaker bonnet.

"THIS IS THE PIN, IS IT NOT?" SHE ASKED.

"Is the breeze too strong for you?" asked the girl, smiling down into the bonnet, and then, seeing the great tears which were flowing down the furrows on the tired little face, she added impulsively, "Can I help you in any way?"

"I am afraid no one can do that, my dear," replied the little old woman painfully. "I am going on a sad journey today."

It was evident that her need of human sympathy was very great, but she checked herself suddenly, embarrassed at the realization that she had been on the point of confiding in a stranger.

With an expectant look in her soft eyes the girl waited. "Perhaps," she suggested feelingly, "you would like to tell me all about it."

For a moment longer the woman hesitated, and then, reassured by the kindly interest in the girl's face, began her story.

"It's my son," she quavered. "He is in great trouble, and I'm hurrying to him. It is years since I've been on a train, years since I've been in a city, and it will all be very strange and hard for me. He doesn't know I'm coming, Henry doesn't, but if his mother can help him she is going to be right there. Just yesterday it happened. He was going in on this very train to the city, where he lives. The car was filled, as it is today, my dear, and he sat beside a lady just as we are sitting. She wore one of those dresses, he wrote, that are fastened way up the back, and through the fastening was pinned a diamond horseshoe. She was leaning forward all the time, looking through the window, so he remembers the horseshoe very distinctly as it flashed and glittered in the sun. Well, why they should say he did it—those men—I can't understand, unless they were anxious to blame it on some one when the lady missed it, for it was gone, the diamond horseshoe. There one minute and gone the next, and the men, two of them across the aisle, say that Henry—my Henry, who is as honest as the day—unfastened the pin and slipped it into his pocket. Quick as he was, they declare, they saw him do it. The trainmen were called, there was great commotion, and there he had to stand and bear it all—the prying eyes, the disgrace. Oh, they searched him well, but no pin was found. I could have told them many miles away that they would not find their stolen pin upon my boy. So"—the grief stricken voice choked bitterly—"they locked him up there in the city. He had no money to give a bond, and this morning early they are to swear his honesty away—the men who say they saw him to do it and the lady who lost her diamond horseshoe. But if a mother's prayers can help"—

She could go no further. She saw her boy again as when she had first seen him the day he was born. She saw him as, having kissed her, he toddled away to school. She saw him as he began to grow from boyhood to youth and from youth to manhood and remembered how proud she had been of him. What a fine man he was going to be!

And now where were all these hopes? In a twinkling they had vanished.

With misty eyes, the girl leaned forward gently. The little hand in its dainty glove was laid upon the toil worn hand in its cotton one. "Tell me more about your boy," she urged softly.

Almost eagerly the old woman continued: "He has always been such a good boy, poor, like his father and grandfather before him, but honest always and honorable as they were. His father wanted to paint pictures when he was a lad, but had to stay at home and work on the farm instead. It had been a great disappointment until the day of his death, so when Henry wanted to be a painter I let him go. He has had hard times, I'm afraid—he is looking to poor and white and thin—and when our neighbor called to see him there in the city he found him living in such a crowded place way up near the roof. But that's for the skylight, Henry says. Artists like to be high up, and I'm not to worry."

She paused and regarded the girl questioningly for a moment. The girl nodded understandingly, and the other resumed: "But things were beginning to look so bright. He was to paint a rich man's picture as soon as he could earn enough to buy the necessary materials—canvas, brushes and things. And now to be locked up and branded a thief!"

"I am glad you have told me, and I thank you," said the girl very softly. "If Henry's mother has such faith in him everything is certain to come right. You must let me help you. I know the city very well, for it is my home in the winter time. When we arrive the carriage will be waiting, and we will drive immediately to the courthouse."

If the accused artist had seen them as they entered the courtroom he might have found in their faces—the wan, pitiful countenance of his distracted mother and the glowing features of her young companion—inspiration for a picture to be called "Hope and Despair," but his head was bowed low and his face was buried in his hands as he sat waiting for his case to be called.

Seating the little old woman in a secluded corner, the girl hurried forward and asked a court [illegible] to permit her to speak to the [illegible]. The man conducted her to the bench, and his honor signified his willingness to hear her.

"If the case of Henry Burrows has not yet been called," she pleaded, "will you please have it dismissed? I am Miss Stanfield, the person who lost the diamond horseshoe, and I do not wish to appear against him. You will remember that nothing was found upon him when he was searched. There has been a great mistake, and the horseshoe is now safe in my possession."

So saying, she unclasped a pin from the laces at her throat and laid it upon the desk, a curious golden horseshoe, with the diamond nails flashing brilliantly.

With a puzzled expression the judge scanned closely for a moment her flushed, eager face and then motioned to two men seated together in the room. "The witnesses," he said impressively, "are positive that the man unclasped the pin."

Quickly the girl turned to the men. "This is the pin, is it not?" she asked. "It is a design one would not forget easily. There has been a great mistake." Then, with lowered voice, she added: "If her son should be pronounced guilty it will break his old mother's heart. Think of that, gentlemen, before you act."

Silently and with respectful admiration the men regarded her. "I see," said one of them finally, "that it is all a mistake, as you say."

A few moments later "The case of Henry Burrows dismissed!" rang out through the courtroom, and the old woman turned excitedly to those near by and cried jubilantly: "I knew it! My boy, my boy!"

The girl stood looking up into the white, tense face of the young artist.

"Why did you do it?" he demanded curtly.

Without flinching the girl looked straight into his eyes and answered. "The faith your mother has in her son should never be permitted to grow less."

With a quick sob the man hid his face from her gleaming eyes.

"It never shall be!" he declared. "Do you believe me?"

In answer she held out her hand.

Then he spoke again: "It was the madness of despair. When I saw them coming to search me I threw the pin through an open window. It must have fallen into the marshes or into the water below the bridge. How, then, can you have it today?"

They were standing quite alone, but the girl almost whispered her answer. "There were two," she said—"twin horseshoes. My father gave them to me."

As she was going he rose to his feet and raised his right arm as if he were registering a vow.

"Some day I shall return it to you," he said.

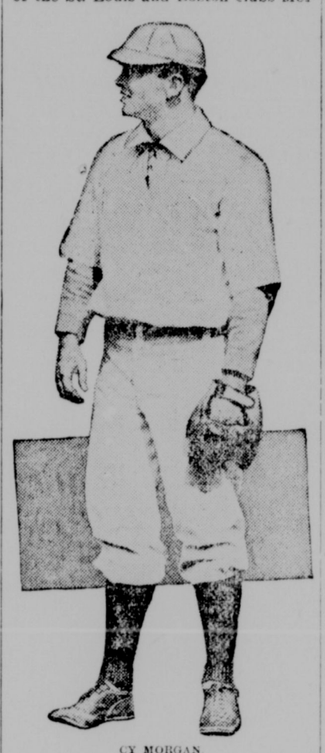
Again the girl put forth her hand. "I believe you," she said simply and went her way. And the memory that she carried out into the sunshine of the morning was the perfect content on the wrinkled face of the old mother as her son led her tenderly from the courtroom.

The young man kept his promise. One day two years later the girl received a little package by post. Opening it, she removed some cotton, and there below lay a diamond horseshoe pin.

THE SPORTING WORLD

Morgan's Big Improvement.

It has often been said that a change of scene will benefit a ball player. Anyway, this seems to be so in the case of Pitcher Cy Morgan of the Philadelphia Americans. While a member of the St. Louis and Boston clubs Morgan was anything but a success as a twirler. Since joining Connie Mack's aggregation Cy has pitched splendid ball and now takes his turn regularly in the box. In the first five games he pitched since donning an Athletic uniform he allowed but five runs and twenty hits.



CY MORGAN

Unique Baseball Record.

James "Lil" Sager, third baseman of the Evansville (Ind.) Central league team, holds a record that no other ball player has probably ever earned since the introduction of the national game. Since joining the Evansville squad he has played in more than 500 consecutive games—to be exact, 506 games. Before joining the Evansville club Sager played in South Bend and was then known as one of the most consistent performers in the league, never being bothered by sickness or accidents.

Sager was traded by South Bend to Evansville in 1906 for Ike Francis, who long ago severed his connection with the local club and is today the oldest man in point of service on the "champs'" lineup. Having never missed a game since becoming a member of the Evansville club, Sager is one of the most interesting players in the league and is known to every fan on the circuit as "Ginger Lil." During the last four seasons he has never spoken harshly to an umpire, has never suffered a bruise or an injury and has never known a sick day.

His grand fielding average for the four seasons is .911. His banner year was in 1908, when he fielded at .937. In hitting Sager is not so fortunate, his average being .222.

Basketball Reform.

The central board of officers of the intercollegiate basketball rules committee has adopted a unique plan for the improvement of basketball officiating. A list of competent game officers will be printed in the basketball rule book, which is published in October. From this list teams from all over the country can select officers to run games. These teams will report on the work of the officers, and in this way the central board of officers will keep in touch with the work of the men on the list.

The board will distribute explanatory literature from time to time during the course of the season, and, in addition, simultaneous meetings of officers will be held in New York, Chicago, Lawrence, Kan.; Portland, Ore., and Houston, Tex., on Dec. 4.

Welsh Wants Fight With Nelson.

Freddie Welsh, who has no contenders for the English lightweight championship since his defeat of Young Josephs, is coming to America to force Battling Nelson into a match for the world's championship. Welsh announces that he will post a $5,000 forfeit to go as a side bet and will agree to make 133 pounds ringside. He will sign articles for a forty-five round battle and is confident that he can beat Nelson.

Record For The Eel.

The famous pacer The Eel, owned by Frank Entricken of Tavistock, broke all records for a half mile track when he paced a mile in 2:05½. The best previous record for the half mile track was 2:07¾, held by Dan Patch. The first quarter was made in :30½, the half in 1:02 and the three-quarters in 1:33½. Conditions were unfavorable, as the weather was cool and a high wind was blowing.

Forbes May Re-enter Ring.

Harry Forbes, former bantam boxer is preparing to re-enter the ring. The former king pin of the little boxers has signified his intention of re-entering the ring. He is anxious to fight Monte Attell for the championship.

COOKING CRANBERRIES.

How to Prepare This Time Honored Turkey Accompaniment.

Many people eat cranberry sauces with turkey more because they are considered the proper condiment than because they especially like them, but they are a very fine condiment for all meats.

One of the most important points in cooking them is to use only porcelain or earthen dishes, never use tin or metal, and they are better the day after they are cooked, but should be kept in glass or earthenware dishes.

The following recipe will be found very toothsome: One quart cranberries, one pound of sugar, a pint of water. Boil the water and sugar together for five minutes, skim, add berries and cook slowly without stirring or burning until the berries are thoroughly cooked and tender. They can also be made into marmalade that can be sliced with a knife. Candied, they can hardly be told from candied cherries.

The cranberry is the Thanksgiving berry par excellence, but there is all the difference in the world in the way it is cooked. One of the most appetizing ways is to jelly them. Now while seeds and skins are tender there is no better way, which is one of the easiest possible to remember. Wash and look over the berries, removing any that are soft or imperfect. Put into a porcelain or granite kettle that has not chipped and sprinkle over them half as much sugar as you have berries. On top of the sugar crust pour gently half a much water as you have used sugar. Thus if you are cooking a quart of cranberries you would need a pint of sugar and a half pint, or one cup, of water. Cook very slowly. When they break into a boil cover just a few moments, but not long, as you do not wish the skins to burst. Then uncover and cook gently until tender. Pour into a mold. When cold the juice will be firm, inclosing the berries, which will be soft, but retain their form.

Candied cranberries are most decorative and can be used in place of the more expensive candied cherries. Cook in the same way and with the same proportions of sugar and water as for the jellied cranberries. When tender, but not at all broken, take a skewer or darning needle, pick out the plump whole berries, spread on an oiled platter and set in the sunshine or warming oven until dry.

How to Treat a Cold.

An old way to keep a cold from getting worse is to go to bed and get into a gentle sweat and take only as little as is consistent with comfort of drink and of watery foods, such as gruels and soups. If any aching or grip symptoms come up it is well to take a hot bath at bedtime, getting covered up at once, and then take a big, stiff drink of hot water and whisky. Do not get up or get uncovered in the night. In the morning take a half minute shower and a hard rub down in a warm room, and the chances are that little signs of cold remain. Do not take every cold cure that Tom, Dick and Harry recommend and understand once for all that most colds in the last twenty years have been mixed up more or less with grip germs, and grip is not cured in a day.

How to Make a Cat Calendar.

Take a sheet of water color paper 10 by 12 inches and some scraps of black fur or velvet (fur is far more effective). A little to the left and above the center of the sheet of paper glue an oval piece of the fur about 3 by 2½ inches. This is for the body of the cat. Add a smaller piece at the top for the head, attaching two tiny triangular pieces for the ears. Then put two small knobs for the feet and a narrow curving strip for the tail. Glue in two green beads for the eyes and a scrap of red cloth or paper for the tongue. Paste your calendar in the lower right hand corner. The same idea can be carried out in a match scratcher.

How to Perfume the Breath.

It is considered bad form to perfume the breath so that it can be noticed easily, but nothing can be said against perfuming it just enough to sweeten it. Buy a piece of orris root and chew just a small piece of this. A clove placed in the mouth, but not chewed, will give an odor of carnations to the breath. If the clove is chewed it must be swallowed right away or the odor will become too strong. It is said a bit of myrrh held in the cheek will give the breath a delicately sweet odor.

How to Make Giblet Gravy.

Clean and wash the giblets and put them up to boil in a small pot, well covered with water, and season them with salt and a little pepper. Let them boil till tender, then drain off the broth, but do not throw it away. Chop up the giblets fine and put back in the broth, make gravy in your usual way, strain, and when ready to serve add your chopped giblets.

How to Make Pumpkin Bread.

Stew a good sized pumpkin as for pies, mash fine and make stiff with flour. Add a teaspoonful of salt. Mix well and turn into a greased bread pan and bake in a slow oven for three hours or more. This may be eaten hot or cold, but is best if, when cold, it is cut into thick slices and fried, then served with jelly or a sweet sauce.

How to Avoid Poison Accidents.

To prevent accidents with bottles containing poison buy a dozen tiny bells and every time a bottle of poison is brought into the house tie a bell to the neck of the bottle. Even in the dark the bell will tinkle its warning.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson IV.—First Quarter, For Jan. 23, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. v, 1-16. Memory Verses, 2-9—Golden Text, Matt. v, 8—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This so called "Sermon on the Mount" in which we are to have six consecutive lessons, might be entitled "The Laws of the Kingdom" and is followed in chapters viii and ix by some features of the kingdom in the way of various healings, for when the kingdom comes "the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick" (Isa. xxxiii, 24). The first four chapters of this gospel might be entitled the genealogy of the King, the birth of the King, the herald of the King and the victory of the King over the god of this world. The precepts of these chapters shall be fully lived out in the kingdom when it is set up on this earth and should be manifest now in those who by His precious blood have become joint heirs with the King. Although the multitudes were near Him, it is evident from verses 1 and 2 that He spoke these words to His disciples and not to the multitude. Compare Luke vi, 20, but do not confuse these two sermons. In the one He went up into a mountain and sat down and taught, but in the other He came down from a mountain and stood in the plain. The two discourses are in many respects the same as to the teaching, but they were spoken at different times, under different circumstances, and yet in both cases to His disciples. What folly for an unsaved person to say, "The Sermon on the Mount is my religion; the Golden Rule is my motto." If the Ten Commandments written on tables of stone with the finger of God are a ministration of death (II Cor. iii, 7, 9), what about these same commands as explained by our Lord in this discourse, in which He says that a sinful look is as much the breaking of the command as a sinful act? The law was not given till the people were redeemed by blood from the land of bondage, and God never sets His law before an unsaved person but to condemn him, that as a lost one he may receive Jesus Christ, who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth (Rom. x, 4). Such only are the truly "blessed" according to Ps. xxxii, 1, 2; Rom. iv, 6-8. Then we have seven characteristics of these blessed or happy people which correspond with the seven petitions in the prayer of chapter vi, 9-13. The prayer begins "Our Father," and only redeemed people can say truly these words. All others come under the head of John viii, 44. Only the poor in spirit can say from the heart, "Hallowed be Thy name," for others prefer to exalt their own name. We pray, "Thy kingdom come," but we mourn because of the curse which rests on all the earth till the kingdom comes. The meek who desire in no sense their own will can truly long for the time when His will shall be done on earth as in heaven. Then shall the mourners be comforted, as they inherit the earth, which shall then have become the kingdom of heaven. Daily bread is made sure to all who hunger and thirst after righteousness (Matt. vi, 33), and they shall be satisfied with the fatness of His house in all things, both temporal and spiritual. Having been forgiven much, they freely forgive others and have become merciful indeed. Having seen something of God and desiring to see more of Him and to know Him better, they fear all temptation to evil and earnestly desire to be kept pure in heart. Knowing that the evil one is the great peace breaker, they pray to be delivered from him that they may enjoy the peace of God and carry His peace everywhere they go. Rejoicing in the kingdom and power and glory which are His, and theirs, too, as the children of God, they expect to be treated as He was—persecuted, reviled, spoken against falsely, things laid to their charge that they know not, but by His grace they count themselves happy to be privileged to suffer for His sake and rejoice that when His glory shall be revealed they shall be glad with exceeding joy (I Pet. iv, 13).

The church as the salt of the earth preserves it from the judgments which will surely come upon it (when the church has been taken away) to prepare it for the kingdom, but the professing church has well nigh lost its savor and seems like Rev. iii, 16. Who can tell how many cities, towns and families are preserved from calamity for the sake of the godly who are therein? May we be godly enough to make the devil hate us, the truly godly whom the Lord sets apart for Himself (II Tim. iii, 12; Ps. iv, 3). Note that salt had to be offered with every offering (Lev. ii, 13), and see our Lord's words concerning salt in Mark ix, 49, 50. We can only be salt in any sense as Christ dwelleth in us.

Christ is the light of the world (John viii, 12; ix, 5; xii, 46), and we can only be light to any one as we behold Him and reflect His light, and herein the moon, a faithful witness in heaven, is a good illustration. The light must first shine in our hearts, and it is the entrance of the word that giveth light (II Cor. iv, 6; Ps. cxix, 130). Then the light must shine in the house or home, then before men more generally and then into all the world that God may be glorified. The believer who does not shine can only be a painted light, an imitation, to whom the Lord will some day say, "I never knew you." See chapter vii, 21-23.

PROCRASTINATION.

TODAY
Is always
In our mitt,
Yet little use
We make of it.
Tomorrow
Seems a better date
In which
To labor
Early, late,
And grind
Out work enough
To do—
Well, maybe
For a week or two.
Quite placidly
We contemplate
The passing
Of today
And wait
For one
That is A ringer for Another that
Has gone before,
But by some magic
We opine
Tomorrow
We will get
In line
And make our brains
And fingers fly
In that large,
Busy
By and by.
If we could grasp
The golden now
And grip
With steady hands
The plow,
What marvels
Might we not perform,
What heights undreamed of
Rise and storm!
All of which has probably occurred to you
About a thousands times.

All Women Are Alike.

"There is one thing I want very much."

"Indeed! What is it?"

"To have an heiress marry me."

"That ought to be easy for you to pull off."

"Ought it?"

"Yes. You see, you are somewhat shopworn."

"What has that to do with it?"

"Just make a noise like a bargain and watch them flock around you."

Getting Ready.

"You are charged with stealing a baseball bat while the clubs were excited over a hit."

"Yes, judge; I stole it, but it was in self defense."

"How do you expect me to believe that?"

"Because it should be plain to any one. I hear a comet is headed this way, and I haven't a single weapon about the place."

Earned a Reward.

"Well, what are you fellows going to give me?"

"Give you?"

"Yes."

"Why should we give you anything?"

"Why, good gracious, man, didn't I keep Brown from telling stories the whole of the evening?"

The Truthful Lad.

"Where is the milkmaid, my little lad?" asked the country boarder of the farmer's chore boy.

"Milk made?"

"Yes."

"Most of it is made right here at the pump," returned the honest youth.

Just a Substitute.

"That was my dog you kicked, sir."

"Suppose it was."

"You might as well have kicked me."

"Well, you weren't handy."

His Belief.

"Do you believe in luck?"

"In bad luck sometimes."

"When?"

"When I have it."

FAVORS ELECTIONS EVERY TWO YEARS

Senator Price's Bill Would Reduce Number of Political Contests.

If Senator Jesse D. Price, of Wicomico county, is able to bring it about more than half the elections now held in Baltimore city and the State at large will be done away with. Senator Price stated yesterday that he is preparing a bill to be introduced in the Senate as soon as he has it completed, which will provide for elections in Maryland every two years, instead of one in every year and two in some years as is now the case.

The ground is taken by Senator Price that the citizens of Maryland have "too much election," that a great many more are held than are necessary and that the saving to the State, counties and the city of Baltimore will amount to several hundred thousands of dollars. He believes that his bill will meet with popular favor among the members of the legislature as well as with the public at large.

For the last year Senator Price has been giving the subject of elections in Maryland and other States the closest investigation, and although he will not go into detail at this time regarding what provisions his bill will contain, he declared himself emphatically on the subject, stating his reasons for wanting a change.

"The whole truth is here in Maryland we are overburdened with elections," he said, "and I believe the State and its citizens will be better off if we reduce the number by more than half. The number of elections we have in Maryland is entirely unnecessary and our method now of holding election every year, and in some years holding two elections, is an absurdity.

"The bill I expect to introduce will provide for elections every two years and at that time such officers as are needed can be elected in every part of the State. Take the case of Baltimore city, for example. There an election is held in the spring for mayor, one in the fall for city councilmen or members of the legislature or maybe it happens to be a gubernatorial election. Why cannot half a dozen of these officials be elected at the same time as they do in other States?

"The people have too much election. Hardly is one over before another is at hand, and in between these come the primary elections. The great number of elections accounts to a very great extent for the lack of interest among the better class of voters. Politicians wonder why they don't go to the polls on election day. It's all very plain to me.

"Then a most important thing to be considered is the great saving to the State, which means a direct saving of the taxpayers' money. I have given the subject a thorough investigation. I have received statistics from other States upon it and I am convinced that the State would be saved at least $200,000 a year if we had biennial elections only.

"Down in my own county of Wicomico we would save about $16,000 a year, which would mean from four to five cents on the tax rate. If it means such a great saving to us, what would it mean to Baltimore city?

"I am now working on the bill and hope to have it in shape in a short time. I have found, upon investigation, that the Constitution will interfere with me to some extent, but I believe that can be overcome. The bill is one which should meet with popular favor if upon no other grounds than that it means a great saving of the taxpayers' money. The expenses of the State and of every county and municipality in the State are steadily increasing each year, so therefore, if we can cut down unnecessary expenses we should do so."

Mr. Price feels sure that his bill will meet with the approval of Governor Crothers, who is trying to excel in an economy administration, and with those members of the House and Senate who are upholding the Governor in his economy plans.—Baltimore Sun.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

WINTER LANDSCAPES

Varied Bright Berried Shrubs For the Home Grounds.

BEAUTY AND CHEERFULNESS.

They Are Inexpensive and Decorate a Season When Other Plants Are Bare—Shrubs With Brilliant Bark Are Also Available.

"There is no reason why our home grounds should be desolate looking five-twelfths of each year," a nurseryman whose specialty is landscape gardening told a reporter. "Berried shrubs that cost less than half a dollar apiece and will give a fair show the second year after planting are all that is needed.

"There are twenty-three or twenty-four kinds of shrubs with bright colored bark or berries which if planted in the home grounds would transform the average garden in the north from dreariness and monotony into ever changing scenes of beauty and cheerfulness. None of them is slow growing, costly or short lived in this climate.

"We go south in the winter and exclaim over the fact that we see green things in the home grounds. We seldom consider long enough to realize that they are evergreens, and, although most of the broad leaved varieties are not to be had in the climate of the northern states, there are many other shrubs just as beautiful that we might have if we took the trouble to plant them. From now until the ground freezes this planting can be done with success, though it is best to get them in so that the earth will have a little time to settle about the roots before real winter begins.

"About the best known of these berried shrubs is the snowberry, and it is about the least attractive of them all. It is grown exclusively for its white glistening berries, because its flowers are insignificant and its foliage uninteresting. The berries, though beautiful and usually abundant, often lose their freshness and become an unsightly brown in February and March.

"The four next best known berried shrubs are, in my opinion, the best for planting in the home grounds for the sake of beautifying them during the cold months. They are the Japanese barberry, the common or American barberry, the high bush cranberry and the Rosa multiflora. Of the four the Japanese barberry is my favorite.

"Don't let any one persuade you to plant Rosa rugosa for its winter berries. It is quite true that its fruit is as bright colored as that of the multiflora, but the berries are coarse in comparison and become unsightly soon after the first severe spell of cold weather. I never expect mine to look well after Christmas.

"The multiflora berries are not so large as those of the high bush cranberry, but considerably larger than either variety of the barberry. They grow in large clusters, a brilliant red and extremely beautiful in the winter, especially with a snow background or amid glistening sleet. The plant is a strong grower and is commonly rated as a climber. Its single white blossoms come in June and are produced in large clusters.

"It is not troubled with garden insects nearly so much as other varieties of garden roses and is long lived and well adapted to the climate of the northern states. It is one of the parents of the crimson rambler, and to me its berries look as beautiful in the winter as the blossoms of the rambler do in the spring and summer. I consider it next in importance to the barberries for cheering up the home grounds in the winter. The plants are slightly more expensive than those of the common barberry, though cheap enough to be within the reach of any owner of a home.

"The high bush cranberry has the largest winter red berry among the ornamental shrubs that are to be had for a small amount of money. The shrub usually grows as tall as a man, though under good conditions I have seen it attain more than ten feet.

"It is the single flowered form of the old fashioned snowball and bears its fruit in pendent bunches of from four to about one dozen berries each. The fruit shrivels to some extent during the winter, but even at that it will measure three-eighths of an inch in March. It is a good shrub for winter ornamentation, and both the blossoms and the leaves make it worth while in even a small garden during the spring and summer.

"Among the small trees that give us red berries during the winter the mountain ash is perhaps the best, because, besides the beauty of its fruit, which grows in large clusters, it has ornamental foliage and is entirely hardy in the northern climate. Cockspur ranks next to the mountain ash and is worthy of all the praise usually given it in nurserymen's catalogues for brightening our winter landscapes.

"Besides bright berried shrubs, there are those which have brilliantly colored bark during the cold months. The Cornus alba has a brilliant scarlet bark that will light up a dark corner of your grounds. The stolonifera's bark is blood red; amomum, purple; Salix vitellina, yellow and orange, while the Forsythia viridissima is a brilliant green. Any of them can be planted from now until the ground freezes, and good specimens of the most expensive will not cost more than half a dollar, while the majority can be had for half as much."

EUROPEAN TOWN PLANNING.

There Is an Increasing Distribution of Parks and Playgrounds.

It has taken so much space to give any idea of the scope of town planning in Europe that very little can be said about its physical results. In the newer quarters there is to been seen, first, a reasonably good provision of main thoroughfares well planned and well equipped. The tendency appears to be to plan these to fit more closely to the topography and the traffic requirements and less with a view to producing any particular preconceived type of architectural effect than formerly. An instance of the better regard for traffic requirements is the avoidance, so far as possible, of concentrating several lines of traffic upon a single point of intersection, as in the ronds points characteristic of the earlier French plans and in the informal "knots" of streets often found in cities of accidental growth.

Second, there is an increasingly liberal and equitable distribution of small parks and playgrounds as well as numerous small intersecting squares and minor enlargements of the streets so arranged as not to interfere with the free movement of traffic. These are replacing the familiar but highly inconvenient and illogical circle or square so placed at the intersection of two or more important avenues as to block them and require a sharp detour. Washington is full of the latter, and some of them are charming to look upon, but the art of town planning has reached a point where it demands in new plans a better adjustment of the type of beauty to practical function.

I wish to point out that, although we have an immense amount to learn from Europe and especially from Germany in regard to town planning, it would be very foolish for us to copy blindly what has been done there. Apart from the differences in climatic, economic, social and political conditions between European countries and America, there is need for some caution lest we copy the mistakes.

The Germans recognized fifteen years ago that they had made mistakes in town planning. They have made other mistakes since. They are probably making mistakes now, but they are watching the results, and when they recognize a mistake they try to correct it. Here in America we seem to go on complacently perpetuating our old mistakes long after we have recognized them, preparing over again in our suburbs without material variation the same conditions that have given rise to results we deplore in the older parts of our towns.

How to change this helpless fatalism in our attitude toward the more fundamental factors of town growth is what we most need to learn.—F. L. Olmsted in Survey.

Dressing the Window.

Delicatessen goods lend themselves with greater facility to window display than do groceries, as a rule. They tempt the appetite. Compare the appetizing appearances of a bag of coffee and a bowl of salad, of a chest of tea and a fine piece of smoked salmon, of a can of tomatoes and a dish of smoked sausages, of a pyramid of breakfast cereals in cartons and a bowl of small meat pies, and our meaning becomes clear. The closer the grocer comes to the delicatessen window by the display of pickles and preserves in glass, dried fruit in dishes and smoked fish in baskets or plates the closer he will come to the solution of the problem of how to make his windows appeal to the appetite. Crackers should be more often seen in grocery windows, and coffee and tea in bulk should be less often seen there. It does not pay to trust too much to the public's imagination, as is done when a geometrical design is worked out in tin cans or cardboard cartons. Similarly a series of tapering pyramids of starch packages, even though of the edible kind, is putting strain upon the consumer's imagination which his interest in the display will not warrant unless a specially low price ticket is attached. There is not that intimate appeal to the appetite that is found in the appearance of the food itself in a condition ready for the table. Every man and woman responds in some measure to the appeal to the appetite, for in every man and woman there is, though not always in the same degree, the capacity of appreciation of appetizing food. To put it briefly, there is a gourmet hidden in every consumer.—Merchants' Review.

Surroundings Are Everything.

A farmer may not keep his own fences and buildings in good repair, but he is quick to notice signs of dilapidation about a village. He would rather drive three miles farther to a bright, tidy town than to do his trading where the surroundings remind him of neglect and bankruptcy. Merchants should understand this feeling and cater to it. A store made bright and cheerful by paint on the outside and a tasty arrangement of goods in the show windows will capture many a dollar that might go elsewhere. We like to deal with successful men, and we judge of a man's success by his surroundings. Plenty of soap and paint should be used if you would boom.

Why Some Towns Do Not Grow.

An insurance company has found that many towns and villages in a southern state are paying double rates for insurance because they are without adequate equipment for fighting fire. The extra cost in almost every instance would purchase the needed outfit and far more. It is no wonder that some towns stand still and its merchants fall asleep on their counters

GRANGE INCORPORATION.

Extract From a Special Act Passed by the New York Legislature In 1874.

There is considerable inquiry among members of the Order as to the effect of incorporating a grange and how to proceed in the matter. The following extract from the law governing this incorporation of granges will be of assistance only to such granges as are located within New York state, since it is a special act of the New York state legislature.

Any number of persons, not less than thirteen or more than forty, eligible to membership under the provisions of the constitution, bylaws, rules and usages of the said Order of Patrons of Husbandry, as indorsed and promulgated by said New York state grange, may organize a subordinate grange in accordance with said constitution, bylaws and usages, and on receiving a charter issued by said New York state grange or countersigned by its secretary any subordinate grange so organized may file articles of incorporation with the town clerk of the town where it is located, duly signed and acknowledged by its members or a majority of them, stating the name and number of the grange, the names of its officers and executive committee and signifying a desire to obtain the benefits of this act. And on filing such articles of incorporation every such subordinate grange shall become a legal corporation, subordinate to the said New York state grange, and shall possess all the powers and be subject to all the duties of corporations under the general laws of this state and under the constitution, bylaws and rules of said New York state grange, and may take, hold, sell and convey property, real and personal, and shall have and use a seal and may alter and renew the same at pleasure. But the total net income from the real estate held by any such grange shall not exceed $500 in any one year.

Any number of subordinate granges may unite in the formation of county or district granges under the constitution, bylaws and rules of the said Order as adopted and promulgated by said state grange, and after receiving a charter from the state grange the members or a majority of the members of such county or district grange or councils may make and execute articles of incorporation in the manner provided for subordinate granges and file them in the office or offices of the clerk or clerks of the county or counties embraced within their jurisdiction and shall thereupon be and become a corporation with authority to sue and be sued and shall have and use a seal and may alter or renew the same at pleasure and shall have and exercise all powers not in conflict with the provisions of this act or any other of the laws of the state of New York or the constitution, bylaws, rules or usages established or promulgated by the said New York state grange and which shall be necessary for the purpose of facilitating the transactions of business, buying, selling and shipping or such other purposes as may seem for the good of the Order. They shall be governed and the membership regulated by such laws as the council or grange may from time to time make not in conflict with the constitution of the national or state granges. They may elect a business agent to act in concert with the executive committee, and it will be their duty to inform the master of any irregularities practiced by deputies within their jurisdiction and shall be an intermediate organization between the state and subordinate granges.

THE WEAK SPOT.

The Lecturer's Program Is the Important Thing.

[Special Correspondence.]

The weak spot in the grange and grange work today, if there be one, is the lack of appreciation among its members and by the general public of its great achievements and its greater possibilities.

So great, so prominent and so entirely satisfying are its fraternal and social features that the members often look upon it as a pleasure enterprise and are content in knowing that they are enrolled in one of the greatest if not the greatest fraternal organizations of the present time and accept the pleasures of membership without sufficient thought as to what that membership means, and thus also the public looks upon it from the same viewpoint. This feeling is often intensified by the lecturer sent out by the state grange, who in his desire to be entertaining spends his effort in a pleasing or witty address, which, pleasant to hear, does not fill the minds of his hearers with a knowledge of or a desire to advance the great moral, intellectual and patriotic principles for which the grange really stands; hence the greatest weakness of the grange is in the program either of the local lecturer or the state officer or representative that it does not contain enough solid matter, enough of uplift, enough of what makes the farmer a greater student, a better neighbor, a more patriotic citizen.

Grange members should realize and the public should know that no organization has so written itself into the best history of our country as the grange. This should not be satisfying, but an incentive to greater accomplishments which lie within the present and future opportunities of our order.

W. N. GILES,
Secretary New York State Grange.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JANUARY, 20, 1910.

HARMONY IS LACKING.

All is not quiet on the Potomac, judging from the dispatches. Both the executive and legislative departments of the government appear to be stirred up a good deal and through them the country at large will be stirred up. Some of the government officials appear ready for acrimonious dispute, if not for a fight.

The action of the House in taking to itself the appointment of the committee to investigate the Ballinger-Pinchot affair, instead of permitting Speaker Cannon to make the appointments, shows that the insurgents are ready to go any length to thwart the Speaker, and the votes of those who joined the Democrats in opposing the regulars show that the feeling against "Uncle Joe" is wide spread and increasing. A little while ago the insurgents were confined to the west, but the vote against the Speaker at Friday's session, shows several from the east. No serious harm was done in depriving the Speaker of a little authority, but it must be apparent to those who started out to subdue the insurgents that their plan is not working well. They will have to do something else beside trying to shut them out in the cold politically. The Republican party of the country is very large and when its members are united and harmonious it can do things, but if it should be divided about the middle, it would not be very formidable. Harmony among the Republican lawmakers can hardly be spelled with a capital letter just now.

The President had but one course open to him in regard to Forester Pinchot. He was forced to dismiss him from the service and that will be a matter of regret to many as it is to the President. The Chief Forester has special qualifications for the position which he held and has rendered notable service to the country. That he was indiscreet in the letter which caused his dismissal will be admitted freely. He knows that, and evidence is not lacking that he deliberately invited dismissal. Whether he or Secretary Ballinger is right in their controversy, or whether each is right in part and wrong in part, will probably develop in the congressional investigation, but it is an unfortunate condition which confronts the administration. It is possible that the easiest and best way out of the muddle would be found in Secretary Ballinger's resignation. If the report of the congressional committee vindicates him, he would be in as strong a position out of the office as in it. In the meantime, while the belligerents are pausing and looking over the battlefield, counting the dead and wounded, they may think of a way to get together and work harmoniously in the service of their country.

WHAT A MEMBER OF THE LEGISLATURE SHOULD BE.

The concern among members of the Legislature over the appointment of employees and the rebellion which threatens if the Governor pushes economy to such an extent as to prevent each member from having at least one job to hand to a constituent indicates that the rank and file is not yet ready to follow any such idealistic program. "The boys" are still casting sheep's eyes at the loaves and fishes.

A few days ago at a meeting of scientists and scholars Governor Hughes of New York delivered an address upon the relation of the scholar to the administrator, in the course of which he thus portrayed the sort of man who ought to be legislating for the people:

"We need in our lawmaking bodies study. The legislator should be a student of the legislation of the past; of the laws of other countries and of other States; a practical man because he is dealing with the application of theory to actual affairs, but a student with practical duties. And I rejoice that we are drawing more and more to legislative service men who have had special training in our schools, and men who look at the problems of the day in the light of the experience of the past; men who can take the long view as well as the short view."

Up to this writing we have not observed any special reason at Annapolis for believing that the ideals portrayed by Governor Hughes are crowding us. Perhaps when the important question is decided of how much money the members of the Legislature can yank out of the State Treasury for the faithful, we shall be able to perceive the improvement to which the Governor refers.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES.

A New York householder writes a plaint to his newspaper which may shed a side light on the cost of living. He and his family recently cherished an appetite for buckwheat cakes. To satisfy this innocent longing he first searched the stores for the genuine article of buckwheat flour, and found it only after much delay. But when he got the necessary raw material it was discovered that no one in the family knew how to mix and cook that one-time staple viand of our Nation. He asks for instruction, complaining that all the cook-book recipes "are doped up with corn meal or potato water or some other extraneous matter."

Are we so far away from the traditional standards of our Nation that in the metropolis of the Nation a natural and even patriotic longing for the genuine thing in the line of buckwheat cakes must go unsatisfied for lack of knowledge as to how to make them? Next to the pumpkin pie of our grandmothers the buckwheat cakes were the peculiarly American staple for winter breakfasts. They were frugal, filling and toothsome. True, they might, after persistent indulgence, be followed by a tendency to irritation of the cuticle. But that slight drawback was only an attendant of their signal and indigenous virtues.

When we learn that a buckwheat cake longing is unslacked because a family is destitute not of materials but of knowledge of the traditional American cookery we are led to inquire how much of the high cost of living is to be charged to the failure of housewives to learn the cookery of their mothers and grandmothers. People in that strait should seek the instruction of the old-fashioned cook books. Certainly, the modern heretics who dope up buckwheat cakes with corn meal or potato water commit a culinary offense surpassed only by those that make pumpkin pies with an unsatisfying and fraudulent substitution of Hubbard squashes for the pumpkin.

A WOMAN WHO TAKES REFORM SERIOUSLY.

In these days when talk of woman suffrage, next to the cost of living, is most frequently ringing in one's ears, it may be of interest to note that a woman is now standing as firmly as Horatio at the bridge against a raid on the State Treasury. It all comes about through the apparent inability of members of the Legislature to distinguish clearly between the words "and" and "or." There is much virtue in an "if"; likewise there is much virtue in an "or" when there is a woman with a mind of her own back of it.

The Code of Public General Laws of this State permits a member of the Legislature to corral money of the realm to the extent of $25 in lieu of stationery. The law reads quite clearly that the member can take the money "or" its equivalent in stationery. Presumably it is nothing more than misreading of the Code which has led to the custom of members requesting the Librarian to fork over both the money and the stationery.

This year, in accordance with time-honored precedent, members waited on the smiling but intrepid Librarian for the usual honorarium. It was an awful blow when the question which they preferred—money or pens, ink and writing paper—was plumped right at them. But they countered promptly by answering "both." That is where the Librarian put her foot down, and that is where the first ripple of trouble rose over the program of economy which it is proposed to carry out at Annapolis. Having got it firmly fixed in mind that or means "or" and not "and," the Librarian is standing pat.

Hence there brood over Annapolis rumors of war to the knife. Many a valiant champion of reform and economy is represented to have blanched at the prospect of having the pruning knife come between himself and perquisites long enjoyed. If there were a man holding down the job of Librarian, possibly a compromise might be reached. Blandishment and threats might avail. Graft and a "divvy" might settle the disputed point. But as matters stand there is "nothing doing."

The heartless procedure of the lady in the case may suggest that with more of them on guard there would be more economy and less gush about it.

SPEAKER PEEPLES is probably too new at Annapolis to understand that the chaplain never begins to pray for 'em this early unless they are in a pretty bad way.—Baltimore News.

LAKE FORD.

As robin red breast has been paying us a visit during the stormy days of January, I will try to give a few items from this section of Garrett.

The young people have been making the best use of the fine sleighing snow.

Mr. Asa Lewis has returned to the West Virginia Wesleyan University at Buckhannon.

Mr. Jesse Wolfe was prevented from returning to college by the illness of his father, who, we are glad to learn, is improving under the care of Dr. A. B. Rinehart, of Terra Alta, and Miss Gertrude Wyckoff, a trained nurse of Fairmont, W. Va.

Mr. Ora Teets is helping Mr. M. H. Frankhouser manufacture props.

Miss Blanch Chance has been ill for some time but is now improving.

A number of people from this section attended quarterly meeting at Cranesville, W. Va., at which time Rev. Reed, the district superintendent, preached.

Mrs. Alvin Friend, of Sang Run, was visiting here recently.

ENUMERATORS RATES OF PAY

Census Director Durand Establishes a Classification of the Compensation of Census Takers.

The varying wage scales in different parts of the country and the differences in the nature and extent of the local difficulties confronting the enumerators in the larger geographical divisions of the United States have influenced and guided United States Census Director Durand in the adoption of a classification of enumerators' rates of compensation, within the limits prescribed by the United States Census law enacted by Congress.

The different classes of rates will be so applied that in general the average enumerator will earn substantially the same actual amount in one district as in another, even though the population may be much sparser in one than in the other, with other conditions also different. Regard is paid to the fact that prevailing wages and salaries are higher in some parts of the country than in others, but, aside from this, the Director's aim is to adjust the rates so as to make the earnings of enumerators substantially uniform. Where per capita rates would not give sufficient pay, the per diem rates are prescribed. The rates in general will be so adjusted as to give a slightly higher average amount to the enumerators than they received in 1900.

Per diem rates of pay will be paid to the census enumerators in the sparsely settled rural districts of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Texas, Utah, Wyoming and Washington.

The rate will range from $5 to $6 per day for the enumeration of the rural areas outside of cities and towns. Six dollars is the highest rate authorized by law.

The Director realizes that in many districts of the far West it will be impossible to secure competent men to act as enumerators at a rate of compensation less than that being paid for ordinary classes of work in the same area. Were enumerators in such districts paid only on the per capita basis, their compensation would be unreasonably low.

The enumerators in the thinly inhabited country sections of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas also will be compensated on a per diem basis. Certain difficult or sparsely settled enumeration districts in other states will be included among those to which the per diem rates will apply, as the conditions of the enumerator could not make fair earnings at any of the per capita rates established.

This announcement was made by Census Director Durand in order to counteract the deterrent effect upon applications for enumerators' places in the far West and Southwest states of the widely circulated and erroneous statement that per capita rates of pay were to be given in the sparsely populated regions named.

In this connection the Director has issued to the census supervisors a detailed statement of the classification of rates adopted for the compensation of enumerators in the Thirteenth Census, commencing April 15 next.

There are three general rates—the per capita, the mixed and the per diem.

The first and second general rates have five subdivisions each.

The per diem rates range from $3 to $3.50, $4, $4.50, $5, $5.50 and $6, and are to be paid for a day of eight hours' work.

For enumerators on the per capita basis, which will be that most widely used, the pay for each inhabitant is: Class A, 2 cents; class B, 2½ cents; class C, 3 cents; class D, 3½ cents, and class E, 4 cents. Such enumerators will also be paid for each farm as follows: Class A, 20 cents; class B, 22½ cents; class C, 25 cents; class D, 27½ cents, and class E, 30 cents. These rates are in each case 5 cents or more higher than those paid in 1900, when the range was from 15 to 20 cents. For each establishment of productive industry the rate for each class is 30 cents. For each barn and inclosure containing live stock, not on farms, the pay is 10 cents for each class.

Under the mixed rate, which is a combination of the per capita and the per diem, there are five subclasses alphabetically arranged, and the rate per diem is: Class F, $1; G, $1.25; H, $1.50; I, $1.75, and J, $2. For each inhabitant the pay is: Class F, 2 cents; G, 2½ cents; H, 2½ cents; I, 2½ cents, and J, 3 cents. For each farm: Class F, 15 cents; G, 17½ cents, H, 17½ cents; I and J, 20 cents each. For each establishment of productive industry the rate is 20 cents for each class.

HEALTH MAN IS REMOVED

Dr. H. W. McDomas, of Garrett County, Out of Registrar's Office.

The state board of health met Thursday in Baltimore and decided to remove from the office of Register of Vital Statistics of Garrett county Dr. Henry W. McComas, county health officer, who occupied the position ex-officio. A successor to Dr. McComas has not yet been named.

The reason, it is said, was due to the unsatisfactory records which he has been supplying the state board. Records of births and deaths, it was said, were delayed months at a time, and frequently incomplete. A satisfactory performance of the duties of the office, it was also said, has never been obtained in Garrett county.

Under the law of the state the board will operate the office for three months, and if it is shown that the number of births, deaths and cases of disease exceeds by 10 per cent the number reported in the same months of last year, the county will be required to pay the expenses of the office instead of the state paying the fees.

The office of register of vital statistics is not a salaried position, a fee of 20 cents for each birth or death reported being paid instead. Reporting cases of disease is regarded as incidental, and no fee is paid for them. In Garrett county in the course of the last year, however, there were enough births and deaths to total $71 in fees.

The state board also indorsed the recommendation of the Hygiene Commission appointed by Governor Crothers. One of the recommendations of the commission is that an increase appropriation be made to the board to help the fight against tuberculosis. Another provides for a yearly appropriation of $1,000 to publish health bulletins.

The commission has also recomemded the reorganization of the state health department into five bureaus, providing for subdepartments of communicable disease, bacteriology, chemistry, vital statistics and sanitary engineering. It is also recommended that a sanitary engineer be appointed to preside over the bureau, the duty of which will be to inspect and regulate water supplies, sewerage and ventilation of public buildings.—Baltimore Sun.

The above action by the State Board has been in contemplation for some months. Other counties of the state have been lax in their reports as well as Garrett. This county, almost surrounded by other states, is the hardest in which to gather statistics, hence the reports made by the health officer have at times been delayed, owing to his inability to obtain from the physicians reports of births and deaths and other data.

SANG RUN.

Our little town was quite a business place during the good sledding.

Miss Mary Browning was sick last week, but was able to take her place at the church organ Sunday evening.

Mr. Elza Wolfe, of near here, has pneumonia.

Mrs. Thomas Bishoff and Miss Edna Friend, of Hoyes, were visiting Mrs. Delia Friend Sunday.

Mr. William Browning has moved back to his old home farm.

Mr. Roy Friend has moved to the Lemuel Savage farm, near Sang Run.

Mr. Marshal Frankhouser was thrown from a horse several days ago and had his leg broken.

Mrs. J. Alvin Friend visited friends at Cranesville Sunday.

Mr. Robert Hoye has moved to Fork Run where he has taken a tract of timber and will keep camp for Mr. Milton Lytle.

Mrs. Earl Friend was the guest of friends and relatives at Cranesville last week.

Mr. Elijah Hove took a flying trip to Friendsville a few days ago.

AVILTON.

Miss Annie Lohr, who has been visiting at the home of O. S. Fike, has returned to her home at Deer Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Michael are rejoicing over the arrival of a daughter.

The following party of young people spent a pleasant evening at Mr. D. M. Merrill's last week: Misses Ethel and Maggie Anderson, Minnie Pope, Emma Croft, Annie and Martha Broadwater, and Messrs. Raymond Anderson, Harry Croft, Philip Beeman and Wm. Broadwater.

Mr. Cecil Coleman, who has had a severe attack of pneumonia, is convalescent.

Jesse Merrill, who has been visiting his parents here, has returned to Alexander, W. Va.

Local Option Situation.

It is said an effort will be made to repeal the local option law for Washington county, now on the statute books, at the present session of the Legislature. Any such effort, it is said, will be vigorously resisted by the temperance people of the county. The delegation in the Legislature from the county is said to be divided on the question of the repeal of the law.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT

Cash System Adopted By J. M. Davis & Sons.

OAKLAND, MD., January, 1910.

For several years we have endeavored to show our customers the necessity of buying for cash and on January 1st, 1907, adopted a cash system. The plan was fair to all but for various reasons was not carried out as fully as it should have been. We now find many open accounts on our books, all of which are due and should be paid, the majority of them small, but amounting to several thousand dollars, scattered among several hundred people and in many cases difficult to know just where they live or how to reach them with a statement of their account, and when we do find them our experience has been that less than ten per cent. remit promptly and in many cases the account is lost or expense of collection takes all profit so that those who pay cash have to pay profit enough to overcome such losses or buy the goods where they can get them at cash prices from the merchant who sells for cash.

We are trying in every way possible to sell our class of goods as low as they are sold in our large towns and business centers, but in order to do this must insist on carrying out the cash system, or where time is given, a note that can be used.

Should you owe us a bill we hope you will make arrangements to pay us promptly as we must collect up all old accounts, and where it is impossible to pay cash close the account by note on or before March 1st, as our plan is not to charge any goods on open account after that date and then to place unsettled accounts in the hands of a collector.

We want your trade and have gone to great expense to have an up-to-date hardware and house furnishing store and propose to treat everyone as fair as possible and to sell goods at rock bottom prices to cash buyers or to parties giving their note who are worthy of credit.

The manufacturers, jobbers and merchants in general are all adopting a cash system, especially on steel goods, and it is impossible for merchants to sell goods on the same terms and make the profit of former years. This has been brought about by the methods adopted and selling for cash at a small per cent. to draw trade from our smaller towns and country districts, thus making it necessary for the smaller merchants to adopt similar plans instead of carrying the accounts on their books.

We are making this change for several excellent reasons and only after carefully considering all sides of the question. We believe it will be in every way a distinct gain to our customers even more than to ourselves.

In a cash business all losses on bad accounts, for whatever cause, are avoided; bookkeeping and collection expenses are done away with; there is no possibility of disputes and wrangles over accounts; the merchant always has ready money to buy goods at the lowest spot cash prices and to profit by all discounts.

To make up for these losses and various expenses we have been forced to charge enough for our goods to cover them by the profits. Every store doing business on a credit basis must do this—or quit.

The people of this community want low prices, they want us to meet outside competition, to which they must pay cash. We can do it on a cash basis—in fact can guaraatee you at least a good per cent. saving on your purchases.

This change of policy does not mean a sacrifice of quality or going back on the standards we have set ourselves. In every single item we can and shall give you better goods for the same price or the same article for less where there has not been an advance in prices.

This change, too, implies no question of our reflection on anyone's ability to pay what he honestly owes or his willingness—it simply gives us the means to serve all our customers better.

The generous patronage you have given us we appreciate. We want you to continue it and shall make it richly worth your while by the much closer prices cash business will enable us to quote.

Mail and telephone orders will receive prompt attention, payable on receipt and approval of goods.

Trusting that our plans and service will meet with your approval and that we may have a continued share of your patronage, we remain,

Yours,

Mrs. William R. Offutt and two children returned to their home in Oakland yesterday from a visit of several weeks to Cumberland relatives and friends.

Mr. Leonard Lochner, of this office, has gone to Pittsburg, Pa., where he will be in charge of a job printing office. He is an excellent workman and will make good in the Smoky City.

Mr. George D. Browning, of Swallow Falls, was registered at the Frantz Hotel last Friday evening, going from here Saturday morning to a point near Beverly, West Va., on business.

Mr. D. C. Feather, formerly of Mountain Lake Park, now a prominent and very prosperous business man of Pitcairn, Pa., was elected a director of the First National Bank at that place last Tuesday.

Mr. Charles E. Hilleary, of near Gorman, was in Oakland and vicinity last Monday and Tuesday buying cattle for spring delivery. He purchased three or four droves of feeders which he will put in condition for market next fall.

Mr. J. H. Moore, superintendent of the White Rock Sand Company, returned to Oakland from Clarion, Pa., last Saturday morning and resumed his position, which during his absence, was filled by Mr. C. F. Hammond, of Oakland.

Mr. Henry W. McComas returned from Baltimore yesterday morning, he having gone to that city Sunday afternoon to be present at the operation performed upon Mrs. G. A. Fraley at the Johns Hopkins Hospital Monday morning.

Mrs. Ella P. Miller underwent a very severe surgical operation at the Home Sanitorium in Oakland last Thursday afternoon for the removal of a cancerous growth. The operation was performed by Drs. Hawkins, of Cumberland, and Hinebaugh, of Oakland. The patient is doing exceeding well and her many friends in Oakland hope for her speedy recovery.

Mr. G. A. Fraley returned from Baltimore last night. He had been in that city for a number of days with Mrs. Fraley who was operated upon Monday for the removal of a tumor which had formed upon her brain and which operation was successful to some extent. Mrs. Fraley rallied from the operation very nicely and when Mr. Fraley left there yesterday afternoon she was in excellent spirits.

Senator Speicher, accompanied by his cousin, Joseph Beeghley, of Accident, also by Mr. and Mrs. John L. Englehart, Mrs. William Englehart and her son, drove up to Oakland from Accident Sunday morning. Senator Speicher and Mr. Beeghley went to Baltimore the same afternoon where the latter will enter a hospital for treatment. The rest of the party remained in Oakland where they were the guests for several days of Prof. and Mrs. J. S. Gnegy.

It is awfully hard to beat the high-price game. We thought the limit had been reached in the matter of excuses for further boosting, but now comes along the shoe man and says he must raise the price of shoes because meat has got so high that people are not eating it, and in consequence the packers are not killing so many cattle and hides are scarce, therefore the price of leather has advanced. That is to say, if we don't eat high-priced beef we have got to pay out a good part of what we save in the higher price for shoes. Can you think of any way to get ahead of the game?

OVERCOME BY GAS

Miss Mollie McCall Had a Narrow Escape Last Thursday Afternoon.

Miss Mollie McCall, daughter of Mr. Bert McCall, who resides in the A. C. Whetsell house on Oak street, narrowly escaped death last Thursday afternoon caused by fumes of gas escaping from a stove in a room occupied by the young lady.

Miss McCall had lighted the gas in the stove and then fell to sleep on a lounge in the room. The odor of escaping gas was detected by other members of the family, and upon investigation the young lady was found in a semi-conscious condition. She was aroused and taken out in the open air where she at once lapsed into insensibility and it was only through the efforts of Dr. Legge, who was called in to see her, that she was restored to consciousness. For several days the effect of the gas was felt by Miss McCall.

By advertisement published elsewhere in this paper today Sheriff Andrew Shartzer gives notice of the sale of three valuable building lots in Friendsville, the property of George R. Long and wife. The sale will be made on the premises Saturday, February 12th, at 11 o'clock.

The suddenness with which the snow left Tuesday raised the waters of Wilson creek, flowing through town, and flooded a number of cellars. For a short time Tuesday afternoon property owners were somewhat alarmed over the prospect of the water entering the lower floors of the buildings located along the stream, but a drop in the temperature along towards evening allayed their fears. Yesterday morning the stream was slightly above its normal condition.

Brakeman House on train No. 1 Saturday night had a remarkable escape from very serious injury or possible death. He had occasion, when the train was near Bloomington, to open the vestibule doors between two of the coaches when he slipped on the ice covering the steps and was precipitated to the track, the train at the time going at a high rate of speed. Someone who was a passenger witnessed the accident and as soon as the train could be stopped several men went back expecting to find Mr. House either badly hurt or dead. They were very much surprised, however, to meet the brakeman walking toward them, very little the worse for his sudden tumole, his only injury consisting of a lacerated eye, which was dressed by Dr. McComas who was a passenger on the train on his way home from Friendsville, where he had spent two days looking after sanitation there.

Accidentally Shot Herself.

Shortly after the curtain went up for the first act in the comedy-drama, "Sunset Ranch," produced last night at the Oakland opera house, Miss Dixie Cameron, the leading lady in the cast, accidentally shot herself in the hand. Fortunately the revolver was loaded with a stage shell, otherwise the accident would have resulted seriously. After a delay of a few minutes the play was resumed with the injured woman taking her part.

Local Inspectors' Course Begins January 31st, 1910.

The two weeks course in Entomology, Pathology and Horticulture given to the local inspectors of orchards will commence January 31st, 1910, at the Maryland Agricultural College. This short course is given the inspectors from year to year to better fit them to conduct their work in the inspection of orchards, especially for the control of the San Jose scale and peach yellows in the counties of the State. Special instruction is given in the identification and control of the more important insect pests and plant diseases and in the making and applying of insecticides and fungicides. In addition, the lectures in horticulture treat of practical orchard culture, cover crops, pruning, etc.

During the past two years there have been, in addition to the local inspectors, other persons in the State who have taken this short course for their own benefit. The course is free to all who would desire to take it, the expenses simply being those of traveling and board during the course.

All persons desiring to take the course should at once communicate with the State Horticultural Department, College Park, Md.

The Oakland Electric Company

Telephone Company Election.

Pursuant to the notice to stockholders of the Garrett County Telephone Company, published in these columns last week, a meeting was held at Hoyes Monday for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of business.

At the meeting Monday a majority of the stock was represented when the following directors were elected for the ensuing year: William A. Smith, Meshack Mattingly, Joseph H. McRobie, Clarence V. Guard, J. M. Durst and William Miller. The directors organized by the election of Mr. Smith as president and general manager of the company; D. S. Custer, of Friendsville, vice president; C. V. Guard, secretary, and J. A. DeWitt, treasurer.

A statement is in course of preparation which will be forwarded to the stockholders within a short time showing the exact financial status of the company. While no dividend has been declared for the past year the financial condition of the company is in an encouraging state, the debts are being slowly cleared up and within the next year or less it will be clear of difficulties and there is do doubt dividend declaring will become a habit.

HOYES.

The stockholders of the Garrett County Telephone Company held their annual meeting at this place Monday when officers for the ensuing year were elected—that is, the same officers were reelected—and some other important business transacted.

Mrs. S. P. Specht, of Deer Park, was the geust of Mrs. Willie Mattingly last Monday. Mrs. Specht was accompanied by her husband, whoattended the Telephone meeting.

Mr. Meshack Mattingly has been suffering very severely for several weeks with an immense carbuncle on the back of his neek.

Miss Freda DeWitt is spending a few weeks with her sister, Mrs. Bud Friend at Elder.

Mr. and Mrs. Otho Fike, of Avilton, spent Monday in Hoyes.

Quite a number of persons from this place, both young and old, were taking advantage of the good sleighing Sunday afternoon.

The young people of McHenry and this community gave a surprise party at the home of James Wilburn last Friday night. Judge from the time all returned to their homes all had a pleasant time.

B. B. Savage and sister Miss Della, who have been visiting relatives in the east for two years past, left Hoyes Monday for the far west. They will go over the southern route by way of Louisiana, Texas and New Mexico, spending a short time on the way. They will then join their two sisters at Santa Monica Beach, Cal.

No doubt the friends of Mrs. C. E. Hoye will be pleased to know through this paper that she landed safely in the States and is pleasantly situated at Santa Monica, and her health is improving with the change of climate. She will be joined by her husband in the early spring.

Mrs. Snopps and Mrs. Shaffer are visiting Mrs. Allen Glover at the present time.

Was It Worth While?

Some time ago one of the most prominent clothiers of Keyser, West Virginia, thought that he was paying too much money for heating and lighting his store and he had the idea that he could get the same results if he used natural gas for this purpose in place of the heating and lighting facilities he then was using.

After consulting with his plumber, he decided to put in five arcs, each containing four lights, and one heating stove. The arc lights cost him $9.50 each, total $47.50. The stove cost him $13.50, and the cost of the necessary piping was $70.50.

In a letter he had this to say concerning his investment:

"Before installing natural gas in my store on Main Street, the cost of heating and lighting the store room was approximately $110 a year. I now use natural gas for both heating and lighting purposes, and this cost me $24.50 for the year 1908.

"BY PLACING NATURAL GAS IN MY STORE, THE AMOUNT SAVED TO ME IN THE COURSE OF THE YEAR WAS $85.50, AND MY STORE IS BETTER HEATED AND BETTER LIGHTED THAN WHEN I WAS USING COAL AND ELECTRIC LIGHTS."

A copy of the above letter is on file in our office over the signature of the merchant who sent it to us.

The investment, of course, was worth while. He had his store equipped for the best heating and lighting facilities obtainable, and after paying all expenses for this equipment, he was still $15 to the good as compared to what his former expenses were. In brief, HE PAID ALL HIS EXPENSES AND STILL HAD MORE THAN HALF ENOUGH LEFT TOWARDS HIS NEXT YEAR'S HEATING AND LIGHTING BILLS.

VALUE OF GOOD ROADS

How One Kansas Community Learned a Lesson.

THE EXPERIMENT A SUCCESS.

Government Expert Showed What a Composition of Sand and Gumbo Would Do When Properly Handled. Many Benefits Realized.

Until recently the farmers south of Dodge City, Kan., were put to all sorts of inconvenience getting to town with their crops for market. In that section of Ford county is as good wheat land probably as can be found in the state. The owners of these lands are for the most part Germans, and their success in raising large crops was proverbial. But they had one particular legitimate complaint. That was the condition of the road between their farms and Dodge City.

For about two and one-half miles the main county thoroughfare passed through the sand hills. This sand hill road was about the worst to be found in that section. There were places in which the wheels sank into the sand halfway to the hubs, while the remainder of the distance was most difficult of passage. In the places where the sand was deepest an empty wagon drawn by two horses had hard work getting through. There was only one time when this road was in a fairly good condition, and that was directly after a hard rain. It would then pack itself hard. But this good condition would last only a day or two, and as rains are not overfrequent in this part of the state the sand hills road was bad nearly the year around. The citizens of Dodge City realized that they were confronting a serious problem, for many of the farmers were threatening to move away.

They appealed to Representative Edward H. Madison, who became interested. He went to the good roads bureau of the department of agriculture in Washington and asked that a roads expert be sent to Ford county. The request was immediately granted. W. L. Spoon was sent to Dodge City. After looking over the sand hills he made this reassuring statement:

"Your people can have as good roads as anywhere in the country and with as little expense as anywhere. I'll show you how to build 100 yards of good road through the worst sand, and with that lesson you can continue it."

In the low places in the sand hills Mr. Spoon found close to the proposed road a gumbo-like soil which he mixed with 75 per cent of sand. With this mixture he constructed a road that after a hard winter and almost constant travel is still like a race track.

The proposed road was first lined—center stakes and side stakes set at the required distances. The roadbed surface was plowed, disorganizing every part of it. The harrow was then used, separating turf and grass from the sand. The grading and leveling followed, making easy grades where required. The road plow was again used, this time outside the stakes. Three furrows were thrown to the stakes, making a brace to hold the clay in the roadbed. On top of the clay bottom in the road trench were spread sand and gumbo, care being taken that no grass or roots were left in it. The mixture of sand and gumbo was slanted so as to shed the water. Time hardens the gumbo land mixture.

This 100 yards of experiment waked up the farmers and the city folk of Dodge. Immediately two and one-half miles additional road were constructed. For nine months the road has stood the test, and the farmers in other parts of the county are building similar roads.

"What benefit has been derived from this road improvement?" was asked W. J. Fitzgerald, lieutenant governor, a large merchant in Dodge City.

"That's hard to answer," he said, "because the benefits have been so many and varied. The town people have had an increase in business, and the farmers have made more on their produce because of the ease in which they get their stuff to market. But, above all, the farms south of town, whose owners had to depend upon the old road, have increased in value 25 per cent. This is not an estimate, but founded upon the transfers actually made since the new road was built. Our people, who a year ago were despondent and saw no remedy for the bad road conditions, are now enthusiastic good roads builders."

How to Avoid Making Ruts.

Serious damage soon results from the common practice of driving in the track made by preceding vehicles, especially with heavy loads on narrow tires. Ruts would scarcely, if ever, appear on a well constructed road if drivers would vary their track even only a few inches. It would be noticed that, no matter how deep the rut, it will disappear when a sharp turn occurs as the horses vary their course around a corner and traffic spreads out over the full width of the road. This is one of the principal causes of deterioration of a macadam road and could easily be remedied with a little care on the part of the drivers.

Bad Highway Building.

A road engineer puts it this way: "There ought to be a law to stop fools building highways. This idea that the outer edge of a highway—sod, dirt and stone, all—should be thrown into the center of the road ought to entitle the people who do it to ninety days in jail."

AN UNCANNY BREEZE.

It Blows From a Scar In the Forehead of a Famous Medium.

"No one who has seen the effects of a seance upon the Italian medium Eusapia Palladino could doubt its genuine character, as far as the medium is concerned," says a writer in McClure's. "At the conclusion of a seance she is faint, dizzy, nauseated, extremely weak and remembers little that has occurred during the seance, while her face becomes deeply lined, greenish yellow in color and appears to be shrunk almost to half its natural size.

"Another remarkable phenomenon frequently seen is this: There is a scar on Eusapia's forehead on the left side about an inch long, from which issues during and after a seance a mysterious cold breeze, clearly perceptible to the hands. When tested by a thermometer it has caused a fall of 3 or 4 degrees.

"Immediately over this scar there is one white lock of hair. The rest of her hair is grayish brown in color. After one seance I examined this famous scar, touching it with my fingers, and distinctly felt the cold breeze, which was perceptible to all of us.

"We covered the medium's mouth and nose with our hands to prevent her from blowing and held our own breath. The breeze was still perceptible.

"Finally, in order to test the hypothesis of hallucination, we held to her forehead a small tissue paper flag about two or three inches square, having covered her mouth and nose as before and being careful not to breathe upon it ourselves. The result was that the flag was blown out from her head several times strongly and finally so forcibly that it wrapped itself completely around the flagstaff supporting it. Thus the objective nature of this cold breeze was satisfactorily demonstrated."

Clothes of English Workmen.

I saw great numbers of workingmen among the mills and elsewhere in England, but outside of railroad quarters in London I did not see a single man wearing overalls. England is a cold country, and they want warm clothes. I did see quantities of good woolen breeches made from three-quarter cloth weighing from ten to twelve ounces selling at retail from 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. a garment, less than the price at which an eight ounce cotton cloth in overalls would cost a workingman in America, and I was told that woolen clothes were worn universally by the workingmen in England. In traveling through the country the great flocks of sheep indicated the source of this very cheap supply, and, while the cost of cotton garments for both men and women appears to be about the same as in America, the cost of the woolen garments appeared to be about one-half.—Textile Manufacturers' Journal.

Burglar Proof Plate Glass.

Consul William Bardell has reported from Rheims that a French inventor has come out with a new burglar proof plate glass, absolutely transparent at a thickness of one inch and yet which will resist a machinist's hammer long enough for a sleepy copper a block away to run up and interfere. Jacketed revolver bullets may be fired against the plate without breaking through. In one test a heavy piece of cast iron was hurled against the glass, breaking through to the extent of only two or three square inches. Ordinary plate glass used in America may have three or four square feet smashed through with a common brick carried in a hand bag or wrapped up as a paper parcel. Practically the seven-eighths inch to one inch glass is burglar proof until such time as the enterprising felon discovers some effective substitute for the brick.

Moving Pictures.

The tiresome vibratory effect so often seen when bioscope or kinetograph pictures are thrown on the screen is not due to the passage of the film itself across the front of the lantern, but to the shutter, which cuts off the light at rapidly repeated intervals during the motion of the film. By simply increasing the frequency of interposition of this shutter from fourteen to fifty-six times a second—that is, by using a motor working at four times the usual speed—this painful vibratory sensation is completely suppressed.

Rodin's Statue of Hugo.

Rodin's statue of Victor Hugo, which was the subject of much criticism when it was exhibited at the Paris salon, has been erected in the garden of the Palais Royal. The poet is shown resting against a massive rock in a ruminating attitude. "In conception the work is as daring," writes an artist from Paris to a Brussels paper, "as the Balzac by Rodin; but, while the latter represents the poet wrapped in a gown so completely that only the head is visible, Hugo's form is devoid of clothing of any kind."

Erin's Attractions.

The people of England still have a vague idea that Ireland is inhabited by strange, black visaged people who lie behind hedges and shoot at strangers. But one may prophesy that within ten years Ireland will be one of the most popular summer resorts in the world. It has the scenery, the romance and the atmosphere.—London Town and Country.

ROAD DRAGGING EXPERIENCES

Pennsylvania Supervisor Tells of Value of Using the Drag.

Supervisor Albert Groff of East Hempfield township, Lancaster county, Pa., writes about the drag as follows:

"First of all, road dragging smooths the roads. We have found that out since we have been using the drag. The second thing is that road dragging makes the roadbed firmer and enables it to shed water quicker than a road which has been undragged and neglected. This is another of our experiences. The third thing we have shown has been that a little dragging done at the right time is worth a lot more than dragging done in the thick dust. This latter dusty condition of the road is not the time to work on the road with a drag, but any other time will do, though the best time of all is right after a rain. When we first began to drag the township roads the neighbors, many of them, were skeptical. So were we. But as things went on the proof was demonstrated, and now we are beginning to wonder why we did not adopt it years ago.

"The principle of working up the soft, sticky mud of a clay or loam character means that it will grow hard when left to the rays of the sun, and it is this idea of working up a soft roadbed after every rain, of smearing over the entire road surface a thin layer of soft, pliable mud which will become dry and hard, that I now realize is giving us our solid roadbeds where the drag is working. Our supervisor board pays the farmers who drag the roads by their farms 35 cents per hour for their labor. We are planning to put more drags on our township roads very soon. We have forty-four miles of dirt roads in East Hempfield township, our assessed valuation is $3,000,000, and our road tax is 2 mills."

BOWLDER FOUNDATION.

One of New England's Most Substantially Built Highways.

If you were to try to find the most substantially built road in New England it would not in all probability be necessary to go farther than Acton Center, Mass., to locate the one which would take first premium for solidity.

Just beyond the town was a considerable hill, but there is not as much of a climb there now as formerly, for it has been cut down very perceptibly.

The old condition was far from pleasing to Augustus Conant, who lives but a short distance from the foot of the hill. He informed the town that if the hill could be cut down and slightly relocated he would put in the necessary foundation for a first class road, the town to put on the finishing touches, and his proposition was readily accepted by the voters.

For the new basis of the new highway Mr. Conant had carted to the spot many loads of field stones and innumerable bowlders, large and small. Some of them weighed several tons, and it is asserted that there is not in all probability another road in the United States which can boast of such a foundation as the one which was constructed to the liking of the town's benefactor. In some parts of the road it has a solid stone foundation of several feet.

TAFT ON NEED OF ROADS.

The Movement Is General and of Great Value, Says the President.

President Taft has indicated his interest in good roads, the latest expression being elicited in connection with a movement for better highways in Virginia, this taking shape in an immediate plan for a road from the national capital to Richmond. In a letter on the subject the President says:

"I regard this as part of the general good roads movement in the country, and I have pleasure in saying that there is no movement that I know of that will have a more direct effect to alleviate the difficulties and burdens of the farmer's life, will stimulate the traffic and add to the general happiness of the people more than the establishment of good roads.

"I do not think that because this may have been stimulated by people using automobiles it is to be frowned upon, for, while persons using automobiles are by no means the most important in the community, the fact that their sharp interest has focused the attention of the public on the movement entitles them to credit.

"I have no doubt that within the authority which is his the secretary of agriculture will be glad to assist by recommendation and practical advice the methods to be pursued in good road building in Virginia."

Scheme to Improve Roads.

Under a new arrangement to systematically improve the roads of Atchison county, Kan., each trustee will be required to have his township of road dragged after every hard rain. It is estimated that a mile of road can be dragged once at a cost of 50 cents and that the cost of keeping each mile in good condition during a year will be $5. The new law calls for a special tax levy to create a road fund.

Drag, Brother, Drag!

If your road is soft or rough,
  Drag, brother, drag.
Once or twice will be enough.
  Drag, brother, drag.
Wheels won't sink into a rut
Every time you strike a cut.
Teams won't worry if you'll but
  Drag, brother, drag.

'Twon't take long to fix your road.
  Drag, brother, drag.
If you'd pull a bigger load,
  Drag, brother, drag.
It means dollars in the end,
Saved on teams, my friend,
So to this your best ear lend—
  Drag, brother, drag

TANGLED ROMANCE.

A Letter, a Man and the Two Margaret Burtons.

By FRANCIS A. COREY.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

There were two Margaret Burtons in Roxboro. Of course John Graham's letter went to the wrong one, and of course it was one of those letters that only one pair of eyes—the ones for whose delectation it had been written—should have looked upon.

"Dear old friend," it said, "I have come back from the west after twenty years. For a long time I have felt strongly the drawing of the old ties—so strongly I could no longer resist. I shall give myself the pleasure of calling upon you this afternoon at 4.

"JOHN GRAHAM."

Margaret sighed involuntarily as she refolded the letter—sighed because it had not been intended for herself. It was easy to read between the lines. Why was not she the happy woman to whom an old sweetheart had come back?

She was comparatively a newcomer in Roxboro and had never heard of John Graham. His straightforward letter pleased and interested her. She felt sure he was just the sort of person she would have liked for a friend.

"I'll take it to the Margaret Burton to whom it belongs," she said, swallowing hard. "How surprised she will be! I wonder—if she—cared! Perhaps that is why she never married."

Margaret took down her hat and wrap, then suddenly stood still. It was half past 3, and Miss Burton lived at the other end of the village. Why take the long walk in the afternoon heat? The fact that the letter had gone astray was no sign that the writer would do the same. Miss Burton would simply be taken unawares.

A minute later Margaret was in her bedroom, hurriedly donning a blue and white sprigged muslin, her most becoming gown. Afterward she went out on the front porch and seated herself in the low rocker that was her favorite retreat.

Presently the gate clanged. Peering excitedly through the vines, she saw a middle aged man with ruddy cheeks coming up the path.

John Graham, of course! And all at once she knew she had been secretly hoping he would come.

Pausing at the steps, he asked courteously, with uplifted hat:

"Does Margaret Burton live here?"

"That is my name," she replied and, flushing, held out his letter. "This came a little while ago. There has been a mistake. It is intended for the Margaret Burton who lives in the big white house on the Dixville road. Our letters often get mixed. I'm—I'm—sorry."

The man looked at her squarely for the first time, a twinkle in his fine gray eyes. He even laughed a little.

"I thought strange of it when the hotel porter sent me here. There was but one Margaret Burton in my day. One would hardly expect to find two of a name in the same village."

"This place was left to me five years ago by my uncle, Silas Spear."

"I remember him well. I used to steal apples from that tree in the corner of the fence." His smiling eyes held hers for a moment. "May I sit down, please? I've had a hot, dusty walk."

Margaret set forward a chair and brought a glass of water from the spring. She liked his manner. It had an ease and cordiality foreign to New England. Soon, greatly to her surprise, she found herself talking to him with the freedom of an old acquaintance.

"Not a word was said about another Miss Burton," he presently remarked.

A cloud suddenly darkened the blue of Margaret's sky. "I am so sorry—about the mistake," she faltered.

His mellow laugh rang out. He was evidently enjoying the situation.

"Are you? Well, I've noticed that things usually happen just about right." A queer expression crossed his face. "Do you believe in fate?" he asked abruptly.

"Oh, I don't know." Her face flamed again at the strange question. She felt guilty and ashamed, as if she had done something wrong. But she did not resent his searching look. There was something so sincere, so likable, about the man. Why had he come into her life since he was to go so quickly out of it? She owed it to her namesake and to herself to speed him on his way.

"Your Miss Burton's house is in plain sight from the gate," she said, rising hastily. "If you are rested you may wish to go at once."

For a moment John Graham hesitated. The porch was cool and inviting. He followed her down the fragrant path, so deep in thought he hardly heard her simple directions or noted the house she pointed out.

A sharp exclamation as a smart carriage turned the street corner suddenly recalled him to himself.

"There's Miss Burton now!" Margaret caught her breath. "You were asking if I believed in fate. I know now! Yes, I do believe in it."

He shot her a quizzical glance as he slipped through the gate. The carriage was now very near. Miss Burton's sudden appearance on the scene was not so surprising as one might be led to think. A flying rumor of her old lover's return to his native village had come to her ears. She had set out for the sole purpose of falling in with him. Emotions smoldered in her heart that could easily be fanned into flame.

"John Graham! Is it possible?" she exclaimed in well acted astonishment, and the carriage came to an abrupt halt.

Crumpling into his pocket the letter which was never to reach its rightful destination, John strode forward with extended hand.

"So you have not forgotten me, Margaret?"

"Forgotten you?" she echoed reproachfully. "Of course not. This is a delightful surprise. Won't you get in with me?" sweeping back the billows of her shimmering gown to make room at her side. "I want to hear all about you."

He climbed to the vacant place, and the carriage rolled down the street. Miss Burton's only recognition of Margaret had been a slight arching of her haughty brows. She had been troubled and puzzled at finding John Graham in the latter's company. Rumor said he had come back a rich man.

Margaret watched them out of sight with a dull ache at her heart. It was as if something cheering and hopeful had gone forever out of her life. She crept back to the porch, feeling suddenly broken and old.

The sun dropped slowly behind the purple hills. By and by a vesper sparrow began its evening song in the cool dusk of the overhanging elm. Margaret had hardly stirred for hours. She was seeing a long vista of lonely years. Never had she felt so sorely the need of human companionship, a strong arm to lean upon.

Suddenly the gate clicked. She lifted her head with a startled air. A stalwart figure loomed big in the dusk and stillness, coming up the path. As it resolutely climbed the steps she swept a shaking hand across her eyes.

"You see, I have come back," John Graham said, looking earnestly down at her.

Margaret sat speechless; it seemed so unreal, so like a dream.

"Don't be shocked by the impetuousness of my wooing," he went on, a thrilling tenderness in his deep voice. "We never loiter over things in the hustling land where I have made my home. I came back to Roxboro to marry the other Margaret Burton. But it's you I want. Do you think you could ever love me?"

It was as if a new note had come into the sparrow's song, and the leafy boughs, tossing in the wind, seemed to laugh for very happiness.

"I know I could," Margaret answered softly.

Concerning Nice Things to Eat.

Odd that the things we like are always bad for us. Why, for instance, should old bread be more wholesome than new? The latter's reputation is simply shocking, and the excellence of the stale loaf is preached in every household. Yet does bread fresh from the oven actually possess injurious qualities which it loses in a day or two, or is it only our fancy? asks Rosaline in Black and White. Hard boiled eggs when hot and not included in pie or curry are dangerous to tackle, but when cold and savory titbits on toast one may eat them with impunity. Of course plum pudding, salmon, all nice eatables, have a bad character, and sometimes one speculates if it may not be due to their very niceness and had its origin in bygone puritanism.

No doubt good people once believed it chastened the spirit to deny the flesh the delicacies it desired. Their sense of personal virtue waxed stronger after a meal of crusts and lentils than after one of turtle and fat capon, and it is not impossible that in the course of time we have confused physical with moral well being.

Safe Security.

The great banker looked keenly at the young man. "So you are temporarily embarrassed, eh?" he asked kindly.

"I am sorry to say I am," said the young man, emboldened by his manner.

"How much do you want?"

"A hundred pounds would tide me over."

"And what security can you offer?"

"I can offer you," said the young man impressively, "my own personal security."

The old man arose with a slow smile and raised the lid of an iron-bound chest which stood in the corner. "Will you get in here, please?" he said.

"In there? Why?"

"Because," was the reply, "this is the place in which I always keep my securities."—Pearson's Weekly.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

An easy mark is one who is so sorry for the other fellow that he takes long chances on getting in the boat with him.

It is hard to keep on good terms with an exacting person and never pays for the outlay of diplomacy.

Expect no gratitude from one you have favored unless you have still greater favors to bestow.

There is nothing like a good solid dose of hard work, with no visible means of escaping, to stimulate philosophy.

Sometimes we are courageous because we are too busy to stop to think how afraid we are.

Being careful is not all. The average burglar is a careful man.

Be good and you will be happy. Make good and you will be happier still.

The legal minded gentleman is not necessarily lawfully minded.

Many a man who thinks he is it finds on collecting all of the evidence that he is nit.

When you like to do a thing it is preposterous for people to think there is harm in it.

Explained.

He couldn't read a single line,
  He couldn't spell a word,
And yet he was the smartest chap
  Of whom the world had heard.
How could he be so wonderful?
  You'll know when you've been told.
We got it from his mother straight—
  He was just three days old.

Left Her Mark.

"I have designs on your son," said the frank and rather attractive young woman.

"Well," gasped the startled parent, "isn't this rather sudden? How about it? Are you a new woman coming to ask my consent?"

"Not exactly. I am a tattoo artist, and he hasn't paid me for the elaborate designs I worked on his arm."

This Queer World.

"I wonder why that couple look so happy?"

"They were just married."

"Oh, I see! And this other pair coming so blithely along here—they were just married, too, I presume?"

"Oh, no; not at all!"

"Weren't they?"

"No; they were just unmarried."

Right to Order.

"What is your defense?" asked the lawyer.

"What would you suggest?" demanded the accused.

"Have you an alibi?"

"No, but I can get one. My wife is mighty handy about making those things."

Bill Was Boss.

"You own this automobile, I believe?"

"I pay taxes on it."

"That constitutes ownership, doesn't it?"

"You couldn't make my hired man see it that way."

Saving Trouble.

"Jimmie, you ought to learn to spell now when you are young."

"Huh! What's the use?"

"So you will know how when you grow up."

"Say, I'm engaged to a stenographer."

Two of a Kind.

"I say, old chap, loan me a five, will you?"

"Sure. Delighted—if you will first do me a favor."

"I am your man. What is it?"

"Loan me a ten."

Zoological Note.

"You have traveled in China?"

"Yes."

"See anything of the yellow peril?"

"No. There were some animals in a cage at one place, but I didn't go round."

Must Be.

"That man is a hypnotist."

"Is he?"

"Yes; I have absolute proof of it."

"What's your proof?"

"His wife believes everything he says."

Would Queer Him.

"Can you pick the winner?"

"Sure."

"Why don't you?"

"He wouldn't win then."

Of Course.

"Molly, will you marry me?"
  Plaintively he pleaded.
"Harry, how you harry me!"
  Sighed the girl, but she did.

Unkind.

"I hate making a nuisance of myself."

"How wretched your life must be!"

ROMANCE OF A ROYAL PAIR'S ENGAGEMENT

Leopold's Opposition Forced Prince and Princess to Keep Love a Secret.

PARIS, Jan. 16.—The next royal marriage will surely be that of Prince Napoleon and Princess Clementine, youngest daughter of the late King Leopold, of Belgium. Prince Victor is the grandson of Jerome Bonaparte, King of Westphalia, and brother of Napoleon the Great. He is the son of that Bonaparte prince familiarly known as "plon-plon," who flourished during the reign of Napoleon the Third. Prince Victor's mother was a sister of King Victor Emmanual of Italy. He is the standard-bearer of the Bonapartists and their claimant to the throne of France. His marriage with the Princess Clementine, great-granddaughter of Louis-Philippe, adds strength to the Imperialistic cause.

The secret of the engagement of the Royal couple has been kept dark, owing to the fierce opposition of Leopold. They have been sweethearts for fifteen years and in spite of the vigilance of the autocratic Leopold have managed to meet in France. The old King had been known to mount, guard whip in hand in front of the Princess' apartments in the palace of Lzoken to prevent her receiving her royal lover.

Once driven to desperation, the unhappy girl openly defied him. It was at Cape Martin on the Riviera. The King dared to force his morganatic wife on the Princess. Clementine—all her royal blood fired with the indignity—fled toBrussels, where she planned an elopement and marriage with Prince Victor. But wiser counsels prevailed. It was pointed out they would be exiled from Belgium, and the prince is already an exile from France. But the death of the King has happily removed the last obstacle, and there is now no real reason why this union should not take place. King Leopold opposed the marriage lest Republican France should take offence—especially while England was casting a covetous eye on the Congo.

Every Bonaparte is spending a merry Christmas in consequence of this probable marriage. Even the aged Eugenie looks young again. The Cassaignacs are openly celebrating. Everyone wishes the faithful lovers a speedy union and a happy life. They have both suffered cruelly. The courtship has lasted fifteen years. Respect for the dead King will defer the official announcement, but we may certainly look forward to it in the near future.

While Prince Victor is looked upon as the claimant of the French throne (should the Republic fall) a still nearer claimant exists in that Charles Jerome Bonaparte of Washington, who was the grandson of Jerome Bonaparte, through his first wife, Elizabeth Patterson, of Baltimore.

Prince Victor is the grandson of the second wife, the Princess Katherine. He was forty-seven years of age his last birthday. The Princess Clementine is thirty-seven.

King Leopold's two children by the Barroness de Vanghan, have added a new Coont and a new Duke to European nobility. This conferring of titles upon his two illegitimate sons puts Leopcld in the rank of many other Kings, especially those of England and France.

For instance the present Duc D'Orleans is descended from that Duc D'Orleans, who was regent during the minority of Louis XV, and from the beautiful daughter of Madame de Monespan. The Baroness is quite as pretty and fascinating as Nell Gwynn, from whom the Duke of Saint Albans is descended.

A French King sent the fascinating Louis de Louereuille to spy upon the "Merry Monarch" and as a result England rejoices in the Duke of Richmond and Gordon.

The noble Duke of Grafton boasts an irregular descent from a royal house marked by a bar-sinster on his escutcheon. It was, however, bad taste on the part of King Leopold to call his eldest son Duke de Fervueren, for this is the name of the palace where his ill-starred sister, Empress Carlotta, lived after she had lost her reason in consequence of the death of her husband, who was shot in Mexico.

I have seen King Leopold, the Baroness de Vaughan and their two children at the Chateau de Lormos, which they rented from our Franco-American hostess, Madame Henri-Say. And never did a bourgeois family frolic more merrily than the aged King, the young Duke and Count and the lively Baroness. They made right merry in the beautiful chateau of Madame Henri-Say. Leopold used to compare himself to Louis XIV, who married his children's governess, Madame de Maintenon. And truly there may be some comparison. They were both great Kings. Louis built Versailles; Leopold built Laeken. Louis said, "I am the state," and when speaking of the Congo, Leopold said pretty much the same thing and meant it too.

Thanks to the humane influence of a number of American ladies, Lucion Millevoye, Deputy for Paris, is making a crusade in favor of our dumb animals, especially that animal most of all abused—the horse. M. Millevoye is very eloquent, and practice has made him a good orator. Like Saint Francis of Assysi, he looks upon beasts and birds as our fellow brothers. The exact phrase he employes is our "inferior brethern." Monsieur Millevoye, the modern Saint Francis, whom up to date no one ever accused of being a saint, believes all animals have souls. In support of his theory he quotes the late Cardinal Newman and Madame Lucie Gavon, the daughter of the late Felix Faure.

M. Millevoye is preaching a crusade against vivisection. He objects to J. D. Rockefeller's Institute for that reason. He goes further and takes a fling at the Americans for broiling their lobsters alive. His eloquence has completely won over the Chamber of Deputies, and in the future the school-books of Paris are to contain more precepts about gentleness to animals.

M. Lepine, the Perfect of Police, has issued an order forbidding cab drivers to use whips with knots or throngs. Better still he instructed the police to prosecute employers who make children carry weights too heavy for their years. And all this help for the helpless is due to the leaven of the humane American women residing in Paris.

Installing More Block Signals.

The Baltimore and Ohio railroad has authorized the installation of automatic block signals from Connellsville to Pittsburg, Pa., and from Laughlin Junction to New Castle, Pa., a distance of 112.6 miles. Six miles of the protection between Bessemer and Wheeling Junction, Pa., will be for four tracks, the remainder being double track. The signals three-position upper quadrant, and the lamps will be electrically lighted. The work will be commenced at once by the company's forces, under the direction of P. F. Patonall, signal engineer.

The Smiths.

As to the Smiths, a correspondent points out that while there are now about 350,000 members of the great family in England alone, in Old Testament times according to the First Book of Samuel, "there was no Smith throughout the land of Isreal." This verse the late Bishop Wilburforce spotted as the hardest one in the Bible to quote without smiling.—London Chronicle.

HAGNER AND NOYES FOR CONGRESS

Will Be Candidates for Sixth District Republican Nomination.

The Baltimore American last Friday says:

"Mr. Alexander Hagner, of Washington county, who was in Baltimore yesterday, said that it was his intention to be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress this year in the Sixth district. Mr. Hagner has long had an ambition to represent his district in the House of Representatives. In 1906 he missed the nomination by only one vote, Captain McDonald, of Montgomery, carrying off the honor. Two years later he was largely instrumental in bringing about the nomination of Colonel Pearre.

"If Colonel Pearre is not appointed to the federal bench it is understood that he will be a candidate to succeed himself.

"It is also understood that Mr. Thomas C. Noyes, of Montgomery, will be in the field.

"Thus far no candidate has come to the front in Frederick and Garrett, the other two counties of the district.

"It is generally accepted that Colonel Pearre will have the support of Allegany and Garrett counties on the first ballot.

Mr. Hagner will probably be backed by the delegation from his own county, though he may have opposition in the primaries. It is said that Mr. Joseph Roullette, a wealthy manufacturer, of Hagerstown, has congressional inspirations and is backed by one element of the Republican party in the county. Mr. Hagner has long been prominent in Republican politics in his county and in the state. He is now chairman of the state central committee for his county. Last year he was a candidate for the nomination for chief judge of his circuit to succeed Judge A. Hunter Boyd, but the honor went to Mr. D. Lindley Sloan, of Allegany county."

BEAUTIFUL STAR IN THE WEST

Simple Explanation of the Movement of the Planet Venus.

Out in the southwest these evening shines the most beautiful star, or to be more correct, the most beautiful planet in the sky. Astronomers, on account of its lustrous beauty, have named it Venus. In answer to a query concerning how Venus can be both evening and morning star, since it is nearer than the earth to the sun, the Springfield Republican says:

"There should be no difficulty in solving this problem by drawing a rough sketch, with the sun at the center of two concentric circles, one with any convenient radius, for the path of Venus, the other with a radius increased by half, for the earth's orbit. From this it will appear that at times Venus will be between us and the sun; when it exactly crosses the sun's disk a transit of of Venus occurs. Obviously when it is in line with the sun it can be above the horizon only in the day time, a condition which recurs when it is at the furtherest point of its orbit. But when its course along the zodiac carries it out of the direct line between the earth and the sun, it will lie either a little east of the sun, in which case it will lag behind the sunset and be the evening star, or to the west of the sun, in which case it will precede the sun in rising and be the the morning star. Even a crude diagram will make this plain. It was not understood by the ancient who gave the morning and the evening star separate names.

BEAUTIFYING A CITY.

Marked Improvement In Civic Conditions Throughout Country.

WHAT CLEVELAND HAS DONE.

The Ohio City Spent $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 to Tear Down Solidly Built Blocks of Structures to Create Open Mall For Public Buildigs, Etc.

The most important evidence of the new spirit of progress abroad in the land is manifest in what is called city planning. The impetus to civic beauty inaugurated by Daniel Burnham in the white wonder of the Columbian exposition awakened the world as never before to the possibilities in the new art of applying expert, comprehensive plans for handling congestion of population, manifold business requirements, tremendous traffic, hygienic and sanitary problems, with the highest possibilities of architectural and landscape beauty.

As a result one city after another has first investigated, then studied and later applied some systematic planning in a comprehensive way to recast or recreate the ugliness of the average American city into something at once more beautiful and healthful as a home center and of easier access commercially and industrially.

While a decade ago only four American cities claimed to have been built after any definite plan, today more than seventy American cities are following elaborate plans usually worked out by national experts and over 1,200 cities are following plans more or less comprehensive for the betterment of surrounding conditions. As a nation the tendency is for population to crowd into urban centers rather than to build up increased number of small villages and towns. Population by immigration alone is nearly 1,000,000 annually, which with increase from national sources will give us 100,000,000 more people in the United States in the next fifty years.

These people will largely live in cities. Many of them will drift to the middle west, the great food producing belt of the nation; hence the cities of the present cannot serve the requirements of such a future. The narrow streets and solidly built up areas cannot meet the demands of the increased traffic nor healthfully care for human interests confined in such congested districts. Recognizing all this, wise leaders are "taking time by the forelock" and providing for what is surely to come.

Cleveland, O., has turned out many blocks of solidly built up business structures to make an open civic center, a magnificent mall, about which are grouped the public buildings and the great railway terminals, at an expense of $20,000,000 to $30,000,000.

Conservative old Boston is cutting streets and boulevards through her business centers as ruthlessly and as wisely as ever Hausmann did when his magnificent avenues replaced the squalid byways of the slums of Paris. Boston is not only building splendid public structures, but building islands in old Charles river on which to place them.

The Harrisburg successes have made Pennsylvania's capital famous. Denver and St. Paul are each following expert plans calling for the opening of a civic center many blocks in extent leading up to their respective capitols.

Kansas City has developed a boulevard system second to none, while Los Angeles has begun a wonderful reorganization of her resources from plans prepared by Charles Mulford Robinson, that masterly civic art expert, whose published works on civic improvement are the text books of the profession.

New York city and Chicago have begun gigantic schemes whose magnitude both financially and for results to be accomplished stagger the conservative minds of students just beginning to see the trend of all this movement.

An Advance In Building Laws.

Incident to the campaign toward the "city beautiful," which is engaging considerable attention in Washington at the present time, it is interesting to note that the city of Berlin is taking effective measures to insure the success of a program of city beautification. In accordance with an ordinance approved by the municipal authorities, permits for new buildings in many portions of Berlin may be refused hereafter on purely aesthetic grounds, even where the requirements regarding fire protection and sanitation are satisfactorily filled. Under the Berlin regulations, which are the subject of lively discussion, plans for new buildings and proposed alterations of any kind can be approved only in case they correspond with the general style and character of the surroundings. New structures must "not impair the characteristic aspect of the street view of which they form a part." The neighborhoods of certain historic churches are especially designated as localities where particular care must be taken as to the impression created upon the eye by the entire perspective.

Nurseries Grow Plants For City.

The city nurseries of Manila are raising thousands of plants which are destined at some future time to adorn the city parks and military posts throughout the islands. The different hothouses are now filled with Philippine plants of all hues and degrees of beauty and age, which are taken out as occasion requires and transplanted in uninviting spots all over the city, making them restful to the eye and a welcome addition to those little oases which tend to make the city attractive.

THE END OF THE WORLD.

Various Scientific Opinions as to How It Will Come.

The terrible catastrophe in Italy which caused the inhabitants of the ill fated city of Messina to believe that the end of the world had come is only a foretaste on a small scale of what many eminent scientists believe will be the end of the world. That eternal problem of how the world will end is, in the opinion of many, a matter for scientific investigation, and it is curious that the majority believe that the earth will open up and fly to pieces in the most gigantic earthquake ever known—an earthquake that will wipe all life from the globe before the actual destruction of the earth is complete.

The late Grant Allen firmly believed that the world would end by the crust of the earth eventually giving way beneath the colossal weight above it, and Abbe Dupin, one of the greatest scientists of France, believes that doomsday will begin with a war that will envelop the greatest nations in Europe, this being followed by a plague the like of which has never been known, culminating with an earthquake that will practically shake the world to pieces.

H. G. Wells, whose scientific prophecies are well known, is, however, of a different opinion. The world will end, he declares, by its becoming entirely frozen over. It is a well known fact that every year more ice accumulates around the poles. In short, many millions of tons of ice in excess of that of the year previous settle about the earth's extremities each year, and in Mr. Wells' opinion this will gradually extend until the whole world is frozen over and every living thing is thus destroyed.

Several scientists, remarks a writer in Cassel's Sunday Journal, are of opinion that we shall perish by fire and this old world of ours with us. Nikola Tesla is convinced that the atmosphere of the world being so fully charged with electricity, the result will be a gigantic explosion by spontaneous combustion, when the world will be entirely encircled with flame, which in the space of a few seconds will destroy all life.

Two of the world's greatest scientists firmly aver that the end of the world will be brought about by astronomical conditions. Take Professor Marienberg, the noted Austrian student. In his opinion the earth will fly from its orbit and come in contact with one of the other planets that may chance to be in a direct line. The earth, being comparatively small, will, of course, get the worst of it and split into fragments at the collision. But, of course, directly the earth swerved from the orbit all living things would die and such an earthquake take place as would completely put the Italian catastrophe in the shade.

Just as interesting is the prognostication of M. Camille Flammarion, one of the greatest living scientists. After many years of study he has arrived at the conclusion that the world will in the twenty-fifth century come across the path of the comet Bella, which crossed our line a few years ago. On this occasion, however, a collision will take place, and, Bella being infinitely greater than the earth, a shock may be expected which, he calculates, will be 805 times greater than the shock caused by the collision between two trains each traveling at sixty-five miles an hour.

The Tip Situation In Berlin.

Things have come to such a pass in Berlin that it is suggested the police be called upon to regulate the gratuities one shall give in a restaurant. The Berlin Waiters' association is considering a proposal to fix a scale that shall set 12 per cent as the tips for orders under 75 cents and 10 per cent on orders for more than that amount. The newspapers are in a fever of discussion, with the prevailing opinion that the public must be reconciled to present conditions. Incidents are related in which restaurant patrons who have given small tips have had the money flung in their faces or have been made the object of abusive language from the voracious waiters. The proprietors are accused of fostering the tip hungryness and of collecting a percentage of the waiters' tip receipts.

New British Island.

Off the northwest coast of Australia there is an island which till recently belonged to no one. It is not a very large island—in fact, it measures only 385 yards by 30 yards. It has, however, a good anchorage, and for that reason its possession may at some time be valuable. The British government has therefore annexed the island, and an official notification of the fact recently reached the commonwealth minister for external affairs. The new British possession is known as Cartier island and is almost surrounded by coral reefs.—Westminster Gazette.

Stair Climbing Horse.

In a famous Berlin street the other day a huge crowd collected in order to witness the unusual spectacle of a horse in a window on the fourth story of a house bowing and smiling at the people below. It was the result of a wager between an English sportsman and the owner of a musical horse. The animal climbed the stairs two at a time, reached the top in less than two minutes, but took three to descend. Some dozen photographers immortalized the horse's laughs.

The Sultan's Waistcoats.

Abdul Hamid's 2,000 waistcoats and the hundreds of boxes of shirts and vests found in Yildiz kiosk recall the posthumous sale of King George IV.'s wardrobe, which realized £15,000.—London Chronicle.

PLEA FOR GOOD ROADS.

Pennsylvania Congressman Strongly Urges Betterment of Our Highways.

In a speech made during the celebration of the surrender of Cornwallis Congressman J. Hampton Moore pleaded strongly for the betterment of roads throughout the country. He said: With good roads and improved waterways in the United States the Revolutionary war could not have lasted eight years. General Washington, he said, had insisted that free and easy commercial intercourse between the Atlantic seaboard and "the amazing territory to the westward of us" was "the best if not the only cement" that could bind the colonial states upon a permanent basis.

Washington and his compatriots, he pointed out, counted upon international trade to assist in building up the colonies and to populate and develop the vast country over which the grasp of England had been released.

"Commerce and labor, capital and industry demand that the waterways of the United States, its harbors and approaches be developed now, even as Washington and his compeers hoped for their development," he said.

"It is not that the railroad is failing to give the best it can afford. It is not that marvelous benefits, uniting states and sections, oceans, lakes and gulfs, have not ensued since the iron horse began its civilization of the wilderness. It is simply that the population of the country has grown more rapidly in proportion than has the ability of the railroad to comply with the requirements of modern transportation."

Naming the Rural Highways.

The Garden City Telegram is advocating a fine project in urging that the country roads in Kansas should be given appropriate and distinctive names.

This road naming suggestion came, the Telegram believes, originally from these columns, though it is by no means new outside of Kansas. The east, foreign countries, California and other regions have all gone into this excellent course of action in the past.

There is every reason for naming roads. The convenience to travelers, the definiteness of location when directing persons, the pride in having country homes designated as city homes are with respect to locality and the general good sense of the movement, should appeal to every one.

Alice Campbell and Robert Campbell, her husband, and Effie Guard, infant, who sues by her next friend, Dorsey Guard, vs. William Guard, Catharine Hatfield and George T. Hatfield, her husband, and Annie Humberson and Frank Humberson, her husband.

No. 1637 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate in Garrett county, Maryland, belonging to the parties to this cause.

The bill states that on the 19th day of January, 1895, Jeremiah Guard and wife executed and delivered to Delilah Guard, Annie Humberson and Frank Humberson, her husband, Alice Campbell and Robert Campbell, her husband, Effie Guard, and William Guard and Catharine Guard, his wife, a deed for one hundred acres of land, situate in Garrett county, which deed recited and set forth the contribution of each of said grantees to the purchase money for said farm, as appears by reference to said deed, a certified copy of which, recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 28, folio 125, etc., is filed with the bill as a part thereof; that Newton Guard, mentioned in said deed, was the father of the said Alice Campbell, Annie Humberson, William Guard and Effie Guard, and had departed this life intestate prior to the execution of said deed, and that the said Delilah Guard was the widow of the said Newton Guard, and the mother of said grantees of Jeremiah Guard, and has since departed this life intestate leaving the said Alice Campbell, Annie Humberson, William Guard and Effie Guard as her only children and heirs at law; that the said Alice Campbell, Robert Campbell, Annie Humberson, Frank Humberson, and Effie Guard, who sues by her next friend, Dorsey Guard, are all residents of Garrett county, Maryland; that after the execution and delivery of the aforesaid deed, William Guard and Catharine Guard, his wife, were divorced, a vinculo matrimonii, in the State of Pennsylvania, where they were then residing, and thereafter, the said Catharine Guard intermarried with the said George T. Hatfield, who now resides in the State of Illinois, the said William Guard being a resident of the State of Pennsylvania; that said real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interest therein, and that in order to make division of said interests, it will be necessary to sell said real estate and divide the proceeds thereof amongst the parties according to their several interests; the bill then prays for a decree directing a sale of said real estate, and that the proceeds be divided among the parties to this cause, according to their respective rights and interests, and for general relief.

It is thereupon this 28th day of December, 1909, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county once in each of four successive weeks before the 26th day of January, 1910, give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 15th day of February next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

VOLUME 33. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JANUARY 27, 1910. NUMBER 48

MILITIA MAY CAMP IN THIS COUNTY NEXT SUMMER

Garrett County Hills and Rolling Land of Southern Section Suggested.

If the plans arranged by the War Department are followed out the maneuver camp next summer, at which the Maryland National Guard will undergo a course of instruction, will be held within a convenient distance of the State, if not within Maryland itself.

Communications have been sent to the Adjutant-Generals of Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, the District of Columbia, Pennsylvania and New Jersey asking them to suggest suitable neighborhoods within the boundaries of their States for a camp of instruction. The troops of the States named, it is planned, will be camped with troops of the regular army next summer, and it is desired to have the encampment within easy distance of the home stations of the militia troops selected for this part of the country.

Major-General Warfield, Adjutant-General of Maryland, before submitting his suggestions to the division of militia affairs of the War Department, has requested the Baltimore and Ohio and the Pennsylvania railroads to furnish him data in regard to places along their lines which might be suitable for such an encampment.

As it is planned to have 2,000 troops of the United States Army camped throughout the period of instruction with the State troops in camp alternately, considerable space would be required. Southern Maryland, which is broad and rolling, with large spaces of uncultivated ground, has often been mentioned as a possible maneuver site, while in Western Maryland, particularly in Garrett county, there is much hilly country, with not enough cultivation to impede military maneuvers.

Besides space for the encampment of the troops, it would also be necessary to have permission to maneuver over about 10,000 acres. There is little doubt that this permission would be granted almost any neighborhood in Maryland, but the War Department, always paying for damage to crops resulting from the movement of troops in maneuvers, wants some place where there is not likely to be much damage inflicted.

The plan of the War Department to hold maneuvers in the vicinity of the six States makes it unlikely that any of the Maryland regiments will be ordered to Pine Camp for instruction. The Government has purchased the tract of barren, sandy land in Jefferson county, N. Y., where the Fourth Regiment underwent instruction in 1908, and at first it was thought that either the First or Fifth Regiment would be sent there the coming summer.

Whether the Maryland National Guard will be able to participate in the proposed maneuvers depends largely on the appropriation the legislature will grant for the maintenance of the State militia. At the last session an appropriation of $100,000 a year was recommended, but this was cut down to $70,000. This year the Board of State Aid and Charities, which recommends the militia appropriation, asked that $75,000 a year be set aside.

Although the recommendation for the appropriation is less than that of two years ago. Adjutant-General Warfield said yesterday that since only $5,000 more is recommended than the appropriation of last two years he feels sure that the amount will be granted.

SMALLPOX SCARE OVER AT FRIENDSVILLE

No New Cases Have Developed and Business Conditions Are Improved.

Business conditions at Friendsville, this county, where one case of smallpox developed some weeks ago, are assuming normal conditions, the scare having abated and as no additional cases of the disease have developed there is hardly any possibility of an outbreak owing to the lapse which has occurred since the initial case was discovered.

GARRETT HAS A CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS

Boom Launched Mr. Frederick A. Thayer of Oakland.

A special from Annapolis Jan 25 says: Opposition to the further political aspirations of Congressman George A. Pearre has been set up in an unexpected quarter through the well defined and growing Congressional boom of Mr. Frederick A. Thayer of Garrett county, who has concluded to shy his castor into the ring and take a try at the nomination for representative of the Sixth Maryland district with the avowed intention of landing the coveted prize.

Delegate D. E. Bolden of the Garrett delegation openly espouses the cause of Mr. Thayer and Delegate J. E. Chappell seconds all his colleague affirms. Senator Speicher, it is further understood, looks with favor on Mr. Thayer's candidacy. Mr. Thayer is a prominent and able member of the Garrett county bar, a former State's Attorney of Garrett, and the president of the First National Bank of Oakland. His friends throughout the county are a legion and that they will rally beneath his political banner is a foregone conclusion.

Delegate Bolden in pressing the claims of Mr. Thayer and Garrett county for the Congressional nomination cites facts that cannot be controverted, viz., that Garrett county Republicans have heretofore been determining factors in recent Congressional elections, notably securing for Congressman Pearre his last election, and therefore Garrett is entitled to more substantial recognition than she has heretofore received.

With Mr. Thayer of Garrett, Mr. Hagner of Washington, and the present incumbent of Allegany in the field, Noyes of Montgomery a tentative candidate and Frederick likely to have an aspirant, there is promise of a lively session at the next Republican Congressional convention in the Sixth Matyland District.

THE NEW COMET.

Prof. Ross the Local Discoverer of the Heavenly Body.

By virtue of being the first local man to observe the new and unnamed comet, which was seen for the first time in the sky here Sunday night, Mr. A. G. Ross has been dubbed "Professor" by his friends and the comet named after him.

The new heavenly body appeared a week ago and was first noticed at Johannesburg, South Africa. Where it came from and whence it is going scientists do not agree. It came unheralded and has been set down as an entirely new body. It was first visible here Sunday night but remained undiscovered until the "Professor" got busy and brought it to the attention of the people of Oakland.

Tuesday evening it was discernable about twenty minutes past six o'clock and remained above the horizon until 7:15. Looking to the westward, the spectator from a high point cannot fail to see it. Venus, the evening star, is to the left and above the comet at about an angle of forty-five degrees. The distance from the horizon to the comet is less than one-third the distance from the comet to Venus. The tail radiates upward from the body of the comet and is about ten degrees in length. It does not compare in brilliancy with Venus, being only about one-fifth as bright.

New Freight Engines.

B. & O. engine No. 2710, the first of a new class of freight engines, has been put in service on the First Division of the B. & O. between Baltimore and Brunswick. This mammoth engine is attracting much attention among the engineers and firemen and railroad men in general, on account of its symmetrical proportions and immense size. It is heavier than the 2500 and 2600 type of freight engines. The hand gearing is all on the outside. The weight of No. 2710 is 208,500, and the new class up to 2726 will still be of a heavier type. This class of freight engines that the B. & O. is having built by the Baldwin Locomotive works of Philadelphia, and the Richmond works, Richmond, Va., will add greatly to and be of very material benefit to the B. & O. engineers. The delivery is expected to be continued right along now and in a short time all will be in the service on the road.

THE DOLLAR IS AWAY ABOVE THE FRANCHISE

Inconsistency of Democrats Posing As Reformers.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 25.—The road bill introduced by Senator Speicher of Garrett relating to the management, maintenance and construction of Garrett county highways passed in the Senate, it being the first measure to receive the sanction of the upper House this session. The bill comes under the chaperonage of the Garrett delegation in the House and Delegate Frank Lee Carl by whom it will be urged for passage and is likely to become a law this week.

Dr. C. W. Baldwin and Dr. W. W. Davis, the former the president and the latter the secretary of the Mountain Lake Park Association, are here in the interest of legislation, as are also State Supt. M. Bates Stephens, Mr. Arch C. Willison, Prof. Howard Hill and Prof. John T. White in the interest of legislation for the public schools.

Delegat Bolden, of Oakland, presented a bill which requires a magistrate in Garrett county to have his office in the district for which he is appointed. The bill was referred to the Garrett delegation and Mr. Carl of Allegany.

Delegate Chappell of Garrett county offered a bill today amending the two weeks' pay law in Garrett county that it might become operative. He said the law was ignored and abused. In many instances if a miner asked for his pay semi-monthly, he received it all right, but with it was a summary discharge. The bill was referred to the committee on corporations

Described by him as a "labor bill," Mr. Wittig will soon introduce in the House a measure to make the office of mine inspector of Allegany and Garrett counties an elective instead of an appointive position. The salary is to remain unchanged at $1,200 a year. According to Mr. Wittig, the bill has the endorsement of the 10,000 miners in the George's Creek section, who are said to feel that an elected inspector would be more in sympathy with the miners—without prejudice to the operators—than an appointee, and that they should have a voice in the selection.

At every recurring session of the General Assembly a great outcry is heard against extravagance on the part of legislators who spend the taxpayer's money in paying political debts. The charge is made that the payrolls at Annapolis are padded, many more being appointed to serve the lawmakers than there are places to be filled. That this practice is reprehensible goes without saying, but it is always condoned by the people themselves when at a succeeding election the party responsible is returned to power. It is, therefore, not at all surprising that the practice is continued.

During the last campaign the Republicans made it one of the issues, and pledged themselves if elected to correct this evil to which attention was directed, but their pleas fell on deaf ears. The Democrats were again intrusted with the reins of government and the protestants have no one to blame but themselves when the dose is repeated.

The most remarkable feature of the whole business is that the leaders in the movement to reform conditions have not only themselves been beneficiaries when the pie was handed around, but they made it impossible for the people who would have chosen differently to give expression to their will at the polls. Even now while criticising the course of their colleagues, some of those who advocate more economical methods do not fail to profit from the state's generosity. They are not slow in taking their share of the spoils, as the roster of employes will bear witness.

The journals will show that when Governor Crothers was a member of the legislature he was always present when the goods were delivered, and the names of not a few who are now railing at the practices for which there are time-honored precedents made no outcry when given their allotment of the spoils. Now they are reformers—reformers within the party—which they by aiding in the enactment of outrageous election laws enable to continue in power.

Had the Governor heeded the protests made against the arbitrary actions of the supervisors he appointed, made it possible for the Republicans and Independents to get a square deal, the election would not have been one-sided and enough men elected to the General Assembly to enable him to carry out the policies he so vociferously advocated. Instead of protecting those voters, however, he gave aid and comfort to the manipulators and permitted them to disregard the rights of franchise. There would have been a different story to tell had the counties on the Eastern Shore and in Southern Maryland been given an opportunity to give expression to their sentiments. When the Governor, however, practically countenanced fake candidates and trick ballots he disfranchised white as well as colored voters and dug his own political grave.

It seemed to have been the policy of this administration as well as those who favored the amendment, to place the dollar above the right of franchise. It was all wrong to deprive the State of money, but it's all right to to take from a citizen an inalienable right guaranteed him by the constitution. It is the proper thing to yell "stop thief" and froth at the mouth when some member of the other party makes a raid on the treasury and grabs a few thousand dollars, but not a bit improper to violate the organic law of the State and of the country in order to retain power and control. Governor Warfield made a mistake in making economy, or more properly speaking money, the paramount issue, and his successor should have profited by his experience. Well might both exclaim, with apologies to Wolsey, "Had I served my people with half the zeal I served the treasury, they would not in my last days have left me at the mercy of mine enemies."

Nor is the Governor alone in his misery. Senator John Frank Harper is reaping the whirlwind. Like the great majority of Democrats he placed his party above the State and his failure to impress his colleagues with the necessity for reform is due to this fact. Two years ago Senator Harper, at the behest of the bosses of Queen Anne's, introduced and had passed a bill extending the Wilson ballot law to his county. This change made it possible to impose fake candidates and a rank ballot on the voters of Queen Anne and took from hundreds of whites the right of franchise. Granting that the senator had no intention of depriving members of his own race of their votes, the fact remains that he made it possible to do so. And even if only colored men had been affected the onject of the law being to deny them their rights, then Senator Harper knowingly helped to violate the Fifteenth Amendment, which is part of the federal organic law.

Under the circumstances it seemed rather inconsistent on his part to advocate from principle the adoption of his order which took from the President of the Senate the appointment of employes because he believed such a delegation of authority on the part of the Senate a technical violation of the State Constitution. There is surely as much of a principle involved in one proposition as in the other. Indeed, the direct attack upon the rights of a people is far more reprehensible, it being a palpable and an unquestioned violation of both the State and Federal Constitutions. The delegation of power objected to is at best a technical interference, if one at all. From Mr. Harper's standpoint, therefore, it would appear to be justifiable, when political expediency demands, to disregard the mandate of the organic law, but not otherwise.

There is probably no member of the Senate who is held in higher esteem than the Senator from Queen Anne, whose honesty, integrity and ability are acknowledged by the representatives of both parties, and the comparisons cited are simply presented to demonstrate that commendable as may be the course of such a man in trying to protect the finances of the state, he can be politically so biased and bigoted as to override the law of the land to benefit his party.

The Republicans have still another crow to pick with Senator Harper. They hold him responsible for the failure of the Senate to confirm the Republican supervisors who was nominated to succeed the relative of the county boss. The minority in Queen Annes has not now a representative on the board who is recognized by the party organization. The Governor nominated Mr. Mallalieu, but as the Senator from Queen Annes failed to insist upon a report, the nomination died in the Committee on Executive Nominations, and the incumbent, who is repudiated by the party, held over.

When it comes to adopting reforms in the Senate and House the Republicans will always be found on the side of right and justice. Their course in the House of Delegates on the report of the Committee on Organization, which recommended a number of additional and unnecessary appointments, proved this. They voted against this steal and repudiated an arrangement by which two appointments were to be allotted to them as their share.

The failure of the Republicans in the Senate to support the Harper proposition was due to the failure of his plan in the House. Here the appointments were taken from the Speaker, and the Democratic members themselves proceeded to apportion to themselves as many as they desired. A majority of the Republican Senators disagreed with the constitutional objection as to the right of the Senate to delegate its authority and preferred to place the responsibility on the presiding officer.

The party leaders are very much pleased with the manner in which the Republicans are pulling together. The management and the representatives at Annapolis are in perfect accord, and the harmony existing contrasts strongly with the disaffection of the Democratic side. There isn't a party leader in the state at odds with the management, and all have absolute confidence in the judgment of Chairman Hanna. The latter will again go to Annapolis this week to aid in directing the Republican forces.

When the House meets again this week Mr. Pairo, the Republican floor leader, whose important committee assignments and the fact that he must attend the meetings of the city delegation, render it impossible for him to give the necessary attention to all, will request the Speaker to relieve him from service on the judiciary committee and appoint one of his associates in his stead.

FLATWOODS.

The farmers of this place are making good use of the sledding hauling lime stone and coal.

Mr. Wm. Bowman has recently purchased a chop mill which he will operate at the farm of Benj. Keller.

Fresh & Kahl are again running their shingle mill full speed.

Mr. Frank Callis and wife were visiting at B. F. Keller's Sunday.

Miss Bertha Beeghly has gone to Oakland, where she will be employed by Dr. Hinebaugh.

The scarlet fever scare is about over at this place. No new cases reported.

Wm. Bowman is out with his hay baler. Hay is scarce but Mr. Bowman seems to be getting quite a bit of work.

Our old friend Henry Spoerline, of North Dakota, is again in this community.

Mrs. M. L. Fresh is reported as being on the sick list.

Chas. F. Bowman has sold his farm to his father, J. W. Bowman. We understand he is to farm for Truman Pysell this summer.

Wildcats seem to be getting pretty numerous. One was tracked as far up as Bowman's sugar camp.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Richter, of Hiawatha, Kan., are here on a visit.

Some of the farmers at this place appear to be getting the western fever.

With best wishes for THE REPUBLICAN.

STOYER.

Our little town was quite a business place during the good sledding.

Mr. John Riley, of Elkins, was in town last week on business.

Mr. McHenry still has several men employed here loading lumber.

Mr. Henry Boger and his granddaughter, Miss Mae Lewis, of Uniontown, Pa., were the guests of Mrs. J. T. Steyer last week.

Mr. Frank Vansickle, of Lemont, Pa., was visiting relatives here the first of this week.

A crowd of young people from this place spent a very pleasant evening at the homes of Mr. William Steyer and Mr. C. E. Hilleary last week.

Mrs. J. B. Shockey and family are visiting friends and relatives here.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Wilson and family were calling in town the first of the week.

Mr. James Idleman was seen on our streets Sunday.

Miss Bessie Steyer returned to her home here Tuesday from a visit of several days to her sister, Mrs. J. B. Shockey, and other friends.

Mr. Thos. Melvin returned home from Harrisburg, Pa., Sunday.

Mrs. Layman Harvey, Mrs. Oscar Wolfe and Mrs. Wm. Moore, of Kitzmiller, were in town last week.

Mrs. Wm. Calcher, of Weternport, is visiting relatives here.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Neville and two children were calling at J. T. Steyer's Sunday.

Capt. W. White was a business caller in town last week.

Mr. P. A. Chisholm Very Ill.

Reports this morning from the sick room of Mr. P. A. Chisholm are to the effect that he is extremely ill with but slight hopes for his recovery. He was taken ill last Saturday and has been steadily growing weaker.

BESIEGED IN A CAVE.

A Girl the Principal Actor In a Defense Against Indians.

By MARTHA L. TWEED.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"Well," said Charlie Elson as he leaned back against the side of the cave and laid down his rifle, almost for the first time in ten days, "I suppose we can consider the siege raised. The Indians would hardly collect their ponies and ride off across the plain with an idea of circumventing us.

"We have an unobstructed view for at least five miles in front, and they could never climb over the mountains behind. It is fortunate for us that Gertie remembered the cave and thought of it as a refuge."

"It is fortunate for us in everything that we have Gertie," returned his sister Kate, smiling affectionately at the seventeen-year-old girl who was crouching near the entrance of the cave, with one arm in a sling.

Of all the party she was the only one wounded, and of all the party it was she who had best acted the part of a man. She smiled back slightly, but without turning her head.

There was something in her whole appearance—her figure, her face, especially her mouth and eyes—that expressed firmness. Muscularly there was in her the same strength. She wore a skirt reaching but a short distance below her knees, a man's gaiters, a jacket buttoning close about her throat and a man's ordinary felt hat, without even a tiny feather in the band.

"When we first saw the Indians," Kate Elson went on, "it was Gertie who whirled the horses round, riding on her pony at their heads and urging them forward, and it was she who insisted on forcing the wagon almost to the very mouth of the lower cave and on bringing as much of the provisions and supplies up here as we could.

"If it had not been for them and the keg of water she brought up herself when the Indians were almost upon her we could not have held out so long."

"That's so," admitted Charlie Elson candidly. "I do not suppose I would have thought of the provisions myself or even of climbing to this upper cave instead of stopping in the one below. And it's the same about the marksmanship. I have been popping off the gun like a boy does his Fourth of July crackers, for the noise, though maybe that did keep them off a little. But if Gertie's telling shots had not re-enforced my ineffectual ones the Indians would soon have caught on and scrambled up the rocks."

Charlie Elson's voice had been strained and depressed for the past ten days. Now, with the Indians moving across the plain, his tones became care free, almost jubilant. It was his mercurial temperament, and his sister looked across at him indulgently, but lovingly.

Whatever else he might be, careless, incapable, visionary, he was always lovable, always oblivious of himself. It was the careless, visionary nature that had started him west when his little property was lost and the obliviousness to self that had caused him to share his scanty means with the weak, emaciated creature they found wandering on the plain—all that was left of a frontier massacre.

He never thought of taking her to a trading post or transferring the burden to some one with means and a settled home. His only thought was that henceforth they would be three instead of two. Later she had developed into a beautiful, strong, lovable girl, to the wonder and satisfaction of himself and Kate.

Now, only three months from the rescue, she was returning the bread upon the waters a thousandfold. As she turned her face toward them for an instant there was something of the same expression in her eyes that appeared in Kate's, though with a difference.

No one could be in the tender hearted, irresponsible man's company long without loving him and wanting to care for him as she would for an affectionate, helpless child.

And in Gertie's life, even before the massacre of the harsh voiced father and stepmother, there had been little of love and caring for.

"Not many men could have held out so well as you have, Charlie," she said, using the last word hesitatingly, as though not quite accustomed to it. "You have scarcely slept at all since we've been in the cave, and you have kept us laughing most of the time with your funny talk."

"Done fairly well as a rank and file man," he interrupted gayly. "Of course I don't think I lack nerve or endurance. It's only that I need a leader with drawn sword. Now what shall we do? I"—

He was moving toward the entrance as he spoke, and with the last word there came a dull thud, followed by a sharp report. A bullet had flattened against the rock near his head. Gertie caught his arm and drew him back.

"Here," she cried, snatching his hat swiftly and replacing it upon the muzzle of his rifle. "They will not suspect the old trick, as they have just seen you moving. Now"—

She pushed the muzzle of his rifle toward the entrance, so the hat could be seen from below.

Almost instantly there were two more thuds and reports, and this time the bullets passed through the hat and then flattened against the rock.

"That empties their guns," the girl cried. "I know they have no rifles from the way they have been firing. Wait! Let me shoot. I have had more practice than you."

She slipped by him to the cave opening, where she dropped at full length in order to use the rifle with her uninjured arm.

Below she could see three Indians hurrying toward the cave. Evidently they had remained behind, hiding in some crevice in hope of the besieged coming forth when the main body rode away.

Believing their bullets had pierced the head they thought inside the hat and thus deprived the cave of one of its few defenders, they were rushing forward to complete the work before following the main body.

Gertie recognized with a sudden feeling of exultation that the middle Indian was the one she had seen giving directions all through the siege, evidently the chief. With him gone the danger would very likely be over.

There were a quick flash and a report, and then she slipped back into the cave.

"I shot him through the hip," she explained in answer to their inquiring looks. "I—I don't like to really kill any one, but he won't fight again. He was the chief, so they could not leave him. They are carrying him to their ponies now, which they have concealed somewhere. I don't think they will trouble us any more."

But she was mistaken. Maddened by the loss of one of their number, the two other Indians, after taking him to cover, were seen looking up at the cave and talking to each other, evidently deliberating upon a new plan of attack. They were aware that the party was not strong, but they had no heart for making an attack upon them, intrenched as they were in so strong a position. They wished to circumvent them. Presently by their pantomime the besieged discovered that they had arrived at a conclusion. Then they were seen gathering wood.

"Great heavens!" exclaimed Charlie. "They're going to try to burn or smoke us out!"

"I don't think they will succeed," said Gertie calmly.

"Why?" asked Rob.

"They must get above us and drop the firebrands down before the mouth of the cave. There is only one path by which they can climb, and down there to the left we can see a dozen feet of it. They must pass that point to get above us, and unless we miss them we can shoot them."

"They may make a quick dash," said Kate, who was fast losing her equanimity.

"I can do one of them," said Charlie, "and I know Gertie can do the other."

It was half an hour before the Indians had gathered wood sufficient to make the attempt. Then they disappeared. The besieged got ready to drop them as they passed the open space where they could be seen. Gertrude and Charlie each took a rifle, leveled it on a rest with the muzzle pointed to the space, knowing that they would have but a few moments in which to fire. Presently an Indian, covering his side with the wood, shot out into the open. Gertrude's rifle cracked, and he limped back. She had shot him in the foot.

They waited some time for the other man, but the next they saw of him he was helping his companion away.

"Now what shall we do?" asked Charlie Elson, some of the old depression returning to his voice. "Our wagon is burned, and all the horses are carried off except the two which got away and ran across the plain. I think maybe they will come back to us when their fright wears off. But how can we go on without a wagon?"

Gertie's face looked thoughtful.

"Suppose we don't go on," she suggested. "The land is beautiful around here and the soil rich, and we would always have this cave to protect us should there be any more danger. And then there is a fine spring of water, and"—

There was a look in her eyes which brought Charlie Elson to her side with eager questioning in his own.

"You—you don't mean, Gertie, that—that—why, I'm fifteen years older and an incompetent, and—you do?" as the look in her eyes slipped down into a tender tremulousness about her lips.

"Then we'll stay," a sudden vibrant ring of strength coming into his voice. "We could hardly find a prettier country. We will make a home on the edge of the plain down there."

SOME TUBERCULOSIS STATISTICS

Probably no state in the Union has made a more determined or more successful warfare on bovine tuberculosis than Wisconsin, and some figures which have been lately published relative to this campaign are interesting and should also be profitable to dairymen in other sections. The educational campaign has been conducted by means of addresses, printed bulletins and postmortem demonstrations given in co-operation with the state live stock sanitary board. Since the tuberculin test was first applied, in 1892, 72,638 animals have been tested, over 66,000 of this number coming within the past three years. The state has paid the owners two-thirds of the appraised value of reacting animals, receiving in return whatever was paid for the carcasses of those animals passed by the federal inspectors. There has been a decrease in the per cent of reacting animals from 17.7 per cent in 1906 to 5.6 per cent in 1908. In 1906 almost half the herds which were tested were found infected, while in 1908 less than one-fourth had the disease. In 1906 12 per cent of the animals tested were found to be infected, and in 1908 less than 4 per cent. The data which the station officials have gathered shows that the most common method of herd infection is through the purchase of diseased animals, 263 out of 363 herds found infected in 1908 being infected through purchase. A law requiring a clean bill of health with each animal sold is strongly urged, as is also legislation requiring the pasteurization of factory byproducts.

THE FOLLY OF TEMPORIZING.

Pity it is that there are not more farm papers of the type of a few which might be named which have looked the situation touching bovine tuberculosis through to the end and have uncompromisingly in season and out of season advocated a thorough testing of affected herds and the eradication of all animals found diseased. One of these papers is Hoard's Dairyman, printed at Fort Atkinson, Wis., and the service which it has performed for the dairy interests of that and adjoining states can hardly be estimated. Those papers which have followed a temporizing policy—opposed the testing of dairy herds because the immediate loss to the owners seemed heavy—have caused dairymen who have followed this advice tremendous loss in the long run, as laws which prevent the sale of milk from diseased cows have been passed in many states, while the job of ridding a herd of diseased animals and building it up again on a new basis is one that requires much time and attention. The rest of the agricultural papers should move over to the other side of the house in this vital matter.

PRACTICAL CO-OPERATION.

A number of farmers living near Rogers, in Hennepin county, Minn., have, according to a farm paper published at the Twin Cities, put into practice this year a most commendable type of co-operation. It has consisted simply in getting their heads together and agreeing to plant a single variety of potatoes for their field crop, with the thought in view that with a large quantity of potatoes raised buyers would come and offer a good price for the crop. They exercised a good deal of pains in the growing and care of their spud crop, and their hopes have been fully realized. The tubers yielded on the average 175 bushels per acre, were of one variety and of uniform size and quality. The buyers came and paid the growers 46 cents per bushel at the cars, nearly 10 cents more than growers in many other sections received. This idea of co-operation in vegetable and fruit production is very practical and profitable, and its benefits can hardly be too strongly urged.

THE ROUTINE PALLS.

Many a lad leaves the farm for city occupation because of the dull monotonous routine of its work, in the doing of which little effort is made by the farm owner to adopt new or up to date methods which recognize the place of intelligence as well as sheer muscular effort as an important factor in getting work out of the way. There is absolutely no field of endeavor where the application of brains will yield a larger net return than in agriculture, and it's about time a whole lot of fellows who have been content to make a clodhopper occupation of it were rubbing their eyes and awaking to the fact. It can only be viewed as a tribute to agriculture as an occupation that so many who have been engaged in it have been able to make a living and something besides, following as they have such slovenly and indifferent methods and applying so small an amount of gray matter to the work they had in hand.

The Russian moujik, or peasant laborer, receives 34 cents a day for his spring work and 41 cents a day during haying and harvest and boards himself.

The man who is looking for a new location agriculturally can hardly go astray if he picks out a piece of land in a section where either clover or alfalfa will grow, and this holds whether the district is under ditch or has its moisture supplied in the shape of snow and rain.

It is about a standoff as between the dweller in the warmer southwestern climes, who has to put up with fleas and dust, and the resident in the northern states east of the Rockies, who has his pancake batter freeze under the hard coal stove on crisp midwinter nights.

The value of alfalfa as a forage and hay crop is well attested by the plump and sleek appearance of horses, cattle and hogs which have access to it and are not furnished with any grain ration. All kinds of stock are fond of the legume and seem to know instinctively that it is good for them.

The railroads seem to have survived the anti-railroad agitation and legislation of the past three or four years to the tune of an increase in net earnings for the year ending June 30, 1909, of $90,718,357 over the earnings of the preceding year. The total gross earnings of the last fiscal year were $2,437,385,841. These figures would seem to indicate that transportation companies have been more scared than hurt.

A section of northern Vermont has established a reputation with the agricultural department at Washington of producing a type of seed potato which is virtually free from disease and largely blight resistant. For this reason the seed is in great demand in the southern states, where the blight due to excessive moisture during the growing season is both prevalent and very destructive to the potato crop.

The Mongolian pheasant brought from China to this country several years ago and turned loose in the chaparral covered sections of Oregon and Washington seems to have found its new home a congenial one and is said to be multiplying rapidly under the complete protection which is being given it under the laws recently passed. Ranch owners frequently see the beautiful birds in their orchards but a few rods from the house.

Judging from the recent election results in New York state affecting the primary, it appears that the grangers of the Empire State are interested intelligently in new political methods as well as the latest improvements in agriculture and dairying. They have looked into this system of direct primary nominations and have given it their approval, notwithstanding the adverse report of the legislative committee which was selected to give it a black eye.

A lesson that many a corn grower seems slow to learn is that it is the freezing of corn while the kernels contain moisture which is fatal to the germ. Dried thoroughly, seed corn will stand almost any low temperatures. On this account every effort should be put forth to dry the ears before a freeze strikes them and to store them for the winter where they will not gather moisture. As a rule, seed corn is done for and worthless by February.

With the condition of the fellow who is more or less dependent upon his employer's whim and economic circumstance for the holding of his job becoming more and more uncertain an ever increasing number of level headed people, including both men and women, are quietly investing their surplus earning in parcels of land which will not only appreciate in value, but will give them a living and a competence in later years. The person who owns fertile land that is capable of producing the foodstuffs that the earth's ever increasing millions will want is going to be independent in the years to come.

The proper time for the transplanting of shrubs, fruit or shade trees depends largely upon the time of the rainy season. In the large territory east of longitude 100 degrees, where abundant moisture may be counted on from March to July, the early part of this period is the best season for transplanting, depending a bit upon the latitude. On the Pacific slope and south of central Oregon from November till the latter part of February is considered the best time for this work, as the ground does not freeze to prevent plowing, while the interval named is the wet season, which insures the transplanted things sufficient moisture for their proper growth.

Dentists who keep abreast of the times incline to the view that in these days of prepared—premasticated and predigested—foods folks do not have chewing enough to do to give their teeth the necessary exercise, it being their contention that foods of a rougher and harder type should form a larger part of the bill of fare. Pressure on the teeth in the process of mastication causes a circulation of blood in the little ducts near the roots, this making possible a ready nourishment of the nerve and dental tissues. This argument would seem to have common sense at the bottom of it and ought to be kept in mind. It is likely due to this very fact, the mastication of rough and coarse foods, that the remarkable durability of the teeth of wild and domestic animals is due.

If corn fodder properly secured is worth 60 per cent of good hay, ton for ton, it is well nigh impossible to estimate the annual loss that American farmers sustain by allowing it to bleach and blow to tatters in the field.

It is pretty rough on the rats, but a farmer who has tried it recommends putting concentrated lye in the holes and runways of rats. They first get it on their feet, which begin to burn. They try to lick it off their feet, get it in their mouths, and this does the business.

We read of a farmer the other day who was bewailing the fact that his fine quack grass pasture was showing signs of debility and was likely to die out. We know of other fellows who would be mighty glad to have this fellow come and dig up carefully the scattering roots on their places.

The best season in which to do pruning work in the orchard is that just prior to the time when the trees will make the most rapid growth and thus heal over the scars made in cutting. It is for this reason that fall pruning should be discouraged beyond that involved in the removal of dead or diseased portions of the trees.

If it is hard to get the horse in good flesh and much of the grain fed passes through the animal whole it is fair to assume that the teeth are not doing their work properly, due to the fact that some of them project so far as to prevent proper mastication. This defect can be remedied by having the teeth filed off by some competent veterinarian. In case the teeth are in bad shape in other respects the feed should be ground.

A rather odd appeal has been made to the French colonial office by the province of Uganda. It is that the lions be protected from hunters, as they alone are able to rid the country of the herbivorous animals that destroy their crops, including elephants, rhinoceroses and deer. Much the same situation has existed in some portions of the west, where the killing of the coyotes has been followed by an alarming increase in the number of rabbit pests.

That American corn is rapidly getting a foothold in foreign countries is nicely shown in the marked increase in the recent exports of the cereal. Corn exports for the week ending Oct. 28 were 516,448 bushels against 395,592 for the week preceding and 196,514 bushels in 1908. For the seventeen weeks prior to Oct. 28, 1909, the exports of corn amounted to 2,700,685 bushels, while for the corresponding period last year they were but 1,186,118 bushels.

Through the liberality and enterprise of the publisher of a well known Iowa dairy paper the dairymen of Wisconsin will be given an opportunity to take part in a contest in which prizes ranging from $50 to $500 will be offered the owners of single cows and herds of ten which make the best showing in butter fat production during a stated period. Any dairyman of the state wishing to participate in the contest may secure full particulars by addressing Professor F. W. Woll, Madison, Wis.

A first hand inspection of a good many newly set fruit ranches in several famous valleys of the west leads the writer to believe that a whole lot of fellows do not seem to have got on to the fact that to sell an orchard tract to the best advantage just as scrupulous care should be given it in the matter of pruning and cultivation as if the owner were going to keep it for himself. We have seen tracts that were not managed with this thought in mind whose prospects for future productiveness were not worth a continental per acre.

The sugar crop of the world for the year just closing is placed by statisticians at 14,710,000 tons, which is an increase over that of 1908 of 244,596 tons, or 1.7 per cent. The figures show that there has been an increase in the world's cane sugar crop of 4.9 per cent, or 370,000 tons. A few years ago the cane sugar output was less than that from beets, but last year the cane product exceeded the beet by 663,000 tons, while this year it will surpass it by 1,160,000 tons. There was a decrease in the European beet sugar output of 2.7 per cent as between last year and this, while the output of beet sugar in America shows an increase of 13.2 per cent for the same period.

In sections where rodents—rabbits and mice—abound and are likely to damage the young fruit trees by gnawing during the winter months it is none too early to be safeguarding them against such attacks. This may be done cheaply by wrapping the young trees at least two feet up from the ground with several ply of old newspapers. Tar paper and strips of wood veneer are used, but the newspaper properly fastened will answer the purpose nicely. In localities where the snow is likely to be deep and drift into the branches such wrapping as described will not furnish protection except to portions of the trunk covered; hence an effective warfare by means of shotgun, ferret, traps and poison should be waged continuously against these orchard enemies. To discourage the mice, shocks of corn and other litter in which they may nest should be removed from the orchard.

OUR SOUTHERN LETTER.

The Van Lindley Orchard and the Work Mr. Van Lindley Has Done for the Fruit Growers.

Talking about peaches, for instance, what would you think of a peach crop that brings in forty thousand dollars?

That is what the Van Lindley orchard did the past summer. It was a good season and the crop well, but in addition to selling well it was a good crop.

The orchard, which is about three miles from Southern Pines, has thirty thousand peach trees in it. Some years these trees do not bear so well as they did this year. Some years the market is not so good. Yet those two conditions are not discouraging, for it does not take many crops at forty thousand dollars each to pay a pretty good interest rate on a plantation of two or three hundred acres.

Not far from the Van Lindley orchard lives O. M. Palmer. He is from Michigan. There is a difference between Michigan and Missouri. Missouri folks have to be shown. Michigan people are willing to show.

Palmer came down this way from the country where the apple tree is looked on with a friendly regard, and the first thing the Palmer folks did was to set out a few apple trees, and to listen while certain wise men told them how useless it would be to try to raise apples in the Sand Hill country.

It is not the first time the wise man found his mistake. Palmer set out four or five hundred apple trees, and this year the wise men are telling around how that shrewd Yankee got a prize up at the Raleigh State Fair for his fine fruit and how some of his apples at Spokane, Washington, clear on the other side of the continent, also pulled down one of the prizes for fine fruit, out in that country where they are so proud of their good apples that they wrap the fruit in paper and sent it back east in boxes for fancy trade.

And Palmer, he smiles and plants a few more apple trees, and the wise men encourage him by saying they knew all along he would show somebody what his country is good for.

Palmer showed them all right. He made such a hit with his prizes at the fruit show that the Van Lindley orchard has concluded to set out a thousand apple trees this fall. When a fruit concern that markets forty thousand dollars worth of peaches in one crop begins to plant apple trees in their orchard it is apparent that the apple crop also gives promise, for a thing to tempt a man to take anything new into an orchard that does as well as the Van Lindley peaches have done must be good.

The Van Lindley folks are not new hands with fruit. The head of the big fruit farm has been for many years a nursery man in this State, and the orchard at Southern Pines was planted because of the special advantages this section of the United States offers to fruit growers. When it was planted the country went wild over fruit plantations, and much money was spent in establishing orchards and vineyards. Some of the planters have won such success as the Van Lindley people. Many others have nothing to show for their work and expenditure but deserted orchards and vineyards and wasted money charged up on the wrong side of the profit and loss account. For about the time the fruit boom hit this section the insect pest, known as the San Jose scale, came into the eastern part of the United States and the orchards around Southern Pines were among the first to suffer.

Nobody knew what to do with the scale pests then. The Federal and the State governments had their fruit men at work trying to hatch up some scheme to stop the ravages of the formidable nuisance but it was years before anything was discovered. Now a couple of applications of lime and sulphur do the business, and the fruit man is not much disturbed by the fruit tree insects. Fortunately, although the scale is common now in all the States, the other States learned how to deal with it before it reached them, so the fruit grower in other places did not suffer like the man of this section did.

Here orchards were dug out and many were abandoned. For several years fruit men were disgusted with anything that sounded like fruit. Then the remedy was found after trying an infinite number of things, and those who held on reached a profitable reward.

The Van Lindley orchard was hit severely by the scale, but it dug out injured trees and planted new ones, and finally it landed on the safe side of the fight, and since then the returns have been reasonably certain and plenty big enough.

The peach industry has been given a renewed impetus, and it is quite certain now that the acreage of peaches planted each year will increase again, and that the crop will be a considerable one, with ample returns to the man who cares for his orchard.

The San Jose scale is the worst insect pest that that has ever come to plague the fruit grower, but singular as it may seem, its arrival has been of a wonderful benefit. Prior to the arrival of the scale the practice of the planter was to let his trees take their chance with nature. If they had a crop it was good. It they failed he set it down as the usual order of things, and he put his trust in the next year. Now that he has to spray his trees to keep off the scale the fruit grower finds that he is also keeping off many other destructive agents, and he is making better fruit and more of it than he ever did under the old methods. Spraying is not an expensive operation, and the increased yield of fruit and the improved quality leads good fruit men to spray their trees whether they have scale to contend with or not.

There is another illustration of the advantages that come from the intensive system of farming. The farmer who is producing the best crop these days is the man who takes out of Nature's hands every thing that he can take into his own hands. He no longer waits for things to do what they can. He is continually forcing the issue. No other line of industry is progressing faster now than farming, which is becoming a specialized business. General farming is going out of fashion. The man who succeeds best as a corn farmer is one who raises only seed corn. The man who does best with cotton is as particular about the variety and pedigree of his cows and pigs.

And over at the Van Lindley Orchard they are just as particular about the varities of peaches they plant, too.

Tomorrow The Graveyard of Deferred Intentions.

Tomorrow is the graveyard of many of our hopes and ambitions. Tomorrow is the mirage on the horizon of time, the lure of negligence and delay. We hope and pray and yearn for this wonderful tomorrow, always building and expecting toward that end, and wake up in the morning to find it is "today." If the hope is not realized we once again follow the mirage.

Content in the realization of the today we are too often prone to defer, and dream of the expectations of the tomorrow. The tomorrow of most of our ambitions and hopes is but the following of the line of least resistance. Tomorrow is the altar upon which man loves to heap his hopes and sacrifices. Time waits for no man, but man loves to wait for tomorrow. In deferring until tomorrow that which should be done today, every postponer imagines himself a special protege of Providence, attended by fortune and the hosts of good luck.

Probably it is the elements of chance, of gambling with fate, that attracts the average man to place his stake on "that great tomorrow." In the obscure, mysterious future lies the ever fertile hope of greater probabilities, of a way out of a dilemma, of an easy path to success. The fortune wheel of time whirls and stops; some win, many lose. It is the same old story over again for the man who takes the long end of the game, the hundred to one shot—it will get him in the end! Between today and tomorrow lies a bottomless gulf, called fate, clogged with the skeletons of deferred hope, of ambitions, of intentions. It must be a truism of time that "fact teaches less than does fiction" in some instances. Rather than do today's duty today we love to wait until tomorrow, with the sharp knowledge that the thing left undone must eventually be done, come tomorrow's rainbow and its pot of gold, or not. "Duty calls" is an old saying, but its "taps" are heard as often as its "reveille." Habit, no less than love, makes this old world go round. Do a thing when the doing of it is ripe and the fruits are yours.

History's devious trails are strewn with the skeletons of deferred action, postponed ambition, delayed intentions—those fatal tomorrows. The fall of an empire, the repulse of a battle fleet, the hope of fame, the happiness of a home, the love of a wife—all, somewhere, sometimes, have been lost in the mirage of a tomorrow. Admiral Cervera, during the Spanish war, was lying in the Santiago harbor waiting for a tomorrow to crush the Americans. Admiral Schley, seeing his chance, steamed through the night to the neck of the harbor. The rest of the story is history of which we are proud. Cervera's fleet was blown to pieces. His tomorrow lies in that bottomless gulf—fate. And again at Manila Bay, Admiral Montijo's fleet was lying in the harbor on the eve of the famous battle. The Spanish were waiting for the morning, little thinking that Dewey would risk running the torpedo mines at night. But Dewey steamed into the harbor and by daybreak was on top of the Spanish. He even drew off for a few hours to eat breakfast, and then leisurely smashed the Spanish fleet. A tomorrow came, but not for the one who was looking for it. Dewey did his duty when the doing was ripe.

Remember: Today we have with us always, but tomorrow—ah, only He can tell!—S. E. S.

SEGREGATION OF CONSUMPTIVES

State Tuberculosis Association Declares Itself in Favor of State Care for Advanced Cases.

One of the farthest reaching items in the legislative program of the Maryland Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis for this year places this association on record in favor of the segregation in a state institution of those people who are suffering from tuberculosis in such an advanced state as to make them a danger if allowed to remain at large in the community. Such persons are known to physicians and health officials as "pus distributors." As a rule they are not careful to see that all of their sputum is destroyed, so they pass tuberculosis along to other people. Each consumptive who dies, unless he has been very careful in his habits, may usually be charged with at least three cases contracted from him during the period of his illness, when he was a "pus distributor."

The legislature of Maryland, which for the last eight years has been inclined to seek and accept the best advice in matters relating to tuberculosis, will be urged to make some provision for the isolation of advanced consumptives. The State Association will ask it friends and supporters throughout the state to discuss the matter with their local delegates and senators with a view to urging the establishment of care for advanced cases to supplement the splendid work now being done for incipients at the State Sanatorium at Sabillas and at Eudowood, near Towson.

"Duty calls" is an old saying, but its "taps" are heard as often as its "reveille." Habit, no less than love, makes this old world go round. Do a thing when the doing of it is ripe and the fruits are yours.

History's devious trails are strewn with the skeletons of deferred action, postponed ambition, delayed intentions—those fatal tomorrows. The fall of an empire, the repulse of a battle fleet, the hope of fame, the happiness of a home, the love of a wife—all, somewhere, sometimes, have been lost in the mirage of a tomorrow. Admiral Cervera, during the Spanish war, was lying in the Santiago harbor waiting for a tomorrow to crush the Americans. Admiral Schley, seeing his chance, steamed through the night to the neck of the harbor. The rest of the story is history of which we are proud. Cervera's fleet was blown to pieces. His tomorrow lies in that bottomless gulf—fate. And again at Manila Bay, Admiral Montijo's fleet was lying in the harbor on the eve of the famous battle. The Spanish were waiting for the morning, little thinking that Dewey would risk running the torpedo mines at night. But Dewey steamed into the harbor and by daybreak was on top of the Spanish. He even drew off for a few hours to eat breakfast, and then leisurely smashed the Spanish fleet. A tomorrow came, but not for the one who was looking for it. Dewey did his duty when the doing was ripe.

Remember: Today we have with us always, but tomorrow—ah, only He can tell!—S. E. S.

SEGREGATION OF CONSUMPTIVES

State Tuberculosis Association Declares Itself in Favor of State Care for Advanced Cases.

One of the farthest reaching items in the legislative program of the Maryland Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis for this year places this association on record in favor of the segregation in a state institution of those people who are suffering from tuberculosis in such an advanced state as to make them a danger if allowed to remain at large in the community. Such persons are known to physicians and health officials as "pus distributors." As a rule they are not careful to see that all of their sputum is destroyed, so they pass tuberculosis along to other people. Each consumptive who dies, unless he has been very careful in his habits, may usually be charged with at least three cases contracted from him during the period of his illness, when he was a "pus distributor."

The legislature of Maryland, which for the last eight years has been inclined to seek and accept the best advice in matters relating to tuberculosis, will be urged to make some provision for the isolation of advanced consumptives. The State Association will ask it friends and supporters throughout the state to discuss the matter with their local delegates and senators with a view to urging the establishment of care for advanced cases to supplement the splendid work now being done for incipients at the State Sanatorium at Sabillas and at Eudowood, near Towson.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JANUARY, 27, 1910.

THE grab-game at Annapoiis is still on!

WITH a deficit in the State Treasury which may amount to a million the ringsters and others with political debts to pay continue their raid at Annapolis.

WHAT A SHAME IT IS!

The Sun paper of Baltimore reads the following lecture to the Democratic members of Maryland's Legislature:

What a shame it is that a majority of the Democratic Delegates at Annapolis—and a large majority, too—are lending themselves to the paddling of the State's payroll! What a shame it is that men who in their private business practice the strictest economy will so recklessly spend the money of the citizens of Maryland to pay political debts! What a shame it is to Maryland and what a shame it is to the Democratic party!

Think of it, you Democrats who by the sweat of your brow are earning your daily bread, that 68 of the candidates you elected to the Legislature voted on last Wedne-day to increase your burden of taxation by adding without justification to the salary list of the State! How can these men ever face you and say that all the employes were actually needed and that was why they voted for them? If they were actually needed, why were the two clerkships offered to the Republicans later taken away from them, and why, as reported, a Delegate's remark, "The baby didn't want the candy?"

Do the Delegates at Annapolis look upon the Treasury of Maryland as candy to be served up to their friends and followers, regardless of who is footing the bill? You Democrats who put these Delegates into office should watch their records. You know what they promised to do if elected. Now is the time to hold them to their words.

THE GOVERNOR'S ATTITUDE TOWARD THE LEGISLATURE

Governor Crothers, referring to the bad beginning made by the Legislature in defiantly repudiating the party pledges to conduct the session as economically as could be done, says:

Throughout the last campaign I went from one end of the State to the other telling the people of the pledges in the Democratic platform and advising them to vote for the Democratic ticket in order that these pledges might be redeemed. If these promises are not kept, no one shall be able to say that I failed in my duty, for I have already urged them to the best of my ability, and I shall continue to urge them as long as the General Assembly is in session.

We heard the promises, Governor, and occasionally took leave to question whether they would ever amount to more than promises. We are in no sense vain of our powers of divination, however. Nothing would please us less than to turn out to have been a true prophet. But in the same interview the Governor says: "Still, it would be untrue to say that I have any quarrel with the General Assembly." Now, it is quite doubtful in our mind whether the Governor will not find many of his reforms thrown aside as carelesesly as was his program of an economical session of the Legislature unless he shows that he can and will have a quarrel with the people responsible for his inability to make good his pledges.

We do not believe in the chief executive of either the city or the State going about with a chip on his shoulder and seeking trouble; but we are sincerely convinced that an outburst of righteous anger is sometimes needed.

Soft words butter no parsnips. If the action of the legislature on the question of employees is an indication of how it intends to regard the pledges of the platform, we believe the people of the State will expect the Governor to have a very serious quarrel with that body and with the members of it who are chiefly answerable for its actions.

The people understand that the Democratic party in Maryland is a close corporation. If the leaders wish to control the Legislature, they can do it. They had their forces so well in hand that after weeks of canvassing and gossip over the Speakership of the House and the Presidency of the Senate they were able to break all slates and appoint the officers of these chambers. It won't do to say that they can't pass the laws they promised to pass, for the simple reason that the very men who made the promises are the men who now control and dominate at Annapolis.

THE ONE CHIEF TEST

The Republican party through the country, and in this we include both the rank and file numbering 8,000,000 voters and the Republican leaders in both states and communities, large and small, desires nothing more than the enactment of the measures proposed by President Taft. These are demanded by the country, and if the Republican majority in congress does not pass them the voters of the United States will turn to some party that will.

No factional delay and no congression-quarrels should be allowed to interfere with the enactment of these reforms. No personal claim or ambitions ought to stand in the way of the prompt passage of the group of measures proposed by the Taft administration. This is the one test. The Republican vote in Congress should close up on this issue and reach early action and a prompt enactment.

The party organization of the senate and house exists to carry out the policies of the Republican platform and the Republican party, as expressed by the party's chosen leader, nominated at Chicago, elected president for this purpose. This is the first duty of all who direct party action in senate or house. Party organization in each chamber of the national legislature is not intended and never was intended to settle questions of party loyalty or party fealty.

This is not the tribunal to decide these questions and issues. It is for the National Republican Committee and National Republican Convention and for state Republican committees and conventions to decide who is and who is not a good Republican. Their decisions in the nation and in each state are final on policies and persons. They decide who are Republicans and what is Republicanism.

The decision has been made. A Republican majority in the Senate and house was chosen to execute the decision and policy of national, state and local conventions. Those elected on this policy should carry it out in legislation. If differences come let them be settled within the party. As long as men vote for Republican policies of the Republican platform no lesser issue and no smaller difference out to shut men out of the party It is a mistake to raise these lesser issues and differences when the recognized policies of the Republican party calls for every vote that can be secured.—Philadelphia Press.

CAN'T WORK WITHOUT FIRST LOOTING THE TREASUUY.

Speaking of the appointment of a number of men who are not needed for the work to positions at Annapolis, Mr. Benson, leader of the Democratic majority in the House of Delegates, says:

"For years now the counties and Baltimore city have been accustomed to get a certain number of employees. It has been a system. If the members do not get these places for friends, they are disgruntled and dissatisfied. That dissatisfaction extends throughout the entire session, greatly hampering their inclination to pull with their associates for measures that will, if adopted, prove beneficial to the State."

This frank admission that appointments are made for political reasons. Of course, no one who has watched events at Annapolis believed anything else. As we have said before, the most serious side of the case is not that we have at the State Capitol elected representatives who loot the State Treasury of $50,000 or $60,000 in order to pay their political obligations, but that the judgment of a body of men that stoops to such petty and disreputable business must be accepted as final on all the important matters which are up for consideration. With what confidence can the people of the State look for honest and intelligent handling of the big problems which are before the Legislature with this illustration of its capacity, its honesty, its enlightenment and its respect for public opinion!

BITTINGER.

After a long talk about the benefits arising from the invention of the steel pen the professor asked a boy in the class to explain the conditions existing before the day of the steel pen. The boy was not proverbially bright, but he had orginal ideas, and he promptly replied: "Before the steel pen was juvented, they used the pinions of one goose to express the opinions of another goose."

Amos H. Reckner and Squire Lloyd McRobie, of North Glade, were pleasant callers among us last Monday morning.

Jonas Bittinger and wife, accompanied by their daughter, Mrs. Charles Sechler and her two children, were visiting relatives at Beckman last Monday.

Columbus Brenneman and Charles Wiley made a business trip to Grantsville on Monday of this week.

A slight collapse in an unused portion of F. M. Bittinger's coal mine, last week, occasioned some excitement among the miners, but all escaped unhurt.

Fred. Miller, of M. J. Miller's Sons distillery, at Accident, was on a business trip to this neighborhood last Saturday.

Joel Orendorf was marketing in Grantsville on Monday of this week.

A pet cat, the property and especial pride of Miss Cora Bittinger, of this village, is said to have become jealous because her mistress was bestowing her affections too lavishly in other quarters, and as a result the despondent cat committed suicide by swallowing a heart tablet, death followed speedily and Miss Cora is quite grief-stricken over the affair.

LOOKS SUICIDAL TO THE BALTIMORE SUN

State Organ Speaks of Democracy's Disregard of Ordinary Decency.

The Baltimore Sun, Democratic, on Saturday published the following editorial:

Prudent and loyal members of the Democatic party who have any influence with the General Assembly should carefully consider the probable effect of their conduct at this session upon next year's elections. Those elections are the most decisive that are held in the State and city. In May of next year the election of Mayor and City Council of Baltimore will take place, and in the fall the general election will be held. The Governor, the members of the General Assembly, Comptroller, Attorney-General, Orphans' Courts, Sheriffs, State's Attorneys, many County Commissioders and other local officials will be elected. Upon the political complexion of the Legislature, the Governor and Comptroller will depend the Board of Public Works, which has a large patronage, including the Tax Commissioner's office and the Oyster Navy. The election of a Republican Governor and Legislature will mean that the public schools, the State Road Commission and the entire election machinery of the State would go into Republican control along with the police, the liquor license and other State boards in the city and counties. The first act of the Republican government, it may be assumed, would be the repeal of the Wilson Election law and, possibly, the restoration of party emblems on the official ballots for the guidance of the negro voters. All this would be done with the intent of making it as difficult as possible for the Democratic party to regain control.

It is perfectly plain that the condition of affairs at the City Hall is not such as to insure party success or to allay disquietude. Every politician knows that if the Republican party gets the City Hall in May it will help them to carry the State in November. Everyone who has the smallest conception of politics knows that up to the present time the General Assembly has done all within its power to afford aid and comfort to the Republican party and has already provided the ammunition which will be used later on against the Democrats.

Some thoughtless persons argue that because the Legislature is overwhelmingly Democratic after the extravagant session of 1908, this will happen again. If this is their reliance, they are walking in a vain shadow. At the session of 1908 the Legislature, after its extravagance, did much to redeem itself by the enactment of some excellent laws. Notwithstanding this, there can be but little doubt that the present Legislature would have been Republican on joint ballot but for the franchise amendment.

We have shown what is depending upon next year's elections. And yet the Democrats in the Legislature seem willing to risk it all just to get a lot of retainers in the State House. Is that a safe and sane business risk? Is the game worth the candle? Are there no Democratic leaders of sense and prudence who have some influence with the thoughtless and reckless men in the Legislature would seem to have absolutely no concern about the welfare of the State or the success of the Democratic party? Because the people have been long-suffering, that is no assurance that their patience will last always. These thoughtless men may be assured that when the public retribution strikes them and their party it will strike with an iron hand.

Does the Democratic party in Maryland wish to commit suicide? From its absolute disregard of ordinary decency and its shameless defiance of public sentiment, as displayed by its leaders in the General Assembly in connection with legislative appointments it would seem bent on cutting its own throat. It seems a pity the fortunes of the Democratic party in Maryland should be in the hands of men who are apparently still living in the dark ages of political Bourbonism, and who fail to realize that the State has moved on since the days when official plunder was the favorite political motto and when the public treasury was regarded as the party spoils.

Keyser Skunk Farm.

Stewart Arnold, of Keyser, W. Va., is starting an entirely new industry in West Virginia, the raising of skunks for their pelts. Several acres of land in Wildcat Hollow, just east of Keyser, will be fenced in and stocked with stunks for breeding purposes. He plans to start the farm with one hundred pure black female. These odoriferous animals yield a valuable fur which sells at a good price. He will also devote a tract of land in the same vicinity to growing ginseng, which has already proven very profitable in parts of West Virginia.

NO LENIENCY TO BE SHOWN TO BAD TRUSTS

Unlawful Combinations In Restraint of Trade Must Cease.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—President Taft, it is authoritively known, has planned an extensive onslaught on bad trusts for an early date. Through Attorney General Wickersham and Wade Ellis, assistant attorney general and trust expert of the Department of Justice, he has practically got the machinery in motion for his campaign. All he is waiting for is the decisions of the United State Supreme Court in the Standard Oil and American Tobacco trust cases. He is confident these decisions will give the government wide powers of proceeding against trusts that are destroying competition and fixing prices ruinous to smaller and independent concerns.

The anti-trust campaign will, it is now believed, include the gigantic steel trust, which trust will experience for the first time the heavy hand of the government. The President, to the few people he has talked with on the the subject, will not specify definitely that the steel trust is to be investigated and probably proceeded against. He avoided any definite answer as to this particular combination, but he is known to feel that it might be just as well for the government to be fully acquainted with the processes of this gigantic combination.

Recently the American Federation of Labor filed specific charges against the trust, claiming it to be violating, in the most flagrant manner, the Sherman anti-trust laws. This complaint was forwarded to the Department of Justice in the usual way, and has been given no unusual attention. The steel trust has escaped proceedings in the courts up to this time, the Department of Justice under former administrations having some doubts as to whether it would be wise to tackle the combination If President Taft's confidence as to the decisions of the Supreme Court is correct there is little doubt that the big combination will be among the first to be tackled.

President Taft promised the people of the country, in his campaign speeches that he would enforce the Sherman anti-trust law. The Republican national convention made the same promises. The President does not consider it necessary to get up on the housetops every morning and declare his intention to carry out his campaign pledges. He proposes to act and let the talking go.

The President is greatly pleased with the effectiveness of the government organization for the handling of the trusts. He is more than gratified with the activity and earnestness of Attorney General Wickersham and the steady and untiring investigation of Mr. Ellis. He proposes to strengthen the trust bureau of the Department of Justice by the addition of the best talent available, when he proceeds with his campaign of taking into the courts those concerns that appear to be more or less inclined to view the laws of the government as inapplicable to some combinations. The Department of Justice has a large sum of money available for this purpose and the President proposes to ask the appropriation committee of the House to keep the supply well up.

It is evident from the information available today that some of the trusts that have been heretofore ranked among the "good" ones must make it pretty plain that they are in that class. They will have to show the administration that they are all right. The steel trust has always put forth the claim that any attack upon it would seriously endanger great enterprises and lessen confidence generally. President Taft feels that no combination is too big to escape thorough investigation, and so soon as he gives the word the searchlight will be thrown on big and little and the courts invoked, if determined necessary. That they will be invoked in a number of instances is now the plan.

There is no possible chance, from inside information, that the suit against the Union and Southern Pacific merger will be dropped by the administration. Out of courtesy to the officials of those roads the administration has permitted the filing of a memorandum setting forth the contention of the officials that the government has no case and should drop its efforts. The President is so far inclined to the opinion that the best place to test the question of a good or bad case is in the courts.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. SARAH SPEICHER.

Mrs. Sarah Speicher, widow of the late Joseph Speicher, died at her home in Loch Lynn Heights Monday morning after an illness due to extreme age, extending over a period of several weeks. Mrs. Speicher was aged nearly eighty-four years and leaves a large number of friends and relatives to mourn her death among them being State Senator Harvey J. Speicher, a grandson. The fuheral took place from the Baptist church at Loch Lynn yesterday morning, with interment at the Wonderly farm.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT

Cash System Adopted By J. M. Davis & Sons.

OAKLAND, MD., January, 1910.

For several years we have endeavored to show our customers the necessity of buying for cash and on January 1st, 1907, adopted a cash system. The plan was fair to all but for various reasons was not carried out as fully as it should have been. We now find many open accounts on our books, all of which are due and should be paid, the majority of them small, but amounting to several thousand dollars, scattered among several hundred people and in many cases difficult to know just where they live or how to reach them with a statement of their account, and when we do find them our experience has been that less than ten per cent. remit promptly and in many cases the account is lost or expense of collection takes all profit so that those who pay cash have to pay profit enough to overcome such losses or buy the goods where they can get them at cash prices from the merchant who sells for cash.

We are trying in every way possible to sell our class of goods as low as they are sold in our large towns and business centers, but in order to do this must insist on carrying out the cash system, or where time is given, a note that can be used.

Should you owe us a bill we hope you will make arrangements to pay us promptly as we must collect up all old accounts, and where it is impossible to pay cash close the account by note on or before March 1st, as our plan is not to charge any goods on open account after that date and then to place unsettled accounts in the hands of a collector.

We want your trade and have gone to great expense to have an up-to-date hardware and house furnishing store and propose to treat everyone as fair as possible and to sell goods at rock bottom prices to cash buyers or to parties giving their note who are worthy of credit.

The manufacturers, jobbers and merchants in general are all adopting a cash system, especially on steel goods, and it is impossible for merchants to sell goods on the same terms and make the profit of former years. This has been brought about by the methods adopted and selling for cash at a small per cent. to draw trade from our smaller towns and country districts, thus making it necessary for the smaller merchants to adopt similar plans instead of carrying the accounts on their books.

We are making this change for several excellent reasons and only after carefully considering all sides of the question. We believe it will be in every way a distinct gain to our customers even more than to ourselves.

In a cash business all losses on bad accounts, for whatever cause, are avoided; bookkeeping and collection expenses are done away with; there is no possibility of disputes and wrangles over accounts; the merchant always has ready money to buy goods at the lowest spot cash prices and to profit by all discounts.

To make up for these losses and various expenses we have been forced to charge enough for our goods to cover them by the profits. Every store doing business on a credit basis must do this—or quit.

The people of this community want low prices, they want us to meet outside competition, to which they must pay cash. We can do it on a cash basis—in fact can guaraatee you at least a good per cent. saving on your purchases.

This change of policy does not mean a sacrifice of quality or going back on the standards we have set ourselves. In every single item we can and shall give you better goods for the same price or the same article for less where there has not been an advance in prices.

This change, too, implies no question of our reflection on anyone's ability to pay what he honestly owes or his willingness—it simply gives us the means to serve all our customers better.

The generous patronage you have given us we appreciate. We want you to continue it and shall make it richly worth your while by the much closer prices cash business will enable us to quote.

Mail and telephone orders will receive prompt attention, payable on receipt and approval of goods.

Trusting that our plans and service will meet with your approval and that we may have a continued share of your patronage, we remain,

FOR DISTURBING THE PEACE.

Several Young Men at Hutton Arrested and Fined Friday Afternoon.

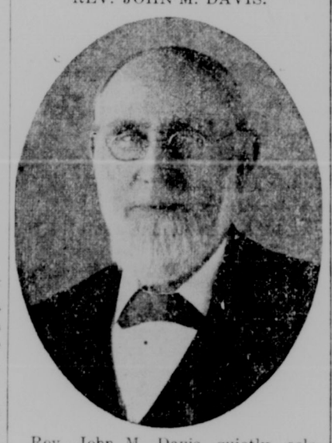
Upon the complaint and under a warrant issued by Justice West, sworn out by Leonard Henkel, Baltimore and Ohio foreman at Hntton, a number of young men and boys were arrested at that place last Friday by Sheriff Andrew Shattzer and brought to Oakland for trial that afternoon.

The information made by the prosecuting witness was to the effect that the men implicated in the affair were disorderly in that they created unseemly noise at and near the railroad station at Hutton and on the public highway leading from that town to Oakland by applying a nick-name to the witness which was not at all to his liking and in disturbing his peace of mind and the peace and dignity of the State.

Accompanying the Sheriff and his prisoners from Hutton were a number of residents of that place who came as witnesses to testify in the matter, the crowd being in the neighborhood of thirty or more.

After hearing the matter Justice West imposed a light fine and costs upon the offenders who were E. H. Pendergast, Wilbert Adams, A. J. Kisner, J. J. Baker, Norval Glover and Levi Comp.

REV. JOHN M. DAVIS.



Rev. John M. Davis quietly celebrated his seventy-fifth anniversary at his home in Oakland yesterday. Mr. Davis has been prominently identified with Oakland and Garrett county since the year 1858, when he removed to this section from Somerset county, Pa., where he was born. He was the recipient yesterday of the congratulations of a host of friends.

Monday evening Messrs. James Winters and Frank Farner took the Misses Lichliter and a few of their lady friends to Grantsville for supper at the Casselman House. Regardless of the rain the party report a delightful evening and are enthusiastic over the genuine hospitality of the Misses Dorsey, who served one of their excellent suppers for which their hotel has become justly noted, among the Salisbury people.—Salisbury Star.

The entertainment given last Saturday night in the opera house by Major Hendershot and his son, Mr. J. C. Henshot, assisted by local people, was very generously patronized. The entertainment having been given under the auspices of the public schools the scholars interested themselves in the sale of tickets, hence the splendid audience. The local people who participated were Mrs. Arthur Lawton, Misses Rebecca Thayer and Sue Littman, Dr. John G. Robinson, Mr. A. D. Naylor and Dwight Townshend.

The Oakland friends of Rev. J. B. Workman and family will regret to learn of the very serious illness of Mrs. Workman and her little daughter Inez, both of whom are suffering intensely with inflammatory rheumatism. Sunday afternoon the little girl was not expected to live and a telegram was received here by Mrs. Grover Stemple summoning her to Wheeling. Mrs. Workman was ill at the same time. A telephone message received here last night stated that both Mrs. Workman and her daughter were slightly improved.

Prosecuting Attorney Hughes and ex-Sheriff Schaeffer, both of Kingwood, West Va., were in Oakland last Thursday afternoon and evening on business. Both gentlemen inspected the Garrett county court house and were impressed very favorably with its architectural beauty and its roominess for the various officers. The gentlemen, being from Kingwood, are very much interested in a new court house—to be built at Kingwood, however, and not Terra Alta—for when the Supreme Court renders its decision in the boundary line case some of the environs of Terra Alta will become Maryland territory and then Terra Alta will be so near the state line that she may petition to become a part of Maryland, thereby eliminating the need and consequent expense of erecting a new court house at that place, for the one at Oakland, already built and equipped, will be located near Terra Alta as the one at Kingwood and is on the Main Line as well. Come over into Maryland, Terra Alta; your citizens are wide awake and ambitious, moreover they are splendid people, and we shall welcome you with outstretched hands.

SLAUGHTER HOUSE BURNED

Property of W. D. Dixon and Loss Is $500 Above Insurance.

The slaughter house of W. D. Dixon, of Oakland, which was located on the T. W. Casteel farm, half a mile east of Oakland, was burned to the ground last Thursday night between the hours of nine and ten o'clock, entailing a loss of about $1300, with an insurance in force amounting to $800, the net loss to Mr. Dixon being in the neighborhood of $500.

How the fire occurred is somewhat of a mystery as no one in the employ of Mr. Dixon had been on the premises for a day or two previous. In the building were a great many tools, rendering pots, etc., and adjoining it was located a cold storage house and ice house combined.

Some folks who want to puzzle their correspondents, instead of dating their letters 1910, write on them "MCMX." Not a few arguments have been started by the apparently cabalistic letters. They really represent the simplest manner in which the present year of the Christian era can be indicated by Roman numerals. The M represents 1,000, the next M preceded by C represents 1,000 less the 100, or 900, and the two thus indidate 1900, while the X of course is for 10. It might, of course, be written also MDCCCCX, but that would be a waste of ink and paper, and we are supposed to be entering upon an era of economy.

Dr. Frank Weber, son of Mrs. Weber and of the late Henry Weber, of near Oakland, was brought to his home yesterday morning from Baltimore where he underwent a severe surgical operation a few weeks ago when his left kidney was removed by Dr. St. Clair Spruill at the University Hospital. Dr. Weber was accompanied to Oakland by Drs. Ricketts and West and a trained nurse, all of the hospital staff. The physicians who accompanied the patient home returned yesterday afternoon, the nurse remaining here. Dr. Weber's condition is extremely grave and his friends have but slight hopes for his recovery.

Back from Eastern Sho'.

Messrs. N. S. Ringer, C. and H. Speicher, of Garrett county, Md., who we mentioned recently as going to the Eastern Sho', returned Monday. They are loud in their praise of the kind treatment they received from the hospitable people they met there and the fine country they saw. No mosquitoes there in summer, but the red bug or jigger is a torment to the flesh in which he burrows and dies. From Cape Charles they sailed to Norfolk, Va., where they received the same kind of treatment. No snow either but lots of green fields. One man alone shipped 447 barrels of spinach while they were there. They will go back next summer to see the land.—Meyersdale Commercial.

JOHN J. STUMP,

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 21, 1910.

Was It Worth While?

Some time ago one of the most prominent clothiers of Keyser, West Virginia, thought that he was paying too much money for heating and lighting his store and he had the idea that he could get the same results if he used natural gas for this purpose in place of the heating and lighting facilities he then was using.

After consulting with his plumber, he decided to put in five arcs, each containing four lights, and one heating stove. The arc lights cost him $9.50 each, total $47.50. The stove cost him $13.50, and the cost of the necessary piping was $70.50.

In a letter he had this to say concerning his investment:

"Before installing natural gas in my store on Main Street, the cost of heating and lighting the store room was approximately $110 a year. I now use natural gas for both heating and lighting purposes, and this cost me $24.50 for the year 1908.

"BY PLACING NATURAL GAS IN MY STORE, THE AMOUNT SAVED TO ME IN THE COURSE OF THE YEAR WAS $85.50, AND MY STORE IS BETTER HEATED AND BETTER LIGHTED THAN WHEN I WAS USING COAL AND ELECTRIC LIGHTS."

A copy of the above letter is on file in our office over the signature of the merchant who sent it to us.

The investment, of course, was worth while. He had his store equipped for the best lighting and heating facilities obtainable, and after paying all expenses for this equipment, he was still $15 to the good as compared to what his former expenses were. In brief, HE PAID ALL HIS EXPENSES AND STILL HAD MORE THAN HALF ENOUGH LEFT TOWARDS HIS NEXT YEAR'S HEATING AND LIGHTING BILLS.

The man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

THE ETERNAL FEMININE.

It Did Assert Itself Just as Phil Had Predicted.

By HELENE WOOD.

"Elizabeth, the eternal feminine will assert itself."

Elizabeth put on her long blue painting apron without replying and began to stretch a canvas. She was adorable so, her gray eyes defiantly averted and a flush of anger on her cheeks.

"There you go again. If I don't know my own mind at twenty-six when will I?"

"At twenty seven or eight perhaps. I hope sooner. Your ideas are all wrong. Believe me, the day will come when you will long for a home of your own and some one nearer than a girl friend or masculine admirer."

He had the last word, for the arrival of the model, a thin, shabby looking girl, put an end to the discussion.

"Tomorrow at 5, then?"

Elizabeth gave a brisk little nod. She was already sketching in the outlines of her study, and Phil was forgotten before he had closed the door.

The young man was quite accustomed to such treatment. Admired as he was to her most intimate friendship on an understanding of strict camaraderie, he broke over the traces every year, was invariably refused and bore his defeat with easy allount. Some day she was bound to change her mind, and he might be the lucky man.

Elizabeth's own opinion was very different. She had no time for thought until her work was laid aside for the day. Then she sank into a nest of cushions to think luxuriously.

No, Phil was wrong. She would never care to leave her studio—above all, to marry. Had not the art school girls who married ceased developing intellectually? Shut up in their own four walls, they became entirely absorbed in dear Tom or Dick and the children.

Children! Elizabeth shuddered. A child in a book or picture was very delightful, but the reality—a dirty little creature always crying or being ill! She would never leave her work, her studies, her pleasures, for a deadly stupid family life—never!

* * * * * * * *

A cry of warning. The trolley car stopped with a lurch. In an instant the conductor and motorman were down in the street, followed by most of the passengers. Elizabeth, impatient at the delay, resolved to walk the block or two remaining. Her model would be waiting for her at the studio.

When she left the car she found herself the only woman in a large group collected about a sickening black mass which had splashed car wheels and cobblestones with blood. The conductor, a good natured looking young Irishman, stood with tears rolling down his face. He was holding a golden haired baby, a toddler of a year or two. The motorman, white and frightened, was telling how the baby had suddenly run in front of the car and the mother had thrown the little one out of the way, only to be crushed herself.

The child began to cry, and the conductor turned to Elizabeth imploringly. "You take the baby, mum. The ambulance is comin'. The cops will be after findin' its relatives."

Before she could reply he had put the baby in her unresisting arms.

Some moments later, hardly knowing how it had all happened, she found herself walking into her studio building carrying a little child. In her purse was a bit of paper inscribed "19 Plumley alley." It was the poor woman's address, to which she had promised to take him. A man she knew who was passing along the corridor smiled and remarked, "Rather a small model, Miss Blair." Elizabeth flushed as if she had committed a crime and was relieved to close the studio door behind her.

Then she put down her burden and looked at her watch. Ten o'clock! The model had come and gone. No hope now. She herself would have to take the child home. A short conference at the phone told her the whereabouts of Plumley alley, eight blocks south and just off the —th street car line.

When she left the phone she found the little one standing close by. Elizabeth studied him with half shut eyes.

"Not bad," she thought—"a Donatello if the forehead were a little higher and the curls not so fine and tight. How I should like to paint him! Come here, little one. What's your name?"

"Alan Campbell naughty."

"Are you naughty?"

"'Es. I want my muvver."

His mother! Elizabeth felt a quick pang of horror. "Come here, and I will show you something pretty."

She held out her watch. The silver and gold ornaments on its long chain jingled attractively. Alan Campbell slowly drew near the shining object. He seized it just as a little stray dog would have done a bit of cake—seized it and walked away. Then Elizabeth brought out pictures. It was surprising how quickly they were friends, sitting on the floor side by side looking at pussies and doggies.

It was after 11 when Alan Campbell's face began to look doleful.

"I want a cup of millik," he announced.

There were a pitcher of cream, some biscuits and a glass of jelly in her stock of tea table provisions. With this luncheon spread out before him Alan Campbell was soon installed on the edge of the model stand.

When he had drunk all the cream except that which soaked into her pretty rug, when his face was gory with currant jelly and biscuits had lost their attraction, Elizabeth took one sticky little hand in hers and led him firmly to the washstand. After he was clean and dry she sank into a chair, exhausted.

"I want up on 'ap!" cried a little voice appealingly.

She drew him up. For awhile he was amused by her velvet blouse. Then his eyes began to close. Alan Campbell's head was on Elizabeth's shoulder. His right hand clasped hers tightly. He was fast asleep.

Elizabeth had the true artistic nature, which when it feels does so with abandon. The soft little body in her arms, the warm, sweet breath on her face, touched the very depths of her heart. Never in her life had she felt so strangely happy—happy and yet troubled. She was embarrassed before her own emotions and bent her head, clasping him more tightly. The world thought of her as a woman. She had a womanly poise and a strong character, but her heart, a girl's heart, could not understand this awakening of mysterious instincts, the motherhood beneath her culture and ambition, and stronger than both. The flying moments, her beloved work, everything was forgotten as she held the sleeping child.

A half hour passed, an hour. Alan Campbell suddenly opened a pair of questioning blue eyes. Startled by the strange face, he cried: "Where's my muvver? I want my muvver!" His little body shook with sobs.

Rudely aroused from her dream, Elizabeth felt a quick pang of jealousy. Yes, she was jealous of the woman whose hold on the child even death was powerless to break. Silently she put on her wraps, gathered Alan Campbell, sobs and all, into her arms and hurried down to the —th street cars.

Plumley alley proved to be a neat flagged court and No. 19 a tiny white house with green shutters. A little old man, whose eyes were swollen with weeping, came to answer her ring. Alan Campbell called, "Huddo, grampy." The poor old fellow tried in vain to control his grief. The girl shook the trembling old hand and turned away, unable to express her sympathy. Alan Campbell smiled after her like a sunbeam.

Elizabeth closed her studio door with a shiver. Never had it looked more beautiful, more orderly or more cold and still.

"I want my muvver!" a little voice kept sounding in her ear. Ah, these mothers she had been pitying, how she envied them now! It was ridiculous to feel so, and yet, and yet she knew her arms would always be empty and her whole body hungry for the presence, the caresses of a little child, something of her own, her very own, to love.

There was hardly time to arrange her hair and light the spirit lamp before Phil knocked. Hoping that he would not notice her red eyelids, she concentrated her attention on the tea things. She thought she was succeeding until Phil said, "What's up, Elizabeth?"

"Oh," she replied, "I saw a frightful accident this morning. I can't seem to forget it." Tears rolled down her cheeks.

Phil longed to take the sensitive girl into his arms, but he only said cheeringly:

"There are many cruel things in this world. We can't help them. Try to forget all this. Put on your hat and come out to dinner with me."

She only sobbed.

Phil knelt beside her chair and took her hand.

"Please don't cry. It hurts me to see it."

It was very un-Elizabeth-like, but somehow she let her head droop on his shoulder and closed her eyes, as Alan Campbell had done. It was so good to feel some one near, some one who was strong and who loved her. Phil could not understand, but was grateful for the miracle which had made the girl he loved seek his arms like a child. He spoke low and tenderly.

"Dear, won't you let me be your consoler always?"

He bent his head to her tear stained cheek, and her little word of reply was not so loud as the glad beating of his heart.

"Only," said Elizabeth when she had recovered something of her usual spirit, "don't flatter yourself it was your conquest. It was nothing at all but the eternal feminine."

One of Nature's Blunders.

During the first year of the Hosfords' residence at their newly acquired country home Mrs. Hosford was in a chronic state of surprise, with many periods of indignation. "Just because I've always lived in the city they take advantage of my ignorance to make me believe all sorts of stories," she said plaintively one night to her husband. "I have been real provoked, but now I'm just hurt."

"What's happened?" inquired her husband as he prepared to listen.

"Why, old Mr. Compton, our neighbor down the road, told me that the tree which had the most apple blossoms was likely to have the most apples," said Mrs. Hosford, "and I believed him."

"Seems reasonable," assented her husband.

"Oh, but it's just the other way," said Mrs. Hosford, with considerable heat for a person no longer provoked. "The tree that I got the very most blossoms from, the one that almost decorated the Hibbards' parlor when Margaret was married, has hardly any apples on it at all!"—Youth's Companion.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

THE COST OF CHURCH FEDERATION TO BAPTISTS, ADVENTISTS AND DISCIPLES.

"Say Ye Not, A Confederacy, to All Them to Whom This People Shall Say, A Confederacy; Neither Fear Ye Their Fear, Nor Be Afraid" (Isaiah viii, 12).

Sunday, Jan. 23.—Numerically Baptists, Adventists and Disciples represent more than one-third of the Protestants of the United States. What they must yield for Church Federation is therefore an important question. All three of these systems are built upon the Congregational platform, which recognizes as Scriptural the independence of each congregation as to its own creed in all matters of faith and Church order. These bodies of Christians, therefore, could not join the Federation as denominations. The only method by which they could give adherence would be either by abandoning their principles of independence for which they have so long contended, or else by remaining quiescent while their ministers through Councils and Conferences essay to act for them. And here it should be noted that the membership of these large Christian bodies have more and more during the past thirty-five years shown their willingness to have their ministers regulate their affairs, even though contrary to their avowed principles of Church Government.

But it is from the standpoint of doctrines rather than Church government that we shall examine our subject. As we progress we shall find that some of the doctrines once considered all-important can in the light of our day be laid aside as obsolete—as hindrances in every sense of the word. Caution, however, would suggest that for everything discarded as unscriptural the truthful substitute should be found—otherwise our progress would be toward the destruction, not only of the bad of our creeds of the past, but also of their good features.

Doctrinal Surrender of Baptists.

Baptists will find little to dispute with their co-religionists of the Federation along general doctrinal lines; their chief difficulty will be in the matter of what constitutes Christian baptism—the necessity of water immersion to admission to Church membership. For years this doctrine has been even more tenaciously held than is generally realized. Our Baptist brethren hold to justification by faith as a first or preliminary step which the sinner must take. But they equally hold that this is not the final step—that the step of sacrifice, the step of regeneration much follow in order to salvation. And a baptism in water they recognize as an indispensable outward indication of this regeneration. Hence it is standard Baptist doctrine, both North and South in all Baptist Churches with rare exceptions, that no unimmersed person should be esteemed a member of Christ's Church.

In a word, faith and reformation are steps of justification, but water immersion is the door into Christ. Only those who pass through this door are members of the Church of Christ from this viewpoint; hence, consistently, none others are invited to partake of the Eucharist—the Lord's Supper. The argument is that this Supper, symbolizing death with Christ, was offered only to the consecrated and accepted members of Christ's Church. Hence to invite others than those immersed in water would be a violation of the letter and the spirit of the Divine Word and a countenancing of false doctrine. The argument is that all of "the elect" will be guided of the Lord, so that their hearts and heads will become amenable to these teachings. Obedience thereto will be shown by submission to water immersion—the door into the Church of Christ.

Like the rest of us, our Baptist friends have been in the past rather illogical in all matters religious and doctrinal; so much so that many of them have never realized the full meaning of their doctrine. The meaning was grasped in the long ago, but has generally been lost sight of within the last fifty years. It is this: Since water immersion is the evidence of obedience to Divine instruction and since all of "the elect" are not only instructed of God but obedient to him, therefore those not baptized in water are not of God's elect—are not members in his Church. And this in turn, according to Baptist doctrine, implies that all not immersed in water are outside of the Church—outside of the number of "the elect"—outside of God's favor—outside of the salvation provided in Christ—and therefore inside the damnation and eternal torment which Baptist doctrines imply have been foreordained for the eternal torture of all the non-elect.

Do our Baptist friends who meet unimmersed Christians of other denominations in the walks of life from day to day really believe that the latter are on their way to an eternity of torture? Most assuredly they do not! But this is merely because they are illogical, like the rest of us. They are as illogical as their brethren of other denominations. They have outgrown at least this feature of the teachings of the "dark ages" handed down to them by well-meaning but less enlightened forefathers.

One glance at the matter will suffice to show our Baptist brethren that the very strongest features of their teaching needs some revision. However fundamental may be the doctrine of baptism, some of their conclusions respecting it will be greatly advantaged by a liberal pruning. But caution should be used. The Bible should be consulted. We offer the suggestion that too hasty a rejection of water immersion would be a mistake—that the proper course for our Baptist friends is to study the Scriptures afresh on this subject. What wonderful advantages are now at the command of all Bible students! They have marginal references by which one passage throws light upon another. They have also concordances, glossaries, indexes, and all manner of helps for Bible study. Our forefathers before the Reformation were generally illiterate. And even had they possessed education the pen-written Bibles were expensive and obtainable only in the Latin language. Indeed it is within only the last few years that Bibles have become cheap and plentiful and the masses able to read them.

What Must Adventists Concede?

The doctrine of the Second Advent of Christ is common to all denominations. And the Adventist belief that at that time the earth will be burned up is also a feature of all the various creeds. Many Adventists have abandoned the thought that the Savior's second appearing is at hand. And many more are abandoning the thought that when he appears Adventists alone will be saved and all the remainder of mankind will participate in the destruction and burning which shall then engulf the earth. It should not be difficult for them to realize that there is no great necessity for controversy along the lines of the time of Christ's coming, since they acknowledge themselves completely in the dark on that subject. Neither can we suppose that after thoughtful consideration they should feel justified in assuming that they alone are "the elect." Let us hope that with broadening sentiment they are more and more realizing that there are saints and sinners in their own number, as well as in all denominations and as well as in the world; and that "the Lord knoweth them that are his" and will care for them, regardless of denominational lines. But for that portion of Adventists which considers the keeping of the Seventh Day of the week the all-important part of Christianity we see no ground for Federation, unless, indeed, they may choose to get about the difficulty by counting the calendar the other way around the world. Thus they might bring their Seventh Day into harmony with what others term the First Day. Or, by counting the calendar in the opposite direction they may still keep their Seventh Day and realize that others are keeping the same day, though calling it the First Day.

Disciple Doctrines to Be Voided.

Undoubtedly Alexander Campbell was a good man with a great head. And undoubtedly many of a similar class following his lead are today known as Disciples or Christians. Undoubtedly these are following closely to apostolic customs in the matter of Church organization, which in many respects is beautiful in its simplicity. Doctrinally they claim most faithfully to stand by the Word of God alone. And one of their familiar declarations is, "When the Word of God speaketh we speak; when the Word of God is silent we are silent." But this beautiful simplicity of theory our Disciple friends have found difficult to work out in practice. Hence we find them as strongly intrenched behind unwritten creeds as are others behind elaborated creeds. These are inculcated through the writings of their standard authorities—including the editors of their leading journals. "Disciples" hold most tenaciously as the Bible teaching that baptism in water is indispensable to the remission of sins. This doctrine is supported by several Bible texts which declare, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins;" "Baptism unto repentance and remission of sins," etc.

Before pointing out their misapplications of these texts let us note the facts that according to their theory all others of mankind, Christians, Jews and heathen, who have not been immersed have not had their sins washed away. Consequently such are yet in their sins. Consequently such are lost. And lost according to the general understanding of Disciples and other Christians signifies shut out of heaven—shut out of Paradise—shut into hell and its eternal torment.

Do our Disciple friends act as though they believed this teaching? Do they spend all of their time and energy and money in seeking to bring fellow-Christians into water baptism for the remission of sins and escape from eternal torture? Assuredly they do not. Hence we are justified in supposing that like our Baptist friends they have not taken seriously and logically their own doctrines. Rather they have assented to them thoughtlessly. It would appear to us, therefore, that doctrinally our Disciple friends might easily be prevailed upon to abandon their peculiar tenet to the extent that it would not hinder them from losing their identity as advocates of "baptism for the remission of sins" and merging themselves or federating with others.

To assist them out of their difficulty we remind them that all the Scripture they cite in support of immersion for the remission of sins belonged to the Jews, and none of it to Gentiles. The Jews were exhorted by John the Baptist and others to renounce sin, to return to harmony with Moses' Law, and to show this change of character by water immersion. But those Ephesians who believed in Christ and whom Apollos baptized for the remission of sins did not receive the holy Spirit. St. Paul explained to them that their baptism was an improper one—that they as Gentiles required an immersion into Christ (Acts xix, 1-7; Romans vi, 3).

Baptist Union Not Federation.

As a week ago we suggested to Presbyterians, Congregationalists and Methodists a union of heart and head as better than federation, so now we suggest to the denominations whose doctrines we are considering today. What we shall suggest respecting baptism will apply to all Christians.

All Christians agree that Jesus and his apostles taught baptism and that there are but "one Lord, one faith and one baptism" (Ephesians iv, 5). We cannot here elaborate, but merely suggest that nowhere in the Scriptures is infant baptism commanded or urged. The expression, "Believe and be baptized," implies a mental development capable of belief beyond that which infants possess. The original pretext for introducing infant baptism was set forth by St. Augustine, who urged that as all mankind were going to eternal torture except the Church, it was necessary to get infants into the Church; and baptism was set forth as the door-way. All parents, of course, were anxious that their children should be immersed into the Church and saved from eternal torture. And those good wishes were certainly commendable, even if unnecessary.

Subsequently immersion was declared to be unnecessary and sprinkling became its substitute with all. The thought of preservation from eternal torment thereafter attached to the sprinkling. Although our minds have broadened, so that comparatively few believe St. Augustine's presentation, nevertheless the custom of infant sprinkling continues with more or less of fear to abandon it for the child's sake.

Who will dispute that St. Paul's words of Romans vi, 3-5, are the clearest presentation of the import of baptism furnished us in the Bible! The passage is cited in proof of every theory of baptism, yet it supports only one—the true one. Notice that it does not say, as many suppose, So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into water. It does say, "So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death." Is there not a difference? That difference is the explanation of all of our difficulty on this subject. The clearing of it away furnishes the foundation for harmony between all; and not merely for harmony, but for union amongst all classes of consecrated Christians.

Consider the passage critically. First, immersion into Christ signifies to the justified believer his immersion into, his burial into, the Body of Christ as a member of "the Church which is his Body" (Ephesians i, 22, 23). The Apostle sets forth clearly a distinction between the Church and the world and between the salvation of the Church and the salvation of the world. The Church are "the elect" of the Lord, called and chosen; and if faithful, they will be members of the glorious Church beyond the veil. It, as the Bride of Christ, will be his companion and Queen during the Millennial reign of glory for the blessing of the world—for the blessing of the non-elect, considered last Sunday.

St. Paul not only tells us of our need to be thus immersed into membership in the Body of Christ, but he proceeds to tell us how that membership can be brought about. The words, "Baptism into his death" explain the matter. How strange that we ever thought these words signified water immersion! Our eyes are now opened! Plainly, now, we see that "into his death" signifies our participation with our Lord Jesus in suffering for righteousness, in self-denials, self-sacrificings of the same character as those endured by the Master. It is true indeed that the whole world suffers pain, sorrow, disappointment, etc.; yet our Lord suffered differently from all others, and our dying must correspond to his. He suffered, the Just for the unjust. The holy, harmless, undefiled One laid down his life sacrificially, voluntarily, joyfully. And we, to share in his death, to be "baptized into his death," must do the same.

True, Jesus was spotless, while we are members of the fallen race. But we are justified through faith in his blood. And hence we have in the Divine sight through him a standing of human perfection or justification. This standing is granted to us or imputed to us for the very purpose of permitting us to sacrifice our human rights and earthly interests as he sacrificed his. The "elect" are to be dead with him, that in the resurrection they may live with him and be like him and share his glory, honor and immortality. By consecration we present our bodies living sacrifices holy and acceptable to God, as the Apostle declares (Romans xii, 1). Thus we are "immersed into his death" and thus we become members of his Body.

Whoever fails to be thus immersed into Christ's death will fail of the membership in his Body—will fail to be of his elect Church, his Bride. The difference between being dead with Adam and being dead with Christ is very great. By nature we are all dead with Adam. He was a sinner, condemned. We as his offspring are the same. It was necessary therefore that we should by faith be lifted out of this condition of death with Adam, in order that by consecration of all earthly interests we might become dead with Carist. Thus we share with him his sacrificial death and, by participation in "his resurrection," also become sharers of his Kingdom glory.

Ridding ourselves, then, of the unscriptural theory of an eternal torment awaiting the non-elect, may not all Christians perceive the reasonableness of the Divine proposition to bless them through the elect? As Jesus by his sacrifice was made Head of the Church, so all who will be his members must share his spirit of self-sacrifice—death to the world and earthly interest. Only such may share with him in his Millennial Kingdom work of blessing, uplifting, instructing, assisting all of the non-elect. Many of the non-elect under the fuller light and better opportunities of the Millennium will turn from sin to righteousness, from death to life eternal. This "baptism into death" with its blessed reward excludes no denominational lines. It includes in the Church of the elect those of every denomination and of no denomination who comply with its conditions of faith and obedience and consecration unto death.

Was not this our Lord's baptism as he described it? Just before his crucifixion he said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how I am straitened (troubled) until it be accomplished!" His baptism dated from his consecration at Jordan, but it was not fully "accomplished" until on the cross he cried, "It is finished"—his baptism into death was finished. Was not this baptism into death what he referred to when speaking to his disciples? James and John requested that they might sit on his right hand and left hand in the Kingdom. In reply Jesus said, "Are ye able to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" Surely he did not refer to a water immersion! Surely he did refer to his baptism into death, and meant his apostles to understand that only by sharing in his baptism into death could they hope to sit with him in his Throne (Mark x, 37).

With this reasonable, logical, Scriptural view of baptism before our minds which of us would be inclined to dispute over the form of the symbol or in respect to the class of persons who should properly use the symbol? Surely none would claim that infants could thus believe and thus consecrate to death! Surely all would agree that a symbolical immersion into water such as was practised by the early Church, according to all the records, would be the most reasonable, most beautiful, most appropriate method of symbolizing the real baptism into Christ—into his death. Let us then, dear friends, not be content merely to federate! Let us unite our hearts and heads and hands as members of the Body of Christ; let us be baptized with his baptism, into his death!

How to Make a Shirt Case.

Here is a useful Christmas present for a young lady to make for a young man. Take a yard and a half of either white duck or linen drilling twenty-four or twenty-seven inches wide. Have a layer of sheet wadding, sprinkled with sachet powder. Over it use a pretty silk for lining. Sometimes a pretty quilted lining is used. Fold three times and make a case. Turn over one corner and embroider scallops on edge of same and the word "Shirts" embroidered in washable gold thread. Flowers or a pretty conventional design may be embroidered. Scatter them promiscuously.

How to Stuff Squabs With Corn.

Cut the kernels off from six ears of green corn, scraping out all the milk, but taking care to get in none of the cob. Put into a saucepan two tablespoonfuls of butter, a half cupful of hot water, salt and pepper to season. Cook a few minutes, add one beaten egg, and cook until thickened. Stuff the birds, lay in a baking pan with a thin slice of bacon, blanketing each fat little breast, put a cupful of hot water in the pan and roast, basting frequently. This makes a delectable dish. Canned corn can be used instead of corn on the ear when the latter is not in season.

How to Make Pumpkin Pie.

To a quart of stewed pumpkin, drained and well mashed, add one cupful of sugar, two eggs, well beaten; two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, mixed with the sugar; half a teaspoonful each of cinnamon and allspice, quarter of a teaspoonful of cloves and of nutmeg. Mix all together. Heat until boiling hot a pint of milk, pour it over the pumpkin and let stand until cool, stirring well. Line four pie tins with good, rich crust; fill with the mixture, but do not cover with an upper crust. Bake in a moderately hot oven.

How to Prepare Boned Turkey.

Boil the fowl in as little water as possible until the bones can easily be separated from the meat. Remove all of the skin, slice and mix together the light and dark parts, prepare a dressing as for roast turkey, put upon the fire to melt the butter, then mold into a round ball and put the meat all around it. Boil down the liquid in which the turkey or chicken was boiled, then pour it on the meat. Wrap it tightly in a cloth, then press it with a heavy weight for a few hours. When served it is cut into thin slices.

How to Remove Grease Spots.

Obstinate grease spots can be removed by placing them in benzine, placing them on a double pad of blotting paper and after laying another pad of the same over the top pressing with a moderately hot iron.

HUSBAND MUST TELL ALL TO WIFE

That is He Must Tell Her Where He Has Been.

If a man stays away from his home for forty-eight hours and, returning, refuses to tell his wife exactly where he has been, she has good grounds for a divorce.

So the learned Judge Josiah Cohen has decided in the Pittsburg divorce court. Mrs. Rosina Pasetti testified tearfully that her husband remained from home two days and, more important, two nights, and would not tell her where he had been or what he had been doing.

"He would not tell you anything?" said Judge Cohen. "In that case it is not necessary for you, madam, to testify to what you learned of his conduct during his absence. It was his plain duty to acquit himself from your just and natural suspicions. Judgment for the plaintiff."

Many wives and good lawyers are discussing Judge Cohen's decision today. The wives particularly those of advanced ideas, such as suffragettes, say King Solomon was a babe in wisdom compared to Judge Cohen; that the sayings of Epictetus and others were infantile alongside Judge Cohen's dictum.

Good lawyers say that now all that is left to a married man who has been away for forty eight nours is to break his leg and be carried home. If he loves his wife truly he will be carried home with two broken legs. Then he will have two good excuses for his absence.

For, the lawyers say, under Judge Cohen's decision the returning husband must produce cumulative evidence explaining his absence. The old explanation that he has been sitting up with a sick friend will not do now.

Before her honor his wife he will have to produce a train of corroboratory witnesses—the porter of his club, his chauffeur, the policeman on his home beat, the prettiest woman whom his wife knows he knows, his janitor, even the sick friend with whom he did not sit up. If a pair of aces and several highballs could prove an alibi for him it would be so the much convincing.

Even the cuckoo clock cannot lie for him now. He will have to adopt the expedient of the man who was wise as Solomon, at least. As this man opened his front door the cuckoo in the hall clock cuckooed three times. The man instantly cuckooed nine times more, then entered his bedroom.

"Why, you're home early dearest," called his wife in her room.

ROCKEFELLER TO MEND ROAD

He Will Put Down a Mile of Model Pavement Near Tarrytown, N. Y.

William Rockefeller, it was announced recently, will spend $50,000 to repair Broadway from the North Tarrytown (N. Y.) village line to the south line of Briarcliff. The road in front of Mr. Rockefeller's estate has been in bad condition all summer. Mr. Rockefeller rides back and forth to his office in New York every day in his automobile and has been greatly inconvenienced by the condition of the road.

The road to be repaired is more than a mile long. It is proposed to build a roadway thirty-three feet wide between gutters, and the central part to a width of twenty feet will be bricked with pavement blocks. On each hill a special block will be used. Mr. Rockefeller thinks this road will afford a model that will be followed by town authorities who are looking for a road to stand up under the automobile traffic. Mr. Rockefeller was the first person in the county to apply oil to roads, and he is the first to try this kind of automobile road there.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, barries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Chutney Sauce.

Slice enough rather green sour apples to make one quart. Chop two quarts of green tomatoes, one shallot and two Spanish onions. Mix together with a quarter cupful of salt, a quart of brown sugar, one quart of vinegar one teaspoonful of cayenne and one inch of green ginger root bruised well. Let the mixture cook very gently all day. After it is cold return to the fire reheat and boil rapidly for five minutes, stirring constantly. Put in wide mouthed glass bottles and seal the corks with melted wax or paraffin.

Pumpkin Pie Without Eggs.

Stew the pumpkin well, drain and run through a colander or coarse sieve. To a quart of this sieved pumpkin add two tablespoonfuls of flour mixed with one and one-half cups of sugar. Mix well and then add one quart of cream and same of rich milk or use all milk and a little butter. Season to taste with grated nutmeg and add a pinch of salt. This will fill six pies with an under crust only.

Sauce Tartare.

Take a teaspoonful of mustard half a teaspoonful of salt, ten drops of onion juice, yolks of two eggs, half a cup of salad oil, three tablespoonfuls of vinegar and a tablespoonful each of capers, minced parsley and olives. Mix in the order given. Add the yolk and beat well. Add oil slowly and the vinegar a little at a time. Then add the chopped ingredients and put on ice until needed.

Cleaning Oilcloth.

A scrubbing brush should never be used for cleaning oilcloth, nor should strong soda water or very hot soapsuds be employed. A cloth dipped in a lather made of soft soap and warm—but not hot—water will be found amply sufficient for removing dust or grease, the soap being washed off with another cloth wrung out in clean water.

Uses of Milk In Cleaning.

It will clean piano keys beautifully.

It will take discolorations from gilt mirror and picture frames.

It will take out ink spots of long standing.

Used in starch, it will give a gloss like that obtained in a laundry.

Used with bluing for lace curtains, it will make them look like new.

Improved Broiling Pan.

When broiling steak, chops or the like in a gas range the suet that is tried out from the fatty part often catches fire. As a rule, the fat is overheated and burns fiercely, and many efforts to put it out when taken from the oven fail, says Scientific American.

The accompanying illustration shows a very simple way to avoid this. In the pan used for broiling is placed a perforated false bottom made out of black iron of any thickness. The edges are turned down, say, one-quarter of an inch, forming supports for the bottom. In service the suet melts and runs down through the perforations to the bottom of the pan. No matter how hot the fire, the suet will not catch fire, as it is protected from the flames by the perforated bottom, which acts like the screen of a miner's lamp.

Salad Dressing Without Oil.

Two teaspoonfuls of mustard, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of flour, one-quarter teaspoonful of pepper, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and one egg. Mix well, then add one cupful of sweet milk and one-third cupful of vinegar. Cook over hot water till it thickens.

Apple Pudding.

Pare and extract the cores, but leave whole, six apples. Pour over them a batter made of a pint of sifted flour, one gill of cream and three gills of milk, four beaten eggs and salt to taste. Take care to have the batter very smooth. Bake for one hour and serve with a good liquid sauce.

To Work Buttonholes In Lace.

Baste small squares of lawn under each place where you wish to make buttonholes, then cut and work the buttonholes. Cut away the surplus lawn around the buttonholes, leaving them firm and strong. Also put tiny squares underneath where the buttons are to be sewed.

To Wash Comfortables.

Wet the comfortables, then rub well with soap, hang on the line and turn the hose on them until the water runs clear. Let them hang until dry, then shake them out, and your comfortables will be light and fluffy like new ones.

An Embroidery Hint.

To prevent embroidery on sheer materials from puckering, baste tissue paper under the part to be embroidered. It will easily pull away when the work is finished.

Callous Skin on the Feet.

Apply the following preparation to the thickened surfaces: Boracic acid, one dram; beta-naphthol, twenty grains; lanolin, one ounce.

CARE OF ROADS.

After Good Ones Are Constructed They Should Be Cared For Regularly.

The good road era has begun in many states, and already the steam roller, the piles of crushed rock along the roadside and the digging out of the original roadway are familiar sights in many of the eastern states. The roads built are generally of approved macadam construction, which, completed, are perfect strips of white ribbon running through the green fields and hills of the rural sections.

These roads are perfectly built, and as soon as completed the farmers and other ratepayers contentedly sit back and exclaim, "Those roads are now good for a generation or more without trouble." This is a serious error and one being made in many states. That it is an error is borne out by the dust cloud raised by a passing car traveling at twenty miles per hour or perhaps faster.

Many fail to realize that whenever dust is raised a road is being destroyed. This is particularly the case on smooth macadam surfaces, where there is nothing to hold the dust on the road and where every cross wind blows off any loose material.

As soon as roads are built arrangements should be made to keep them in repair. With roads it is essentially "a stitch in time saves nine." Some dust preventive should be used immediately macadam roads are completed in order to prevent dust.

Oil, tar and many special preparations are now on the market, and the communities should be educated to look upon these additions as a legitimate part of the road maintenance. California has its oiled roads over which motoring is a pleasure to the motorist and not a dust path to the citizen who happens to be on the road the same day or who has the misfortune to reside along a well traveled highway.

Massachusetts has proved that road treatments are a success and more economical than continuous applications of water, and in England dust preventing is always considered a part of the road problem.

WOMEN BUILD ROADS.

Start Campaign For Better Highways In Virginia, and Interest Is Spreading.

Women of the country sections in many parts of the state of Virginia have taken up the work of road building. In Fairfax county as well as in other counties this has been reported.

Miss Edith Thompson of Fairfax county, a pretty young woman, accompanied by her young sister and her mother, recently reported that they had built three miles of good roads single handed while their men worked on the farm. Other women in the state, becoming interested in the campaign for better roads, are following this example.

Oiling a Kansas Road.

Some time ago a mile of country road south of Sedan, Kan., was oiled under the direction of the Sedan Commercial club. Fifty dollars was paid for this, and it was all raised by public subscription. The oil had to be hauled so far that the cost of hauling was almost equal to the price of the oil. Nevertheless the total cost of dragging the road and of soaking it in oil was only $50.

The road was oiled in May and is yet in almost as good condition as it was when finished. It is well rounded up, with good drainage, and the oil has made it solid, something like asphalt pavement. The road is the talk of the farmers. They will go a mile or two out of their way just to use it in driving into Sedan.

Tribute to Road Drag's Value.

Walter Shoemaker, rural free delivery carrier in Drumore, Lancaster county, Pa., wrote to the Lancaster (Pa.) Automobile club about the split log road drag as follows:

"I drive on a piece of road on which the drag has been used, and I can see that it is the best road I have on my entire mail route. I think the split log drag is just the thing to make good roads. Rural free delivery carriers want good roads just as well as the farmers want good roads and just as well as the automobile men want good roads, and we want to help the farmers all we can."

Add to the Value of Land.

Good roads add value to every acre. They practically bring the country and city together, so that the present crowded, unwholesome conditions may be avoided, and change the dreary country life by easy visits to the city.

SAVED HER LOVER

Jules Souvestre was soon to marry Mlle. Ladouner, one of the most beautiful and refined girls in Lyons. One night at a cafe chantant he rebuked Achille Emaux, a professional duelist, for interrupting a singer and publicly derided him as a cad and a reviler of ladies. A duel was instantly arranged to take place next morning.

Mlle. Ladouner was in the theater with her uncle and witnessed the incident. Jules, whom she loved with her whole heart and soul, would be a corpse before another day had passed—that was the one thought that filled her brain, and for a time in her distress and agony she was almost demented. But by degrees she forced herself to be calm. At whatever cost her lover must be saved. Half an hour before midnight, when her mother had retired, she quietly stole out and made her way as furtively as a thief to Emaux's residence.

She was admitted, trembling and quivering, and her throat was so dry that she could scarcely speak. But at the sight of him stanting there, gay, careless and smiling, and yet to be in a few hours the butcher of her beloved, a tempest of passion shook her, and her tongue was loosed.

"Monsieur," she cried, turning on him, "you are infamous, a beast—nay, that is an insult to the poor beasts! I loathe you! You defile the earth! Pah, you smell of blood! Even a beast is merciful at times, but you—you"—

Emaux was utterly taken by surprise, but he still preserved an unruffled front.

"Mademoiselle," he said, "you are very good to come at this hour to pay me compliments. What have I done to deserve them?"

"Done!" she cried. "What are you about to do, hound? Jules Souvestre is my betrothed, and you insult and intend to murder him. It shall not be. I say! See—I will fight you in his stead. Get pistols, and we will stand on either side the room. I have insulted you. I insult you again. You are viler than any living creature. Come!"

A steely glitter came in his eyes, but he still smiled.

"I am truly sorry for you, mademoiselle. But that dog insulted me publicly, and—well, we fight at dawn."

"You shall fight me, ruffian!"

He shook his head, with an amused smile. "Mademoiselle's best weapon is her tongue, and that does not kill."

She looked at him with terrified eyes. "Do you mean to kill him, monsieur?"

"Yes," he said curtly.

She fell back into the chair with a strangled cry, horror in her eyes. For a moment she sat thus; then she flung herself on her knees at his feet.

"Monsieur," she cried, "have pity, have pity! I love him. Monsieur, you will kill both of us! Pity, pity!" she gasped.

"Rise, mademoiselle, I beg of you," he said. "You have just told me I have no pity."

"Have you no heart, monsieur?" she moaned.

"None when a man has publicly insulted me. And," he went on in a cynical tone, "who knows but I may do mademoiselle a favor. Men swear their vows as lovers, but they soon forget them. I may possibly save mademoiselle from a life of misery."

She flushed in momentary heat at that.

"You do not know him," she cried. "His love is as great as the sea. Can you exhaust the sea? Has your heart never known love, monsieur?"

He frowned. It recalled a time ten years before.

"Ah, I see it has!" she said quickly. "By that love, monsieur, have pity. You shall have my gratitude and prayers every day. As long as I live I shall remember you and ask mercy for you, even as you had mercy on me."

He did not answer, but gazed on her beautiful, pleading face. It was a girl a little younger than this one and quite as beautiful who had died ten years ago, and all good influences had died with her.

"You have overcome, mademoiselle," he said. "He shall live for your sake."

"You will spare him?"

"Be comforted, mademoiselle. I meant to kill him, but he shall live. We shall fight at dawn, but he shall not die. Come, mademoiselle; it is time you were gone. Shall I see you safely home?"

"No, no!" she cried as he led her to the door. "You will keep your oath, monsieur—you will not forget?"

"No, mademoiselle, and you will not forget your prayers?" he said, with a little laugh. "If you are right I need them. Good night and fear nothing."

But she did fear. When she reached home it seemed to her almost impossible to believe that a man with such a ruthless reputation would forbear to kill the man who had insulted him.

She went to bed, but she could not rest and soon got up again and toward 5 o'clock stole toward the spot where the duel would take place.

From behind a shrubbery, in what state of mind may be imagined, she saw both parties arrive on the field. She saw the formalities gone through, but she lost consciousness for a minute when they stood pistol in hand facing one another.

When she recovered and could raise her eyes the doctor was binding up the arm of her lover. Emaux's bullet had indicted a superficial flesh wound, and Emaux was apologizing to his friends. He had been drinking too much wine, he said.

Not till years afterward did Jules know what his wife had done for him. Never again was Emaux known to show a scintilla of pity in his terrible profession. Nevertheless one woman prayed for him till the day of her death.—Tit-Bits.

THE GRANGE FAIRS.

They Are Growing In Popularity Every Year.

Some Suggestions In the Line of Making These Fairs Most Profitable—The Young People Should Be Given Special Consideration.

[Special Correspondence.]

There is a great opportunity for subordinate granges to do a good work by creating an interest in grange fairs, which are becoming more popular each year—not fairs got up by many days of planning and of hard work, but fairs got up for a day or an evening in a very simple manner.

There have been both benefit and pleasure derived from studying the exhibits which were brought in and arranged as the members came to the regular meeting. A part of a day spent in arranging the exhibits of members living nearest the hall would of course make it possible to have them arranged more artistically, and the woman's work committees would be just the ones to have it in charge. Let each member label his exhibits with his name and the name of the variety of the fruits, flowers, grains and vegetables which he exhibits.

Do not try to give prizes to the older members, as it would take much time and trouble to judge the exhibits and award so many prizes, and much valuable discussion among the members concerning the different varieties of fruits and vegetables and the best methods of growing them would be lost, for no one would know to whom the different exhibits belonged if the names were left off so that they might be judged, but begin right now to interest your grange in offering first and second prizes to the children for a few things to be grown by them this year and exhibited at a grange fair next fall.

Have a special committee appointed to name some half dozen things to be grown by them, such as carrots, beets, popcorn, squash, sunflowers and asters, and to take charge of the purchasing of the premiums, which need not necessarily be expensive in order to please the children. Let them have a special table for their exhibits, and do all that you can to make it interesting for them, and you will be doing something toward helping to keep the boys and girls on the farm. Exhibits of fancy work and of old relics have been made very interesting in many granges where they have room to display them properly.

LIZZIE A. BREADS.

PLEASURE "EXERTIONS."

What the Grange Field Days Should and Should Not Be.

The "pleasure exertion" of Josiah Allen's wife has been mirrored often in the experiences of many a tired mortal on an ordinary day's picnicking. Another woman voiced the sentiments of many of these when she said: "I'd sooner ha' brewin' day and washin' day together than one of these pleasurin' days. There's no work so tirin' as danglin' about an' starin' an' not rightly knowin' what you're goin' to do next."

The grange rally, or field day, has been instituted as a modification of the old time picnic that had no aim beyond that suggested on the spur of the moment or unfailing its big dinner together in the woods. Under the auspices of a live grange the rally is full of purpose. It is a rallying in act, as in name, of all the forces that go to make a strong, vigorous rural life. It aims to promote joy and zeal in developing the active resources of the farms and farmers both.

The rally is thus more than a day of physical recreation and feasting. The mind is rested and fed also by means of as good a program as can be devised and secured. Facts of what organized effort through the grange is doing for farmers at large are presented to those who cannot be reached otherwise, and these same facts are often pressed home upon members in a more forceful way than ever before.

Inviting grounds with all conveniences for comfort possible and a good local program, not too long, to introduce and set off the main address are requisites of the best rally success.—Exchange.

The Grange For Peace.

At the late session of the national grange a commission on international arbitration, with Mortimer Whitehead as chairman, was appointed. its purpose is to co-operate with the numerous peace societies of the country and to carry on a propaganda for international arbitration. Mr. Whitehead has been for many years as active grange worker and was national lecturer during the early years of the grange movement.

When Newfound Lake grange of New Hampshire decided to build a new hall one lady assumed the obligation to secure a mile of pennies for the hall fund. In eighteen months she has secured 13,600 of them.

S. B. Brown, member of the finance committee of the Pennsylvania state grange, is dead as the result of an accident sustained while loading a carload of apples at his home.

HUSBAND MUST TELL ALL TO WIFE

That is He Must Tell Her Where He Has Been.

If a man stays away from his home for forty-eight hours and, returning, refuses to tell his wife exactly where he has been, she has good grounds for a divorce.

So the learned Judge Josiah Cohen has decided in the Pittsburg divorce court. Mrs. Rosina Pasetti testified tearfully that her husband remained from home two days and, more important, two nights, and would not tell her where he had been or what he had been doing.

"He would not tell you anything?" said Judge Cohen. "In that case it is not necessary for you, madam, to testify to what you learned of his conduct during his absence. It was his plain duty to acquit himself from your just and natural suspicions. Judgment for the plaintiff."

Many wives and good lawyers are discussing Judge Cohen's decision today. The wives particularly those of advanced ideas, such as suffragettes, say King Solomon was a babe in wisdom compared to Judge Cohen; that the sayings of Epictetus and others were infantile alongside Judge Cohen's dictum.

Good lawyers say that now all that is left to a married man who has been away for forty eight nours is to break his leg and be carried home. If he loves his wife truly he will be carried home with two broken legs. Then he will have two good excuses for his absence.

For, the lawyers say, under Judge Cohen's decision the returning husband must produce cumulative evidence explaining his absence. The old explanation that he has been sitting up with a sick friend will not do now.

Before her honor his wife he will have to produce a train of corroboratory witnesses—the porter of his club, his chauffeur, the policeman on his home beat, the prettiest woman whom his wife knows he knows, his janitor, even the sick friend with whom he did not sit up. If a pair of aces and several highballs could prove an alibi for him it would be so the much convincing.

Even the cuckoo clock cannot lie for him now. He will have to adopt the expedient of the man who was wise as Solomon, at least. As this man opened his front door the cuckoo in the hall clock cuckooed three times. The man instantly cuckooed nine times more, then entered his bedroom.

"Why, you're home early dearest," called his wife in her room.

Mix well, then add one cupful of sweet milk and one-third cupful of vinegar. Cook over hot water till it thickens.

Apple Pudding.

Pare and extract the cores, but leave whole, six apples. Pour over them a batter made of a pint of sifted flour, one gill of cream and three gills of milk, four beaten eggs and salt to taste. Take care to have the batter very smooth. Bake for one hour and serve with a good liquid sauce.

To Work Buttonholes In Lace.

Baste small squares of lawn under each place where you wish to make buttonholes, then cut and work the buttonholes. Cut away the surplus lawn around the buttonholes, leaving them firm and strong. Also put tiny squares underneath where the buttons are to be sewed.

To Wash Comfortables.

Wet the comfortables, then rub well with soap, hang on the line and turn the hose on them until the water runs clear. Let them hang until dry, then shake them out, and your comfortables will be light and fluffy like new ones.

An Embroidery Hint.

To prevent embroidery on sheer materials from puckering, baste tissue paper under the part to be embroidered. It will easily pull away when the work is finished.

Callous Skin on the Feet.

Apply the following preparation to the thickened surfaces: Boracic acid, one dram; beta-naphthol, twenty grains; lanolin, one ounce.

CARE OF ROADS.

After Good Ones Are Constructed They Should Be Cared For Regularly.

The good road era has begun in many states, and already the steam roller, the piles of crushed rock along the roadside and the digging out of the original roadway are familiar sights in many of the eastern states. The roads built are generally of approved macadam construction, which, completed, are perfect strips of white ribbon running through the green fields and hills of the rural sections.

These roads are perfectly built, and as soon as completed the farmers and other ratepayers contentedly sit back and exclaim, "Those roads are now good for a generation or more without trouble." This is a serious error and one being made in many states. That it is an error is borne out by the dust cloud raised by a passing car traveling at twenty miles per hour or perhaps faster.

Many fail to realize that whenever dust is raised a road is being destroyed. This is particularly the case on smooth macadam surfaces, where there is nothing to hold the dust on the road and where every cross wind blows off any loose material.

As soon as roads are built arrangements should be made to keep them in repair. With roads it is essentially "a stitch in time saves nine." Some dust preventive should be used immediately macadam roads are completed in order to prevent dust.

Oil, tar and many special preparations are now on the market, and the communities should be educated to look upon these additions as a legitimate part of the road maintenance. California has its oiled roads over which motoring is a pleasure to the motorist and not a dust path to the citizen who happens to be on the road the same day or who has the misfortune to reside along a well traveled highway.

Massachusetts has proved that road treatments are a success and more economical than continuous applications of water, and in England dust preventing is always considered a part of the road problem.

WOMEN BUILD ROADS.

Start Campaign For Better Highways In Virginia, and Interest Is Spreading.

Women of the country sections in many parts of the state of Virginia have taken up the work of road building. In Fairfax county as well as in other counties this has been reported.

Miss Edith Thompson of Fairfax county, a pretty young woman, accompanied by her young sister and her mother, recently reported that they had built three miles of good roads single handed while their men worked on the farm. Other women in the state, becoming interested in the campaign for better roads, are following this example.

Oiling a Kansas Road.

Some time ago a mile of country road south of Sedan, Kan., was oiled under the direction of the Sedan Commercial club. Fifty dollars was paid for this, and it was all raised by public subscription. The oil had to be hauled so far that the cost of hauling was almost equal to the price of the oil. Nevertheless the total cost of dragging the road and of soaking it in oil was only $50.

The road was oiled in May and is yet in almost as good condition as it was when finished. It is well rounded up, with good drainage, and the oil has made it solid, something like asphalt pavement. The road is the talk of the farmers. They will go a mile or two out of their way just to use it in driving into Sedan.

Tribute to Road Drag's Value.

Walter Shoemaker, rural free delivery carrier in Drumore, Lancaster county, Pa., wrote to the Lancaster (Pa.) Automobile club about the split log road drag as follows:

"I drive on a piece of road on which the drag has been used, and I can see that it is the best road I have on my entire mail route. I think the split log drag is just the thing to make good roads. Rural free delivery carriers want good roads just as well as the farmers want good roads and just as well as the automobile men want good roads, and we want to help the farmers all we can."

Add to the Value of Land.

Good roads add value to every acre. They practically bring the country and city together, so that the present crowded, unwholesome conditions may be avoided, and change the dreary country life by easy visits to the city.

SAVED HER LOVER

Jules Souvestre was soon to marry Mlle. Ladonner, one of the most beautiful and refined girls in Lyons. One night at a cafe chantant he rebuked Achille Emaux, a professional duelist, for interrupting a singer and publicly derided him as a cad and a reviler of ladies. A duel was instantly arranged to take place next morning.

Mlle. Ladonner was in the theater with her uncle and witnessed the incident. Jules, whom she loved with her whole heart and soul, would be a corpse before another day had passed—that was the one thought that filled her brain, and for a time in her distress and agony she was almost demented. But by degrees she forced herself to be calm. At whatever cost her lover must be saved. Half an hour before midnight, when her mother had retired, she quietly stole out and made her way as furtively as a thief to Emaux's residence.

She was admitted, trembling and quivering, and her throat was so dry that she could scarcely speak. But at the sight of him standing there, gay, careless and smiling, and yet to be in a few hours the butcher of her beloved, a tempest of passion shook her, and her tongue was loosed.

"Monsieur," she cried, turning on him, "you are infamous, a beast—nay, that is an insult to the poor beasts! I loathe you! You defile the earth! Pah, you smell of blood! Even a beast is merciful at times, but you—you"—

Emaux was utterly taken by surprise, but he still preserved an unruffled front.

"Mademoiselle," he said, "you are very good to come at this hour to pay me compliments. What have I done to deserve them?"

"Done!" she cried. "What are you about to do, hound? Jules Souvestre is my betrothed, and you insult and intend to murder him. It shall not be. I say! See—I will fight you in his stead. Get pistols, and we will stand on either side the room. I have insulted you. I insult you again. You are viler than any living creature. Come!"

A steely glitter came in his eyes, but he still smiled.

"I am truly sorry for you, mademoiselle. But that dog insulted me publicly, and—well, we fight at dawn."

"You shall fight me, ruffian!"

He shook his head, with an amused smile. "Mademoiselle's best weapon is her tongue, and that does not kill."

She looked at him with terrified eyes. "Do you mean to kill him, monsieur?"

"Yes," he said curtly.

She fell back into the chair with a strangled cry, horror in her eyes. For a moment she sat thus; then she flung herself on her knees at his feet.

"Monsieur," she cried, "have pity, have pity! I love him. Monsieur, you will kill both of us! Pity, pity!" she gasped.

"Rise, mademoiselle, I beg of you," he said. "You have just told me I have no pity."

"Have you no heart, monsieur?" she moaned.

"None when a man has publicly insulted me. And," he went on in a cynical tone, "who knows but I may do mademoiselle a favor. Men swear their vows as lovers, but they soon forget them. I may possibly save mademoiselle from a life of misery."

She flushed in momentary heat at that.

"You do not know him," she cried. "His love is as great as the sea. Can you exhaust the sea? Has your heart never known love, monsieur?"

He frowned. It recalled a time ten years before.

"Ah, I see it has!" she said quickly. "By that love, monsieur, have pity. You shall have my gratitude and prayers every day. As long as I live I shall remember you and ask mercy for you, even as you had mercy on me."

He did not answer, but gazed on her beautiful, pleading face. It was a girl a little younger than this one and quite as beautiful who had died ten years ago, and all good influences had died with her.

"You have overcome, mademoiselle," he said. "He shall live for your sake."

"You will spare him?"

"Be comforted, mademoiselle. I meant to kill him, but he shall live. We shall fight at dawn, but he shall not die. Come, mademoiselle; it is time you were gone. Shall I see you safely home?"

"No, no!" she cried as he led her to the door. "You will keep your oath, monsieur—you will not forget?"

"No, mademoiselle, and you will not forget your prayers?" he said, with a little laugh. "If you are right I need them. Good night and fear nothing."

But she did fear. When she reached home it seemed to her almost impossible to believe that a man with such a ruthless reputation would forbear to kill the man who had insulted him.

She went to bed, but she could not rest and soon got up again and toward 5 o'clock stole toward the spot where the duel would take place.

From behind a shrubbery, in what state of mind may be imagined, she saw both parties arrive on the field. She saw the formalities gone through, but she lost consciousness for a minute when they stood pistol in hand facing one another.

When she recovered and could raise her eyes the doctor was binding up the arm of her lover. Emaux's bullet had indicted a superficial flesh wound, and Emaux was apologizing to his friends. He had been drinking too much wine, he said.

Not till years afterward did Jules know what his wife had done for him. Never again was Emaux known to show a scintilla of pity in his terrible profession. Nevertheless one woman prayed for him till the day of her death.—Tit-Bits.

THE GRANGE FAIRS.

They Are Growing In Popularity Every Year.

Some Suggestions In the Line of Making These Fairs Most Profitable—The Young People Should Be Given Special Consideration.

[Special Correspondence.]

There is a great opportunity for subordinate granges to do a good work by creating an interest in grange fairs, which are becoming more popular each year—not fairs got up by many days of planning and of hard work, but fairs got up for a day or an evening in a very simple manner.

There have been both benefit and pleasure derived from studying the exhibits which were brought in and arranged as the members came to the regular meeting. A part of a day spent in arranging the exhibits of members living nearest the hall would of course make it possible to have them arranged more artistically, and the woman's work committees would be just the ones to have it in charge. Let each member label his exhibits with his name and the name of the variety of the fruits, flowers, grains and vegetables which he exhibits.

Do not try to give prizes to the older members, as it would take much time and trouble to judge the exhibits and award so many prizes, and much valuable discussion among the members concerning the different varieties of fruits and vegetables and the best methods of growing them would be lost, for no one would know to whom the different exhibits belonged if the names were left off so that they might be judged, but begin right now to interest your grange in offering first and second prizes to the children for a few things to be grown by them this year and exhibited at a grange fair next fall.

Have a special committee appointed to name some half dozen things to be grown by them, such as carrots, beets, popcorn, squash, sunflowers and asters, and to take charge of the purchasing of the premiums, which need not necessarily be expensive in order to please the children. Let them have a special table for their exhibits, and do all that you can to make it interesting for them, and you will be doing something toward helping to keep the boys and girls on the farm. Exhibits of fancy work and of old relics have been made very interesting in many granges where they have room to display them properly.

LIZZIE A. BREADS.

PLEASURE "EXERTIONS."

What the Grange Field Days Should and Should Not Be.

The "pleasure exertion" of Josiah Allen's wife has been mirrored often in the experiences of many a tired mortal on an ordinary day's picnicking. Another woman voiced the sentiments of many of these when she said: "I'd sooner ha' brewin' day and washin' day together than one of these pleasurin' days. There's no work so tirin' as danglin' about an' starin' an' not rightly knowin' what you're goin' to do next."

The grange rally, or field day, has been instituted as a modification of the old time picnic that had no aim beyond that suggested on the spur of the moment or unfailing its big dinner together in the woods. Under the auspices of a live grange the rally is full of purpose. It is a rallying in act, as in name, of all the forces that go to make a strong, vigorous rural life. It aims to promote joy and zeal in developing the active resources of the farms and farmers both.

The rally is thus more than a day of physical recreation and feasting. The mind is rested and fed also by means of as good a program as can be devised and secured. Facts of what organized effort through the grange is doing for farmers at large are presented to those who cannot be reached otherwise, and these same facts are often pressed home upon members in a more forceful way than ever before.

Inviting grounds with all conveniences for comfort possible and a good local program, not too long, to introduce and set off the main address are requisites of the best rally success.—Exchange.

The Grange For Peace.

At the late session of the national grange a commission on international arbitration, with Mortimer Whitehead as chairman, was appointed. Its purpose is to co-operate with the numerous peace societies of the country and to carry on a propaganda for international arbitration. Mr. Whitehead has been for many years as active grange worker and was national lecturer during the early years of the grange movement.

When Newfound Lake grange of New Hampshire decided to build a new hall one lady assumed the obligation to secure a mile of pennies for the hall fund. In eighteen months she has secured 13,000 of them.

S. B. Brown, member of the finance committee of the Pennsylvania state grange, is dead as the result of an accident sustained while loading a carload of apples at his home.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson V.—First Quarter, For Jan. 30, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. v, 17-26, 38-48—Memory Verse, 44—Golden Text, Matt. v, 48—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

There are some prominent facts which we must keep in mind in all Bible study—the Bible is the history of salvation; salvation is of the Lord; salvation is of the Jews; known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world, He worketh all things after the counsel of His own will, and the eternal purpose which He has purposed in Christ Jesus is that all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God and the whole earth be filled with His glory. To that end He is steadily working, and in all the different parts of this book, which is forever settled in heaven, we have some phase of the working out of this eternal purpose. The whole Bible story points onward to a time when "a king shall reign in righteousness, * * * and the work of righteousness shall be peace" (Isa. xxxii, 1, 17). Our blessed Lord was always talking about this kingdom and giving samples of the power that would be manifest even in the bodies of His redeemed when the kingdom shall have come. Between His resurrection and ascension during those forty days He spake of things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

In this discourse, spoken to His disciples probably in the hearing of the multitude, He describes the righteousness which will be fully manifest on earth when the kingdom comes, a righteousness of the Ten Commandments, which He here teaches us refers not only to outward acts, but to the thoughts and intents of the heart. He alone of all who have ever lived on earth manifested the righteousness of the law perfectly in His life. He could truly say, "I delight to do Thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart" (Ps. xl, 8).

Having no sin of His own, for He was without sin, He bare our sins in His own body on the tree and became the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth (Rom. x, 4; II Cor. v, 21). Anything less than the righteousness which was manifest in the Lord Jesus Christ cannot stand before God, and as no one is able perfectly to keep God's holy law it is written, "By the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." The law shuts our mouths concerning our own righteousness and points us to Christ that we may receive Him as the righteousness of God most graciously provided for every sinner (Rom. iii, 19-24; Gal. ii, 16; iii, 24). Yet there are many in so called Christian lands, members of churches, who, being ignorant of God's righteousness, are ever going about to establish their own righteousness (Rom. x, 3). None of those can in any case enter into the kingdom of heaven (verse 20). According to James ii, 10, breaking one command breaks them all, for the law is one. From Rom. vii, 7, we infer that Paul thought he had kept the Ten Commandments until in the light of the tenth he saw himself a sinner and guilty. Love is the fulfilling of the law (Rom. xiii, 10), and as we can only manifest our love to God by our love to our fellows, therefore with the Lord Jesus Christ as our only example we must remember His words in John xv, 12, "Love one another as I have loved you." Also in I John iv, 11, "Beloved, if God so loved us we ought also to love one another." When the Lord Jesus lives in us fully and His spirit has full control of us we will manifest even here in this age the love that is kind to those who are unthankful and evil, who curse and hate and persecute and despitefully use us. Any one can love those who love them, but to love one's enemies is not possible to the natural man. As a poor Indian once said, "This Indian can't do it; God must make a new Indian." When we have seen our guilt and that all our righteousnesses are only filthy rags and have truly received the Lord Jesus Christ, then we are before God in Christ, and He is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption (I Cor. i, 30.) We are justified freely by His grace, justified by faith, justified by His blood, and there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, but it is all to the end that the righteousness of the law may be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

The light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ having shined in our hearts, we must let the light shine through us to His glory that others may receive Him too. Verses 44, 45, do not teach us that by loving our enemies we become children of God; but, having become His children by receiving Jesus Christ (John i, 12), we are manifestly such in the eyes of others only when we act as such. We are not only sanctified, but perfected forever by the one great sacrifice of the Lord Jesus (Heb. x, 10, 14), and now we are to walk not as others who are still in the world, but ever aiming at a more perfect manifestation to others of the love of God to us, for if we love one another God dwelleth in us, and His love is perfected in us and He is seen in us (I John iv, 12). It is only as we understand the kingdom, which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, that we can walk worthy of it (Rom. xiv, 17; I Thess. ii, 12) and manifest in our lives the life of Him who when He was here in His humiliation revealed the Father. Dwelling in Him we dwell in love, and His love will constrain us.

CENTER OF THE EARTH.

The Zuni Indians Marked the Spot With a Crude Shrine.

Why all this fuss and controversy as to whether it was Cook or Peary or either of them or both that discovered the north pole? Surely the center of the earth is as important as either extremity, and the Zuni Indians have the center safely corralled and appropriately marked upon their reservation. They feel quite sure of it, and that ought to be sufficient.

In the Zuni cosmogony the earth is conceived of as flat and shaped like a pancake. Being a chosen people of the gods, they were commanded early in their tribal career to go to the exact center of the world and there build their homes, and one of the most interesting legends of the people relates the story of their wanderings in search of the middle place and tells how they knew it when they reached it. It is about 200 yards south of their village in western New Mexico, thirty-five miles south of Gallup, on the Santa Fe route. It is marked by a crude shrine, built like a bake oven, out of flat stones. Two large removable flagstones close the entrance, which faces the rising sun.

On the top are a number of concretionary formations, known to the Indians as thunder stones. In the interior are large numbers of feather tufted prayer sticks and several earthenware vessels filled with sacred meal. Numerous ceremonial dances, in the nature of rainmaking rites, are performed around this holy place.—Kansas City Star.

The Birthplace of Napoleon.

There is some talk of establishing a small museum in the house at Ajaccio where Napoleon I. was born. A good deal of attention has been given, it appears, to it by visitors to Corsica of late. The house, according to a French paper, is a little old world Italian villa of yellowish plaster work and windows with shutters which are nearly always closed up. It has just the same outward appearance as its neighbors in the narrow street in which it is situated. A small garden, with palms, cactus and other semi-tropical vegetation, separates the house from the roadway. There is not much to single out the historic building as having any special interest, unless it is a marble slab over the doorway with an inscription, "Here was born, the 15th of August, 1769, the founder of the imperial dynasty."—Westminster Gazette.

They Liked New York.

Now that the British squadron has returned from participation in the Hudson-Fulton celebration, it is ascertained that more than 300 deserters were left behind in New York. This item, coupled with the very heavy entertaining allowance, will make Sir Edward Seymour's ceremonial trip a costly little business. A fully trained bluejacket costs the state on an average about £120. The action of the United States authorities in refusing to deliver up deserters from foreign warships in their ports may be "constitutional," but it is assuredly not calculated to encourage friendly visits. The moral is when next we send a friendly expedition across the Atlantic to rake together that element which can be best spared from our navy and not to stint shore leave.—London Truth.

The Lion of Lucerne.

The Lion of Lucerne, the famous monument to Swiss valor, which is one of the world's artistic triumphs, is said to be in danger of disintegration through the action of water upon the rock. The noble monument is an object of national pride in Switzerland, and every effort will be made to protect and preserve it. It commemorates the heroism of the Swiss guards who were killed while defending the French royal family during the attack on the Tuileries in 1792 and was executed in 1821. The effigy of the dying lion, whose paw still guards the fleur-de-lis escutcheon, is twenty-eight feet in length and eighteen feet in height. Few visitors to Switzerland miss this monument, which is carved in a great wall of rock, and every beholder is awed by its simple majesty.—Youth's Companion.

Musical Novelties.

One of the comic papers of Berlin prints a cartoon under the caption, "An Orchestra of the Future," which includes, besides the conventional instruments, bells of all kinds, a pavement pounder, steam whistles, grindstones, a "thunder machine," a cannon, a dog, a cat and near the group of drums children of various ages waiting to be spanked. The cat is made to yowl by a member of the orchestra, who brings the animal's tail in unpleasant contact with a clothes wringer, and the dog to bark by having his caudal extremity stepped upon. "All this may be expected," is said in explanation, "when we see the novelties introduced by the modern musicians."

Jealous of His Title.

The following letter has been sent out in circular form by an English baronet who feels it incongruous that he should be addressed in the same way as the unanointed:

"There is a strong feeling among baronets that the expression 'Dear Sir' being constantly used in commencing a letter nowadays to their servants is therefore not only incongruous, but also discourteous when applied to members of this ancient and hereditary degree. I will therefore ask you in future to kindly accord me my title and commence your letters to me 'Sir Baronet' instead of 'Dear Sir.'"

THE SPORTING WORLD

Miller, Penn's Star Quarter.

Captain Miller of the Pennsylvania eleven appears to be one of those players who rise to the occasion. The more important the game the more likely he is to do his best work. In games of lesser moment his work has not been such as to create confidence in his ability for the important battles, yet twice in big games he has distinguished himself by his fine all around playing. He flashed out a star in the Cornell game in 1908. This year he did little until the Carlisle game. Not only did he shine against the red men by his dashing play in a broken field, but he handled the team ably at quarterback.

CAPTAIN MILLER OF PENNSYLVANIA.

New York's Carnival of Sport.

With the last of the "big four" gridiron struggles a thing of the past, indoor sporting events will now have the call for the balance of the winter, and, as usual, the famous Madison Square Garden amphitheater will be the scene of action for all of the most prominent events held in New York city. First and foremost comes the annual international six day bicycle race, starting Dec. 5. In the seventeenth revival of this world famed week long grind undoubtedly the fastest collection of cycling stars ever gathered together will face the starter.

Dec. 4, the night preceding the start of the long race, a series of sprint races will be held in which the short distance and motor paced championships of the world will be decided.

Three nights previous to this, Dec. 1, James J. Jeffries and his collection of athletic stars, which includes Frank Gotch, the world's champion wrestler, will hold the stage in the same arena. Jeffries and his sparring partner, Sam Berger, will box, and the big fellow will also put on the gloves with Jack McCormick. After this he will take on Frank Gotch in a bout on the mat, and Gotch will also stand ready to meet all comers and agree to forfeit $1,000 to any man he cannot down in fifteen minutes' time.

Changes In Basketball Rules.

The committee of six appointed to tinker the basketball rules has finished its work. Under the new rules the umpire is supposed to watch the other eight men, while the referee sees that the two men fighting over the ball do not commit a foul.

The dribbling rule is so changed that a player who is dribbling the ball and stops must throw to some other player or try for goal. If he wishes to continue dribbling the ball after the pause he must keep the ball bouncing up and down.

A third player may reach under two contesting for the ball and take it away without committing a foul, provided he does not touch either of the players trying to get the ball.

Other changes are as follows: The player who touches the side lines is outside; glass backgrounds for the baskets are legalized; the score keepers must compare their scores after each basket.

Yell Leader May Get "W."

In order to stimulate interest in organized rooting and encourage more students to get out and try for the position of chief yell master the athletic board of the University of Wisconsin will be asked at its next meeting to award a "W" to the chief cheer leader who shall serve at all the big football games during a season.

Friends of the measure argue that the cheer leader does just as much work as the men on the team and should receive a reward for his services just as the players do.

Members of athletic teams who have been interviewed on the proposed innovation do not take kindly to it, saying the promiscuous granting of the "W" will cheapen it.

Order of Publication.

Alice Campbell and Robert Campbell, her husband, and Effie Guard, infant, who sues by her next friend, Dorsey Guard, vs. William Guard, Catharine Hatfield and George T. Hatfield, her husband, and Annie Humberson and Frank Humberson, her husband.

No. 1637 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate in Garrett county, Maryland, belonging to the parties to this cause.

The bill states that on the 19th day of January, 1895, Jeremiah Guard and wife executed and delivered to Delilah Guard, Annie Humberson and Frank Humberson, her husband, Alice Campbell and Robert Campbell, her husband, Effie Guard, and William Guard and Catharine Guard, his wife, a deed for one hundred acres of land, situate in Garrett county, which deed recited and set forth the contribution of each of said grantees to the purchase money for said farm, as appears by reference to said deed, a certified copy of which, recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 28, folio 125, etc., is filed with the bill as part thereof; that Newton Guard, mentioned in said deed, was the father of the said Alice Campbell, Annie Humberson, William Guard and Effie Guard, and had departed this life intestate prior to the execution of said deed, and that the said Delilah Guard was the widow of the said Newton Guard, and the mother of said grantees of Jeremiah Guard, and has since departed this life intestate leaving the said Alice Campbell, Annie Humberson, William Guard and Effie Guard as her only children and heirs at law; that the said Alice Campbell, Robert Campbell, Annie Humberson, Frank Humberson, and Effie Guard, who sues by her next friend, Dorsey Guard, are all residents of Garrett county, Maryland; that after the execution and delivery of the aforesaid deed, William Guard and Catharine Guard, his wife, were divorced, a vinculo matrimonii, in the State of Pennsylvania, where they were then residing, and thereafter, the said Catharine Guard intermarried with the said George T. Hatfield, who now resides in the State of Illinois, the said William Guard being a resident of the State of Pennsylvania; that said real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interest therein, and that in order to make division of said interests, it will be necessary to sell said real estate and divide the proceeds thereof amongst the parties according to their several interests; the bill then prays for a decree directing a sale of said real estate, and that the proceeds be divided among the parties to this cause, according to their respective rights and interests, and for general relief.

It is thereupon, this 28th day of December, 1909, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 26th day of January, 1910, give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 15th day of February next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

Andrew J. Alexander vs. Elmer Deal, J. F. Northcraft and Lizzie Northcraft, his wife.

No. 1643 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland

The object of this bill of complaint is to set aside a deed from J. F. Northcraft to his wife, Lizzie Northcraft, dated October 19th A. D., 1909, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 59, folio 261 &c., one of the Land Records of said Garrett County, and to subject the real estate therein described to the payment of a debt due by the said J. F. Northcraft to the said Andrew J. Alexander.

The bill alleges that prior to the time said deed was executed, the said Northcraft and Deal were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of Fifty dollars, with interest from May, 1906, and that the said Elmer Deal is a non-resident of the State of Maryland, and is also insolvent.

The Bill further alleges that said deed from J. F. Northcraft to his said wife, was made in prejudice to the rights of his subsisting creditors, and was not made for a bona fide consideration, and for a pretended and simulated consideration, and that it was made for the purpose and intent to hinder, delay and defraud the creditors of the said J. F. Northcraft, and especially with the intent to hinder, delay and defraud the plaintiff in the collection of his said debt.

The prayer of this Bill is, that the said deed may be annulled, vacated and set aside, and that said property may be decreed to be sold and subjected to the payment of the plaintiff's claim.

The Bill contains the further prayer for process, and for an order of publication against said Elder Deal.

It is thereupon this 26th day of January, 1910, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff by causing a copy of the order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 25th day of February, 1910, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this Bill warning him to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor on or before the 14th day of March, next, to show cause, if any he has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

VOLUME 33. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1910. NUMBER 49

COMES HIGH TO HAVE LEGISLATORS GATHER

Two Bills Passed at Cost of Over Thirty-Five Thousand Dollars.

Up to last Saturday twenty-four days had passed since the Legislature assembled in Annapolis on January 5th and heard the Governor's message. The net results of its labors were two bills —one appropriating $20,000 for the Port Deposit disaster and the other a road bill for Garrett county. The cost to the taxpayers of appropriating $20,000 to the sufferers at Port Deposit and in passing the Garrett county road bill has been $35,760.

The Legislature's account with the people of the State, who pay the freight, may be itemized in this way:

House members.....	101
House employes.....	98
Senate members.....	21
Senate employes.....	72
Total.....	298
Cost per day at $5.....	$1,490
Total cost for 24 days...	$35,760

Other things have, of course, been done. Bills have been introduced and referred to committees after the force of clerks have engrossed them. These bills number possibly 150. It is, however, the net results for which the people are paying, and these results can be estimated by the bills passed.

While the net results have been rather small, so far as the people are concerned, the politicians have done something for themselves. They have, for instance, put 170 men on the payrolls. These men are put on the rolls as a favor to the members. They are expected to appreciate the favor and to stand by the men who helped them to help their friends. Buttressed with this support, the members are expected to line up to do up the Governor, if he should invite a doing up, and help out generally in doing the things that add to the glory and the power of the men with political ambitions. These themes are generally referred to as "organizing the House" and "organizing the Senate." The House and Senate are regarded as well organized.

Painful Accident.

Mr. William Durst, a young man who is employed at Bond, Md., met with a very painful accident on Tnursday of last week. In some manner while at work he struck his foot with an ax cutting an ugly gash in it. Dr. T. L. Wilson, of Piedmont, rendered surgical aid and upon examination it was found necessary to amputate one toe. The young man is reported to be doing nicely at this time.

FRIENDSVILLE REMAINS DRY; THE VOTE 15 TO 57

Drys Carry the Day Overwhelmingly in the City on the Yough.

On Tuesday the annual municipal election at Friendsville was held when the voters of that place cast an overwhelming vote against the proposition to make the town wet.

Under the provisions of the charter the question of license or no license may be submitted to a vote every year, the election on Tuesday resulting the same as that of one and two years ago when the voters cast their ballots against the proposition after two years of extreme aridity. The town will remain arid for another year at least, and if one is to judge by reports coming from Friendsville yesterday it will be in a state of perpetual dryness for all time to come, for the people have spoken in no uncertain tone, the vote on Tuesday being 15 for license and 57 against license.

Outside influences were at work in Friendsville to carry the day for license but the interference of these non-voters on a question vitally affecting the welfare of its citizens was rebuked by the people to such an extent that it will be a long time before the oratory and influence imported from Oakland to Friendsville to control municipal elections is again invoked.

There were two municipal tickets in the field composed of candidates for mayor and members of council, the winning ticket being composed as follows:

For Mayor, John T. Geary; for Councilmen, William F. East, Alpheus Welch and James W. Friend.

Their opponents were: For Mayor, William H. H. Friend; for Councilmen, B. F. Friend, Clinton Ringer and Charles Glover.

The vote in detail was as follows:

For Mayor: John T. Geary, 47; William H. H. Friend, 18.

For Councilmen: William F. East, 47; Alpheus Welch, 54; James W. Friend, 51; B. F. Friend, 24; Clinton Ringer, 17; Charler Glover, 28.

B. & O. Pays Big Taxes.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad pays more taxes to the state of West Virginia than any other similar corporation. Last year this road paid $581,135.80. The next largest contributors to the state exchequer are the Chesapeake & Ohio, $277,409.05; Norfolk & Western Railway Company, $276,163.08; Eureka Pipe Line, $124,679.24, and hope Natural Gas Co., $86,538,26. The public service corporations will this year pay $2,050,143.98 to the state, an increase of $106,082.32 over last year.

ONE MAN KILLED AND TWO SERIOUSLY INJURED

By Being Run Down by Train No. 55 Tuesday Afternoon Near Oakland.

Tuesday afternoon at a point two and a half miles west of Oakland, train No. 55, which passes through here at 3:33 o'clock, ran down three of a total of six section hands engaged in repairing the track, one of whom, Columbus Lafayette McRobie, was killed instantly, and two others, George McRobie, son of the dead man, and Ellis C. Taylor, were seriously injured, the former probably fatally.

Train 55 was running on the eastbound track owing to the breakdown of a freight engine at the station here and the blocking of the westbound track as a consequence, the passenger train having been shifted to the opposite track at Mouniain Lake Park with orders to occupy that track as far west as Hutton. The trackmen, being located so far from a telegraph station, had no notice that the train would run on the wrong track and they were caught unawares while performing their duties in making necessary repairs to the eastbound track.

According to a statement made by one of the men train 55 did not sound an alarm and the men knew nothing of its close proximity until it was almost upon them when one of the trackmen happened to look up and saw the engine very close. He jumped and at the same time gave a shout of warning to his companions, two of whom escaped without injury.

Mr. McRobie was struck full in the head and was thrown a distance of more than thirty feet, his death being instantaneous.

His son, George, was struck in the small of the back and received a bad wound in the back of his head. Since his injury he has been unconscious.

Mr. Taylor's right leg was broken below the knee, his left leg badly strained and he also received two cuts on his head.

The dead man as well as the injured ones were picked up by the train and taken west to Terra Alta where the remains of the deceased were prepared for burial and sent to his home in Oakland yesterday morning. His age was past fifty-three years. The funeral will occur tomorrow with interment near Deer Park.

The two injured men were taken on to Fairmont and placed in the Miners' Hospital where they are receiving treatment. Jack McRobie, brother of one of the injured men returned from Fairmont yesterday afternoon and stated this morning that his brother had not spoken since he was hurt and that his chanches for recovery were slight. Mr. Taylor is doing extremely well and unless something unforseen occurs he will recover. The latter was recently married to Miss Daisy Glaze, a young woman of Oakland, while the former is unmarried.

Yesterday afrernoon an inquest was held by Coroner E. I. West for the purpose of fixing the responsibility for the death of Mr. McRobie. The jury viewed the remains and after due deliberations brought in a verdict that the deceased came to his death by the "negligence of the B. & O. R. R. Company through their engineer on train No. 55 on said date by not giving proper warning to said employe who was then and there working on said eastbound track."

Different from Moses' Time.

The Norwalk (O.) Evening Herald has an idea that things have changed a good deal since the days of that great but meek man Moses. It quotes Dean Walter Williams of the school of journalism at the University of Missouri as saying:

"Moses was the first great editor. He wrote more graphically than today's newspaper would dare."

"Maybe he was," replies the Herald. "But at that we will just venture the guess that if the late Moses were in the newspaper business today he would have his troubles. Irate relatives of Adam and of Noah and of Abraham would hotfoot it down to where he had his office and demand instant satisfaction. The people of Sodom would order their paper stopped to a man and refuse to pay up their back subscriptions. And lawyers' fees, defending him from libel suits, would eat up his substance. Furthermore, on top of all this, we'll bet he would find himself in trouble with the postoffice authorities before the end of the first week."

Messrs. John T. and William Stever, of District No. 8, were in the city last Saturday when the former made a business visit to this office.

SEN. SMITH TO GO TO ANNAPOLIS FOR PEACE CONFAB

Will Endeavor To Bring Order Out Of Political Chaos.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Feb. 1.—One more effort is to be made by the Democratic leaders to get together. Some time this week Federal Senator Smith will drop over from Washington to meet the Democratic members of the State Senate and the leaders among the Democrats in the House to talk the situation over with them. He will confer with Governor Crothers, Col. Buchanan Schley, President Gorman of the State Senate and other of prominence in party counsels before he takes up the situation with the legislators as a whole.

An effort will be made to bring order out of the chaos. Party pledges will be taken up by Senator Smith. He has, it is said, come to the conclusion that he and his friends will suffer most by the failure to redeem the promises. It may be that he will not agree that the pledges should be kept just as Governor Crothers think they ought to be kept. He is convinced, however, that the charge of the party ignoring its promises should be forestalled by some action. He is expected to get behind the project for control of public-service corporations by means of a commission, and to demand the submission of an amendment giving Baltimore city greater representation in the Legislature.

Governor Crothers' proposition for a direct primary bill seems to be the measure that promises to create discord, if there is to be discord. Federal Senator Smith and President Gorman do not regard this proposition with favor. It may be, however, that they will become reconciled to the proposed measure.

It is no longer a secret that the men in politics who are none too kindly disposed to Senator Smith's leadership are looking for an opportunity to hit with a view of wrestling party management from his hand if he offers a fair opportunity. The Legislature's record was expected to offer the chance.

The Republican members of the Senate had an extended conference this morning for the purpose of mapping out plans for a more effective opposition in the Senate. It was expected that their deliberations would result in some tactical move on the floor of the Senate today, but that body met and adjourned without any such move materializing.

The increased activity of the Republicans is due largely to the somewhat ridiculous position in which they were placed last week, when, through lack of acuteness, they supported two bills containing sharp knocks at certain Republican policies. This got on the nerves of the Republican Senators, and they decided to be more on the alert hereafter. One result of their efforts was that when the Legislature adjourned last week, Senator Zihlman of Allegany, remained in Annapolis, and has been here ever since, reading through the various printed bills in the hope of finding more "snakes" that might be concealed therein.

After the meeting this morning the various Republican Senators stated that they had simply discussed general lines of action without reaching definite conclusions regarding any particular men or measures. They tentatively agreed to support the pure-food bill, it is said, in the absence of any further developments in connection with it, but took no final action even upon that.

That some dissatisfaction has been expressed with Senator Sproesser of Baltimore city, as Republican floor leader is known. There are two counts to the indictment against him—first, that he allowed those bills with "snakes" in them to go through with out protest; and, second, that he arranged for the appointment of a clerk to the Republican Senators without consulting his colleagues in the Senate. That appointee was "Bill" Stewart, the well-known Republican politician of Baltimore city. Some unfavorable comment has been caused by this appointment on the ground that it indicated an intention of the Republican machine politicians to stand by the Democratic machine politicians.

State-wide suffrage for the women of Maryland is provided in a bill which Delegate Pairo sent this morning to the House engrossing-room. The bill will be introduced in the House in a few days.

The bill provides that any person, male or female, who has resided in the State one year, and in his or her election district for six months preceding an election, may vote for Representatives in Congress, Senators, Delegates, etc. It is provided that this bill shall be submitted to the people as a Constitutional amendment at the next election of members of the Legislature. The bill was sent to Mr. Pairo by the Woman Suffrage Association of Maryland, which has no interest in the bill giving local suffrage for women in Baltimore.

Republican Floor Leader Pairo has sent to the House engrossing-room a bill to amend the election law of the State in regard to the printing of ballots. The bill, which will be introduced in a day or two, provides that the Supervisors of Elections shall hold open meetings to arrange the names on the ballots. It also provides that the boxes on the ballots for the cross marks shall not be placed more than four inches away from the longest name on the ballot. In the counties where the law does not provide for the alphabetical arrangement of names, the bill provides that the names shall take position by lots drawn by the Supervisor.

The bill further provides that the voter may take with him to the polling place any memorandum other than a fac-simile of the ballot. The voter may also insert on his ballot any name not on the ballot.

PLANS FOR YOUGH RIVER DAM MATURING

Garrett County Land Included in 100.000 Acre Merger.

The purchase and merging of 100,000 acres of coal land and coal properties between Confluence, Pa.. and Kendall, Md., and the building of a dam on the Youghiogheny river above Kendall sufficient to generate 250,000-horse power, are features of a gigantic scheme disclosed Friday.

For months engineers and draughtsmen have been busy on secret plans. At the same time real estate men and civil engineers have been active in the field between Confluence and Kendall. Friday it became known that a merger and power development scheme is well under way and that Clarkson & Co., bankers, of New York, are back of it. Pittsburg men also are interested.

The New York firm has agreed to underwrite and take over the whole issue of bonds, covering the purchase of more than 100,000 acres of coal land and properties along the Yough above Connellsville. This will include the Huff company mines, holdings and railroads, the Kutz estate, its holdings and options, all the mineral rights and mines of the Whites creek branch of A. W. Cook & Co., the Listonburg Coal Company, Elk Lick Coal Company, Somerset Fuel Company and the Smith, Myers & Co. mines at Anspatch.

It is the intention to transmit electricity over a radius of 50 miles for manufacturing industries. In the general scheme is the extension of the Ursina & North Fork railroad into Somerset county, opening up a virgin territory rich in mineral resources. Another branch will be extended up Whites creek and another one up the Yough valley to tap the coal fields being taken over.

Connection with the Baltimore & Ohio, with the proposed connecting link between the Pittsbnrgh & Lake Erie at Connellsville and the Western Maryland at Cumberland, will place the new concern in an advantageous position. The third-rail system will likely be used on the new roads.

GARRETT COUNTY'S NEWEST ROAD LAW

First Bill Passed by Legislature and Made Into Law.

The first bill passed by the present Legislature was Senator Speicher's road law which was signed last Friday evening by Governor Crothers which made it into a law. Senator Speicher has the pen used by the Governor in signing the bill which he treasures very highly.

The law is as follows and is published in advance of other legislation by THE REPUBLICAN in order to acquaint its readers with its provisions:

"AN ACT to repeal Sections 200, 201, 202, 206B and 206G, and to repeal and re-enact with amendments Sections 203, 204, 206 and 206F of Article 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws, title 'Garrett County,' subtitle, 'Roads,' as said sections were enacted by Chapter 391 of the Acts of 1908.

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Sections 200, 201, 202, 205, 206B and 206G of Article 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws, title, 'Garrett County,' subtitle, 'Roads,' as said sections were enacted by Chapter 391 of the Acts of 1908, be and the same is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That Sections 203, 204, 206 and 206F be and the same are hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments so as to read as follows:

"203. On January of each year the Board of County Commissioners shall appoint one or more road supervisors for each of the Election Districts of the county. They shall fix the per diem of supervisors, which shall not be less than two dollars, and determine the amount of the bond which shall be required. They shall also fix the rate per diem of hired labor, teams with drivers, etc.

"204. All road supervisors appointed by the Commissioners shall qualify by taking the oath of office and giving bond to the County Commissioners as soon as may be after their appointment. They shall have charge of the working and repair of all roads under their supervision and may contract, build or repair any culvert or bridge that shall not exceed in cost the sum of twenty dollars; they may hire and pay for out of funds in their hands such men and teams as shall be necessary for the proper working of their roads. Each of the supervisors shall do or cause to be done all the regular repairs upon the roads and bridges under such contract as shall be made between the County Commissioners and such supervisors on or before the first day of July following his appointment, and shall then render an itemized statement under oath to the Board of County Commissioners setting forth the number of men and teams employed with the number of days for each and the amount paid to each (his own account being given seperately), the total amount received by him or placed to his credit and the amount expended. Each of the supervisors shall be required to set aside ten per cent. of all moneys coming into their hands for general road repair; this money so set aside shall be used only for the unforeseen and accidental repairs of roads or bridges and for draining of roads, opening of breakers and culverts after the roads have been worked in the spring season.

"On or before January 1st, following the appointment of supervisors, a final report shall be made to the Board of County Commissioners, and balance on hand, if any there be, shall be refunded and the bond released.

"205. The Board of County Commissioners shall annually levy upon the taxable basis of the county such an amount as they may deem necessary for the construction, maintenance and repairs of roads and bridges.

"206F. In case the vote, in accordance with the preceding Section 206E, shall be 'for proposition of levy for roads,' then the Board of County Commissioners shall make the extra levy for roads or bridges upon the total taxable basis of the district so voting, and shall place the funds, when collected, in the hands of the County Treasurer to the credit of the road supervisors of that district, to be worked out by them under direction of the County Commissioners. But if the vote be 'against proposition of levy for roads,' then the County Commissioner shall not levy an extra amount for roads in that district.

"SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

SPRINGTIME A LA CARTE.

Fond Hearts United Through a Dish of Dandelion Greens.

By O. HENRY.

[Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.]

It was a day in March.

Never, never begin a story this way when you write one. No opening could possibly be worse. It is unimaginative, flat, dry and likely to consist of mere wind. But in this instance it is allowable, for the following paragraph, which should have inaugurated the narrative, is too wildly extravagant and preposterous to be flaunted in the face of the reader without preparation.

Sarah was crying over her bill of fare.

Think of a New York girl shedding tears on the menu card!

To account for this you will be allowed to guess that the lobsters were all out, or that she had sworn ice cream off during Lent, or that she had ordered onions, or that she had just come from a Hackett matinee. And then, all these theories being wrong, you will please let the story proceed.

The gentleman who announced that the world was an oyster which he with his sword would open made a larger hit than he deserved. It is not difficult to open an oyster with a sword. But did you ever notice any one try to open the terrestrial bivalve with a typewriter? Like to wait for a dozen raw opened that way?

Sarah had managed to pry apart the shells with her unhandy weapon far enough to nibble a wee bit at the cold and clammy world within. She knew no more shorthand than if she had been a graduate in stenography just let slip upon the world by a business college. So, not being able to stenog, she could not enter that bright galaxy of office talent. She was a free lance typewriter and canvassed for odd jobs of copying.

The most brilliant and crowning feat of Sarah's battle with the world was the deal she made with Schulenberg's home restaurant. The restaurant was next door to the old red brick in which she hall roomed. One evening after dining at Schulenberg's forty cent five course table d'hote (served as fast as you throw the five baseballs at the colored gentleman's head) Sarah took away with her the bill of fare. It was written in an almost unreadable script, neither English nor German, and so arranged that if you were not careful you began with a toothpick and rice pudding and ended with soup and the day of the week.

The next day Sarah showed Schulenberg a neat card on which the menu was beautifully typewritten, with the viands temptingly marshaled under their right and proper heads, from "hors d'oeuvre" to "not responsible for overcoats and umbrellas."

Schulenberg became a naturalized citizen on the spot. Before Sarah left him she had him willingly committed to an agreement. She was to furnish typewritten bills of fare for the twenty-one tables in the restaurant, a new bill for each day's dinner and new ones for breakfast and lunch as often as changes occurred in the food or as neatness required.

In return for this Schulenberg was to send three meals per diem to Sarah's hall room by a waiter—an obsequious one if possible—and furnish her each afternoon with a pencil draft of what fate had in store for Schulenberg's customers on the morrow.

Mutual satisfaction resulted from the agreement. Schulenberg's patrons now knew what the food they ate was called even if its nature sometimes puzzled them. And Sarah had food during a cold, dull winter, which was the main thing with her.

And then the almanac lied and said that spring had come. Spring comes when it comes. The frozen snows of January still lay like adamant in the crosstown streets. The hand organs still played "In the Good Old Summer Time" with their December vivacity and expression. Men began to make thirty day notes to buy Easter dresses. Janitors shut off steam. And when these things happen one may know that the city is still in the clutches of winter.

One afternoon Sarah shivered in her elegant hall bedroom, "house heated, scrupulously clean, conveniences, seen to be appreciated." She had no work to do except Schulenberg's menu cards. Sarah sat in her squeaky willow rocker and looked out the window. The calendar on the wall kept crying to her: "Springtime is here, Sarah; springtime is here, I tell you! Look at me, Sarah! My figures show it! You've got a neat figure yourself, Sarah—a nice springtime figure! Why do you look out the window so sadly?"

Sarah's room was at the back of the house. Looking out the window she could see the windowless rear brick wall of the box factory on the next street. But the wall was clearest crystal, and Sarah was looking down a grassy lane shaded with cherry trees and elms and bordered with raspberry bushes and Cherokee roses.

Spring's real harbingers are too subtle for the eye and ear. Some must have the flowering crocus, the wood starring dogwood, the voice of bluebird, even so gross a reminder as the farewell handshake of the retiring buckwheat and oyster, before they can welcome the lady in green to their dull bosoms. But to old earth's choicest kin there come straight, sweet messages from his newest bride, telling them they shall be no stepchildren unless they choose to be.

On the previous summer Sarah had gone into the country and loved a farmer.

(In writing your story never hark back thus. It is bad art and cripples interest. Let it march, march.)

Sarah stayed two weeks at Sunnybrook farm. There she learned to love old Farmer Franklin's son Walter. Farmers have been loved and wedded and turned out to grass in less time. But young Walter Franklin was a modern agriculturist. He had a telephone in his cow house, and he could figure up exactly what effect next year's Canada wheat crop would have on potatoes planted in the dark of the moon.

It was in this shaded and raspberried lane that Walter had wooed and won her. And together they had sat and woven a crown of dandelions for her hair. He had immoderately praised the effect of the yellow blossoms against he, brown tresses, and she had left the chaplet there and walked back to the house swinging her straw sailor in her hand.

They were to marry in the spring—at the very first sign of spring, Walter said. And Sarah came back to the city to pound her typewriter.

A knock at the door dispelled Sarah's visions of that happy day. A waiter had brought the rough pencil draft of the home restaurant's next day fare in old Schulenberg's angular hand.

Sarah sat down to her typewriter and slipped a card between the rollers. She was a nimble worker. Generally in an hour and a half the twenty-one menu cards were written and ready.

Today there were more changes on the bill of fare than usual. The soups were lighter. Pork was eliminated from the entrees, figuring only with Russian turnips among the roasts. The gracious spirit of spring pervaded the entire menu. Lamb that lately capered on the greening hillsides was becomingly exploited with the sauce that commemorated its gambols. The song of the oyster, though not silenced, was diminuendo con amore. The frying pan seemed to be held inactive behind the beneficent bars of the broiler. The pie list swelled; the richer puddings had vanished; the sausage, with his drapery wrapped about him, barely lingered in a pleasant thanatopsis with the buckwheats and the sweet but doomed maple.

Sarah's fingers danced like midgets above a summer stream. Down through the courses she worked, giving each item its position according to its length with an accurate eye.

Just above the desserts came the list of vegetables—carrots and peas, asparagus on toast, the perennial tomatoes and corn and succotash, lima beans, cabbage—and then—

Sarah was crying over her bill of fare. Tears from the depths of some divine despair rose in her heart and gathered to her eyes. Down went her head on the little typewriter stand, and the keyboard rattled a dry accompaniment to her moist sobs.

For she had received no letter from Walter in two weeks, and the next item on the bill of fare was dandelions—dandelions with some kind of egg. But bother the egg! Dandelions, with whose golden blooms Walter had crowned her his queen of love and future bride; dandelions, the harbingers of spring, her sorrow's crown of sorrow, reminder of her happiest days!

Madam, I dare you to smile until you suffer this test: Let the Marechal Niel roses that Percy brought you on the night you gave him your heart be served as a salad with French dressing before your eyes at a Schulenberg table d'hote. Had Juliet so seen her love tokens dishonored the sooner would she have sought the lethean herbs of the good apothecary.

But what a witch is spring! Into the great cold city of stone and iron a message had to be sent. There was none to convey it but the little hardy courier of the fields with his rough green coat and modest air. He is a true soldier of fortune, this dent-de-lion—this lion's tooth, as the French chefs call him. Flowered he will assist at lovemaking wreathed in my lady's nut brown hair; young and callow and unblossomed, he goes into the boiling pot and delivers the word of his sovereign mistress.

By and by Sarah forced back her tears. The cards must be written. But still in a faint, golden glow from her dandeleonine dream she fingered the typewriter keys absently for a little while, with her mind and heart in the meadow lane with her young farmer. But soon she came swiftly back to the rockbound lanes of Manhattan, and the typewriter began to rattle and jump like a strike breaker's motor car.

At 6 o'clock the waiter brought her dinner and carried away the typewritten bill of fare. When Sarah ate she set aside, with a sigh, the dish of dandelions with its crowning ovarious accompaniment. As this dark mass had been transformed from a bright and love indorsed flower to be an ignominious vegetable, so had her summer hopes wilted and perished. Love may, as Shakespeare said, feed on itself, but Sarah could not bring herself to eat the dandelions that had graced as ornaments the first spiritual banquet of her heart's true affection.

At 7:30 the couple in the next room began to quarrel. The man in the room above sought for A on his flute. The gas went a little lower. Three coal wagons started to unload, the only sound of which the phonograph is jealous. Cats on the back fences slowly retreated toward Mukden. By these signs Sarah knew that it was time for her to read. She got out "The Cloister and the Hearth," the best nouselling book of the month, settled her feet on her trunk and began to wander with Gerard.

The front door bell rang. The landlady answered it. Sarah left Gerard and Denys treed by a bear and listened. Oh, yes; you would! Just as she did!

And then a strong voice was heard in the hall below, and Sarah jumped for her door, leaving the book on the floor and the first round easily the bear's.

You have guessed it. She reached the top of the stairs just as her farmer came up three at a jump and reaped and garnered her, with nothing left for the gleaners.

"Why haven't you written—oh, why?" cried Sarah.

"New York is a pretty large town," said Walter Franklin. "I came in a week ago to your old address. I found that you went away on a Thursday. That consoled some; it eliminated the possible Friday bad luck. But it didn't prevent my hunting for you with police and otherwise ever since."

"I wrote!" said Sarah vehemently.

"Never got it!"

"Then how did you find me?"

The young farmer smiled a springtime smile.

"I dropped into that Home restaurant next door this evening," said he. "I don't care who knows it; I like a dish of some kind of greens at this time of the year. I ran my eye down that nice typewritten bill of fare looking for something in that line. When I got below cabbage I turned my chair over and hollered for the proprietor. He told me where you lived."

"I remember," sighed Sarah happily. "That was dandelions below cabbage."

"I'd know that cranky capital W 'way above the line that your typewriter makes anywhere in the world," said Franklin.

"Why, there's no W in dandelions," said Sarah in surprise.

The young man drew the bill of fare from his pocket and pointed to a line.

Sarah recognized the first card she had typewritten that afternoon. There was still the rayed splotch in the upper right hand corner where a tear had fallen. But over the spot where one should have read the name of the meadow plant the clinging memory of their golden blossoms had allowed her fingers to strike strange keys.

Between the red cabbage and the stuffed green peppers was the item:

"DEAREST WALTER, WITH HARD BOILED EGG."

Jefferson as an Inventor.

Mr. Jefferson invented the copying press. He writes to Mr. Madison in 1787: "Having a great desire to have a portable copying machine and having studied over some experiments with the principle of large machines made to apply in the smaller one, I planned one in England and had it made. It answers perfectly. I have set a workman to making them, and they are of such demand that he has his hands full. I send you one. You must expect to make many essays before you succeed perfectly. A soft brush, like a shaving brush, is more successful than a sponge." He also sent a copying press to the Marquis de Lafayette as a present. He invented the revolving chair, now a familiar and necessary article of furniture in all offices and counting rooms. The Federalist newspapers used to call it "Mr. Jefferson's whirligig" and declared that he had devised it "so as to look all ways at once."

HALLEY'S COMET.

It May Come Blazing In Splendor or Comparatively Insignificant.

The biggest free show that this generation will have seen will soon be given. Its arena will be high up in the sky, where everybody may see it, and there will be no need of crowding. It will be a one star show, the return of Halley's comet. The last time it was seen by the people on earth was in 1835, and it is now in the last stages of a journey of 6,850,000,000 miles, which had to be made to play this return date.

Again, notwithstanding the advance of science, fear will mingle with wonder at its apparition. A thrill of apprehension will be felt by millions who see its fiery head plowing through the stars and its sword shaped tail brandished over the earth, as if monitory of unknown and unavoidable evil.

Astronomers have calculated that Halley's comet must have crossed inside the orbital distance of Jupiter from the sun about the 1st of last January. In the middle of January its distance from the earth was estimated at 440,000,000 miles. During the late fall it is expected to become visible to the naked eye after having for months before been photographed and studied with telescopes. It will slowly brighten during next winter, being visible from nearly all parts of the earth.

Gradually approaching the sun, it will make its perihelion passage at a distance of about 66,000,000 miles from the solar globe on the 13th of next April. Its greatest brightness is expected to occur after the perihelion passage, when it will draw nearer the earth and be visible in both the evening and the morning sky. But at that time it will be south of the celestial equator and consequently better seen from the southern hemisphere. About May 18 the comet will be only 12,000,000 or 13,000,000 miles from the earth, although for more than a month it will have been retreating from the sun.

Just what its appearance will be no one can predict. It is the Proteus of space. It may blaze with amazing splendor, as it did when trembling Europe saw in it an avatar of the conquering sword of the prophet of Mecca, or it may be relatively insignificant. But in any event it will fix the attention of mankind and for astronomers will be the most interesting phenomenon seen in the sky for many decades.

The returns of Halley's comet have recently been traced back to the year 240 B. C., but it has probably been revolving in its elliptical orbit very much longer than that.

Halley's discovery after its appearance in 1682 that it was a regular visitor to the neighborhood of the sun has always ranked as one of the capital triumphs of astronomy. His suspicion that the comet of 1682 was not paying its first visit to the sun was based upon the similarity between its orbit in space and the orbits of two other comets which had appeared in 1607 and 1531 respectively. (He did not guess its identity with the comets of 1456 and 1066.) If the three were identical, then the same comet ought to return again after another interval of about twenty-six years. Accordingly Halley ventured the prediction that the comet would be back again in 1758. He died in 1742, seventeen years before the fulfillment of his prophecy.—Garrett P. Serviss in Hampton's Magazine.

Life Rings on Mountains.

A remarkable example of the way in which a mountain may afford on a small scale an image of the earth's climates arranged in successively higher circles has been found by Dr. P. Lowell in the San Francisco peaks. These, which are ancient volcanoes, rise out of a plateau having a mean elevation of 7,000 feet above sea level. The peaks are encircled with zones of vegetation, which run almost like contour lines round them. Between 6,500 and 8,500 feet the yellow pine is the dominant tree. From 8,500 to 10,300 feet the Douglas fir, the silver fir, the cork fir and the aspen share the available ground. Between 10,300 and 11,500 feet the Engelmann spruce and the fox tail pine take possession and ascend to the tree limit.—Youth's Companion.

Long Lived Birds.

The Duchess of Bedford in "British Birds" gives some remarkable instances of longevity among birds in her own collection. A Barbary dove which has been in the duchess' possession for fifteen years was left her by an old woman who also owned it for fifteen years and who always said it was an old bird when it was given to her. A Chinese goose has been in the possession of the family for fifty-seven years. A pintail drake which the duchess bought twenty years ago, when it was an adult bird, still survives. The bird was taken from the nest in 1852 and died in 1900. "It was chained by the leg to a small hutch," says the duchess, "and lived forty-eight years under these miserable conditions."

The Era of Preventive Medicine.

The era of preventive medicine has barely dawned. Statesmen are beginning to open their eyes to the vast importance of conserving the health of the nation in order to insure its civic integrity and permanence. The industrial world is not only no longer unwillingly yielding to wise laws designed to safeguard the health of the laboring classes, but is actually initiating of its own volition measures for improving the physical welfare, and therefore indirectly the educational authorities are beginning to focus their attention upon the bodily health of the child, for without this all efforts at mental training are worse than useless.—Philadelphia Record.

THE HOLIDAY SEASON.

How the Girl Who Can Cook May Remember Friends.

The girl who can cook has an easy time of it at Christmas, and she is sure of having her gifts appreciated. If she lives in the country, on a farm perhaps, where there are goodly supplies of groceries bought with "trade" at the village shops, but where actual money is scarce, she is specially fortunate, for all the materials of her gifts may come from the pantry shelves.

About the 1st of December the girl who can cook should make a list of her friends whom she wishes to favor. She remembers that there are three cousins who have a special weakness for fruit cake, so when she makes the family fruit cake she also makes three smaller cakes, bakes them carefully and when they are quite cold packs them away in moist brown sugar to keep until Christmas.

Perhaps some of her girl friends have recently married and moved to the city to live. In that case she will help along the new housekeeper with the gift of a little plum pudding just big enough for two. Several of these small puddings steamed in little molds may be made some time in advance of Christmas and put away in tightly closed jars until it is time to send them on, with a sprig of holly stuck in each.

If she has any boy or girl friends at boarding school or college not lucky enough to spend Christmas at home either a box of candy, chocolate fudge, perhaps full of hickory nuts gathered back in the woods, or a two layer chocolate or caramel cake will be a treat for them. To pack a cake of this sort wrap it in oiled paper, then tie this firmly with soft, flat tape. Then it is ready for a heavy pasteboard box, with plenty of crushed tissue paper put in all around it—below, at the sides and above. When this box is securely tied and wrapped in heavy manila paper the cake will travel far without injury.—Delineator.

How to Make Mince Pie.

Mince pie is one of the staple dishes for Thanksgiving day. An excellent rule for the meat, which, of course, must be made at least two weeks in advance, is this: Mince fine two cups of boiled beef and six apples. Add a quart and a half of sweet cider, a cup of currant jelly, the grated rind and juice of two lemons and two oranges, two cups of sugar, one tablespoonful each of salt and cinnamon, one teaspoonful each of cloves and allspice, one-half teaspoonful of nutmeg and pepper, two pounds of seeded raisins, one pound of currants, a quarter of a pound of shredded citron, a pound of chopped suet and a cup of shredded candied orange peel. Flavor with the rich juice of spiced or pickled peaches to taste, or add vinegar boiled down to a sirup with sugar. This rule makes much richer and more spicy pies than any other and will be found delicious. —Harper's Bazar.

How to Make a Blotter.

For my lady's writing desk there are dainty blotters, formed of three or four leaves of blotting paper cut to fit a cover of thin leather on which a border design is burned. This may be either the familiar Greek border or a simple one of dots and dashes and the shape an oblong, the leaves fastened together at one end with a dainty bow of ribbon. To accompany this is a penwiper, cut in the shape of a small book, the inner leaves of chamois skin, the covers of leather, tied together with tiny bows of baby ribbon. Decorate the cover with burned work, a border and a psuedo title in dainty lettering, "Tracks From the Pen of Helen Blank."

How to Make a Nail Buffer.

A nail buffer is a pretty and inexpensive Christmas gift which is easily made. The materials needed are a pasteboard mailing tube, some sheet wadding, a piece of chamois skin and one yard of No. 3 ribbon. Cut the roll about six inches long, cover smoothly with sheet wadding, then with the chamois skin, which should be pinked on one edge and lapped over on the other side. The chamois should be about two inches longer on each end than the roll. Cut the ribbon in two and tie around the chamois at each end.

How to Keep Cloths Hot.

There is more speedy relief from hot wet cloths than the dry heat from a hot water bottle, but it is a tedious task to keep cloths hot. If you wring a soft cloth out of warm water and place it over a hot water bag filled with hot water it will cause a steaming cloth, which gives almost instant relief to severe attacks of earache, toothache or neuralgia. It is quite an improvement over the dry heat.

How to Make Thanksgiving Nut Cake.

Two and a half cups of sugar, one of butter, three and a half of flour, one of sweet milk, five eggs, one pound of seeded raisins, one-half pound of citron, one-half of a lemon peel, one-half of an orange peel, one pint of hickory nut meats, one nutmeg and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder.

How to Make Christmas Tree Cakes.

Make a white loaf cake about two inches high when baked. Cut in two inch squares. When cool dip into a hot chocolate frosting and roll immediately in granulated sugar, which when dry gives a beautiful sparkling effect and tastes good.

How to Wash Matting.

Straw matting always should be washed with warm water and salt. Warm water alone will turn it yellow. The salt has a counteracting effect.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VI.—First Quarter, For Feb. 6, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. vi, 1-15. Memory Verse, 6—Golden Text, Matt. vi, 1, R. V.—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The kingdom that will surely come in God's own time and way will be a kingdom of righteousness and peace. The Lord Jesus Christ and His saints shall be the heavenly rulers (Zech. xiv, 5, 9; Rev. v, 9, 10), and Israel, a righteous nation, the earthly center, bringing blessing to all the earth (Isa. lx, 21; lxii, 1, 2, 6, 7). In order to enter the kingdom one must have the righteousness described in the last lesson—not our own by any deeds of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith (Phil. iii, 9). If this righteousness is truly ours it will be manifest in our lives to the glory of God, and the whole life will be simply and only and always a desire for God's approval. Thus the light will shine before men and God will be glorified. According to the scribes and Pharisees, righteousness consisted of giving and prayer and fasting, but it was all to obtain honor from men (Matt. xxiii, 5); it was not from the heart unto the Lord. In the lesson today our Lord takes these three things and teaches that those who seek the praise of men may get honor from men, but that is all they ever will get. The truly righteous will do their righteousness (verse 1, margin and R. V.) unto the Lord, with the one desire of pleasing Him, and concerning such Jesus said three times, "Thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly" (verses 4, 6, 18). The world's favor is to many a great snare, but the motto of the truly righteous is, "Not as pleasing men but God who trieth our hearts." "Not with eye service as men pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart" (I Thess. ii, 4; Eph. vi, 6). The words of our Lord in John vi, 57, seem to me to cover all this teaching, "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." Those who have taken the trouble to note how often in the book of Leviticus, the book of worship, the expressions "unto the Lord" and "before the Lord" are used and will lay this to heart will surely be delivered from the snare of the devil against which the Lord here warns us.

In reference to giving we have the contrast between the rich who cast into the treasury of their abundance and the poor widow who, perhaps with some secrecy, cast in her two mites, but of which our Lord made such honorable mention. The being rewarded openly is referred to on another occasion by our Lord when He urged that we should do good to those who cannot recompense us here, reminding us of a recompense at the resurrection of the just (Luke xiv, 14). A contrast in prayer is seen in the Pharisee and publican of Luke xviii. The contrast between fasting before men and before God is set forth fully in Isa. lviii, 1-8. Let the world go its way and please its god, but if we have become children of the only living and true God let us in all things honor our Father who is in heaven and learn to pray from the heart the prayer that is here taught us by our Lord, the only model of prayer which Christ has given us, and as one has said, the epitome of all prayer, for there is nothing that we can ask for that is not included in this. This is truly the believer's prayer, for only such can say from the heart "Our Father." All others had better take heed quickly to our Lord's estimate of them in John viii, 44. Between "Our Father" and "Thine is the kingdom" there are just seven petitions, divided, as nearly all sevens are, into three and four. The first three refer to God, Thy name, Thy kingdom, Thy will; the last four refer to us, give us, forgive us, lead us not, deliver us. God must be always first. Nothing is right till we are right with Him.

It must be "Glory to God in the highest" before there can be peace on earth. When His name is hallowed by all then the kingdom shall have come and His will be done on earth as in heaven. We must never forget our daily dependence upon Him and our indebtedness to Him, remembering that we are in a world lying in the wicked one whom we must resist and pray to be delivered from. It is a tremendous fact that our adversary, the devil, goeth about seeking whom he may devour (I Pet. v, 8, 9), and there is no greater evidence of this than the multitudes who have been led to believe that there is no devil, that such a creature does not exist. The closing words are found fully in I Chron. xxix, 11, in the prayer of David, and when the kingdom shall have come David's people shall be found in their own land, all righteous, and David's son shall be seen on David's throne, according to Luke i, 30-33. The kingdom for which we pray, the Father's kingdom, is spoken of in I Cor. xv, 24-28, as being the sequel to Jesus reigning till He hath put all enemies under His feet, the kingdom that shall follow the millennial reign. Our being accepted by God in Christ and obtaining in Him by His blood the forgiveness of sins do not depend upon our forgiveness of others. But as children of God, redeemed by precious blood, we must forgive as we have been forgiven if we would have His constant forgiveness.

THE MONEY VALUE OF AN EDUCATION

By Pres. Carl G. Doney, of the Wesleyan University.

An investigation by the Massachusetts State Board of Education shows how one's value as a money earner increases with his education. Persons who left school at fourteen began at $4 per week and at the end of the twenty-fifth year were receiving $12.75 per week. Those who finished the high school received $10 per week to begin and at twenty-five were getting $31 per week.

I have taken these figures as a basis for making deductions concerning their total, future earning capacity and what it might have been had they been better educated. The sum of the earnings of the elementary school boy in the eight years was $5,722.50, while those of the nigh school boy in the eight years was $7,377,50. The difference in the total income would pay the high school boy $2.29 per day for every day spent in the high school. It is fair to assume that their wages will continue at about the same figure thereafter and that they will be able to work for forty years more, or until they are sixty-five. The pupil who quits school at the end of the eighth grade will receive $633 per year or $26,520 for forty years' work. The one who finished the high school will receive $1,612 per year or $64,480 for forty years' work. In his earning period of forty years, the high school graduate will receive $37,960 more than the public school gradute. This means that it was worth $52.72 per day to the forer for everyone of the 720 school days spent in the high school course.

The college graduates earns on an average $2,100 a year during his earning period, This is rather less than one would suppose, but it is explained by the fact that a a large number become preachers and teachers where their salaries are comparatively small. But at $2,100 a year, the college graduate will earn $84,000 in his forty productive years which is $19,520 more than the high school graduates earns in his life time, or an amount equal to $27.11 a day every day he spends in college.

If we compare the total earnings of the man who left school when he finished the eighth grade with those of the college graduate, we find the latter could pay himself $39.91 for every one of the 1440 days he was in the high school and college and have as much in addition as the other man had earned in his whole life.

If you are tempted to quit school at the eighth grade, just remember that if you go on to finish a high school course your education will be worth $52.72 a day for every day you were in school. And if you think of stopping with the high school, remember that if you finish a college course, that education will be worth $27.11 a day for every day you are in college; or an average of $39.91 for every day spent in school above the eighth grade.

It is sun clear that it is little short of a crime against society for a high school graduate to neglect getting a college education in the belief that he know enough and that he is wasting his time to continue.

Naming the Rural Highways.

The Garden City Telegram is advocating a fine project in urging that the country roads in Kansas should be given appropriate and distinctive names.

This road naming suggestion came, the Telegram believes, originally from these columns, though it is by no means new outside of Kansas. The east, foreign countries, California and other regions have all gone into this excellent course of action in the past.

There is every reason for naming roads. The convenience to travelers, the definiteness of location when directing persons, the pride in having country homes designated as city homes are with respect to locality and the general good sense of the movement, should appeal to every one.

SPEEDER AND INEVNTOR IS CONGRESSMAN AMES

Statesman Who Is Seeking Senator Lodge's Toga Spends Part of Time Perfecting Aeroplane.

Butler Ames of Massachusetts, a member of the House, who has just announced himself as a candidate for the Senate to succeed Senator Lodge, does not devote all his time to politics. He is an inventor. Just now he is dividing his time between his efforts to retire Senator Lodge to private life and the perfection of an aeroplane.

Mr. Ames is an enthusiastic motorist. Not finding anything in the market that suited his taste in the matter of speed, he built a machine. One day he invited a member of the House to ride downtown with him in the home-made automobile. The member was high in his praise of the machine, and expressed a desire to take a long ride with Mr. Ames some time.

"I'll be glad ro take you a long some day," said Mr. Ames. "I shall have to ask you to wait a few days though. I am tuning the machine up now, and am very much disappointed with it. I had it out on the road yesterday and the best I could get out of it was 75 miles an hour. It really ought to do 90. When it is running smoothly I'll let you know and we will go out and enjoy ourselves."

The member who, incidentally, has a high regard for each and every one of his limbs and who desires to remain in Congress for the rest of his life is now spending most of his time keeping out of Ames' way. He has no desire to travel over the highways at 90 miles an hour, but he does not want to loose cast with Ames by expressing his fears.

The widow of General Stonewall Jackson was a visitor to the Senate gallery the other day and was signally honored upon the occasion. Mrs. Jackson occupied a seat in the executive section of the gallery. In addition she had the distinction of being attended by five Senators. They were Senators Rayner, Taylor, Johnston, Bacon and Bailey. Mrs. Jackson watched the proceedings on the floor of the Senate for an hour or more.

Whenever the House is not busy Representative James Thomas McDermott of Chicago may be found hovering near one of the telegraph offices in the Capitol.

"Mac," said a member of the House, "you must send more telegrams than any other member of Congress. Every time I pass this way I find you at the telegraph office."

"You've got the wrong dope," replied McDermott. "I am out here because I just naturally can not keep away from the wires. I have to get near a sounder every once in a while, just as a sailor goes down and looks at the sea when he is on shore leave.

"Being a member of Congress is a side-line with me, although I like it well enough to keep working at it. My real business is telegraphing, and what I don't know about it isn't worth knowing, I guess I ought to, for I've been in the business ever since I knew how to walk.

"I began as a messenger boy when I was 12 years old. When I and the rest of the boys ran out of dime novels I used to study a code book. Finally I became more interested in pounding the brass than in reading blood-curdling tales, and the first thing I knew I was behind the counter receiving and sending and bossing the kids aronnd in great shape. They couldn't fool me, because I knew their job from A to Z. I kept on telegraphing until I made the race for Congress in 1906. I'll keep on Congressing as long as my district lets me, and then I suppose it will be back to the key for mine."

"Did you ever notice," asked an officer of the navy, "how some of our naval heroes amused themselves after they have been placed on the retired list? You'd think, naturally, that they would haunt the Army and Navy Club and swap stories with shipmates of old day. That is not the case however.

"Look at Admiral Dewey. The Admiral still retains rank as the head of the Navy, but he does little work. He finds his greatest pleasure sitting on the quarter-deck of a fashionable rig holding the ribbons over a couple of thoroughbred horses. Every afternoon he is to be fonnd in Rock Creek Park driving up hill and down dale, and not one person in ten who pass by knows that he is the hero of the battle of Manila bay.

" 'Fighting ob' Evans get his amusement in the evening of his life in a much different fashion. The Rear Admiral has, to use a slang expression, got a literary bug. He spends most of his time in the library of his Washington home writing for magazines, He is surrounded by scores of things which remind him of days when he was in active service, but he is devoting himself to another line of work now, anh his old haunts know him no more.

"Then there is Rear Admiral Schley, the most chipper naval hero extant. Schley is an indefatigable seeker after pleasure. He has had all the work he wants, and now he wants the fun. He promenades F street as religiously as the university freshmen, he gets around to the clubs, attends banquets, house parties and has a general all round good time."

Results of Trick Ballot.

"The fine talk which Governor Crothers put in his message to the legislature concerning legislative economy and the keeping of before-election promises in general was but a mere matter of buttering the party parsnips. The legislature which is now in session at the state capital is the result of a retroactive system—which is to say that by unscrupulous partisan legislation Democratic legislatures since the extra session of 1900 have paved the way for succeeding legislatures overwhelmingly Democratic, and each successive legislature since that of 1900 has widened and extended the scheme of winning by election trickery. When John Walter Smith succeeded Lloyd Lowndes as governor the restored Democratic regime immediately called an extra session of the legislature with the design of mutilating the good election law which a Republican legislature had enacted. The purpose of the extra session was to pave the way for a legislature in 1902 that should be under Democratic control, and every legislature which has assembled since 1902 has with continuously increasing boldness and defiance assaulted the ballot system under one hypocritical pretense or another.

"The Wilson ballot law is not only responsible for the overwhelming majorities in both branches of the present legislature, but is also responsible for the contemptuous attitude of those who compose those majorities toward the weak-kneed effort on the part of the Governor and a few of his adherents to preserve some outward appearance of decency in legislative procedure. There is no reason for surprise that trick-ballot-elected legislature is bent upon doing what it was elected to do. It is quite apparent that the 1910 Assembly is bent upon following in the footsteps of the 1908 Assembly, not only in the matter of the grab of state funds through the padded payroll scheme, but in enacting legislation designed to make just such another legislature certain to be elected in 1911, and, in short, to make it certain that the oligarchy, which has become dominant in this state by the manipulation of the machinery of the Democratic party, will be kept indefinitely in power.

"Fine talk against legislative profligacy and about keeping party promises, apologetic argument in favor of observing the rules of common honesty—they are all a mere buttering of partsan parsnip, in view of the fact that those who are doing the talking, the Governor of the state included, are responsible for the ballot trickery which made such a legislature as that now in session possible. And not only so, but in so far as the Governor is concerned, the virtuous talk is offset with a recommendation of a third attempt to make this irretrievably a one-party state by a revolution of the franchise system.

"Unscrupulous methods employed at an election which determines legislative representatives cannot be expected to result otherwise than in the constituting of a General Assembly which will hold in contempt suggestions of fair play and common honesty—a trick-ballot law will make a trick legislature. There is no hope for better things in this state so long as elections can be carried by trickery, and so legislatures be chosen that are not representative of a majority of the people, but representative of a nominating oligharcy—an aggregation of political bosses."—Baltimore American.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY, 3, 1910.

IF THE Baltimore Sun would go for the ring before election instead of helping to put them in power and then scold afterward, the State would be better off and the Sun would be more consistent. It endorsed the "grand old party" before election and flays the ring afterward, which of course suits the ring perfectly.

WHY should it be necessary to pass a resolution providing that legislative employes shall only be paid from the date of their employment? Would a business man pay for services not rendered? If he did he might justify it on the ground that he might do as he pleased with his own money. But no man has the moral right to take other people's money to reward political henchmen.

THE GOVERNOR'S BIG POINT OF VANTAGE.

Every day the Annapolis correspondents tell us of many fine things in which Governor Crothers believes. This is second-hand information. The Governor told us all about it last summer during the campaign and two summers before that during another campaign.

The Governor has a set of beliefs that would be a credit to any man. We advanced the opinion several times last summer, however, and more than once in the previous campaign, that the Governor, if sincere, was running so far ahead of his party that it was doubtful if it would ever catch sight of him again.

The thing we are now interested in is: Do the members of the Governor's party in the Legislature believe as he does? If they do not, can he make them change their views? If he can't, what do we get out of the tremendous excitement of two campaigns, except a very warm pressure of the hand and an expression of regret that the bad party leaders won't behave?

This is so ridiculous a come-down from what we were led to expect that we have hopes its very absurdity, its fatuity, may avert its happening. That is where the Governor, if he "stands pat," has the bad leaders in a bad hole.

HOW TO MAKE EORESTS PAY

The main reason why this State, and especially the Western agricultural section, has been stripped of its forests is that forests have not been made to pay. A farmer in one of the great wheat counties has a tract of woodland which yields nothing. He uses coal for fuel and has little use for the trees for other farm purposes. But he has to pay taxes upon the woodland. If he cuts the trees down, he can sell the timber for a considerable sum and then raise 20 or 30 bushels of wheat to the acre on the lands. This explains the fact that one can ride for miles along the public roads in Carroll, Frederick and Washington counties without passing through any woodland

Mr. F. W. Besley, the Maryland State Forester, has a plan by which he hopes to save the remaining forests by teaching the owners of them how to make them profiteble. Timber can be sold from forests without destroying them. Indeed, trees which have attained full growth and maturity can be removed so as to make way for young growth, and Mr. Besley purposes to give some lessons in practical forestry which may be productive of enduring advantage to the State. His purpose is to go into different neighborhoods, select a suitable piece of woodland and then upon an appointed day invite the people of the neighborhood to meet him and hear his explanation of the methods by which woodland can be made to yield an income without destroying the forest.

This is a practical plan, and it is to be hoped that it will receive a fair trial and that farmers and other owners of forest lands will co-operate with Mr. Besley.

THE BUSINESS SITUATION.

The agitation over the high cost of living has spread with amazing rapidity during the past week, and for the moment it is the most discussed subject under the sun. All sorts of collective bodies, from labor unions to ladies' social clubs, have become infected with the craze, and the food reformer ranges from the man in the corner grocery to man on the stock exchange. Explanations of the cause of the trouble recall Nast's famous cartoon, wherein each member forming the Tweed ring points his finger at his next neighbor in the circle. James J. Hill, the veteran railroader and philospher-in-general to mankind, describes the movement as hysteria which will soon pass away. Others treat the subject humorously, while a committee of congress has taken it up seriously, confining investigations for the time being to the District of Columbia.

Modern methods in commercial operations are such, however, that movements of the kind now in progress cannot long continue without a disturbing effect in business and political circles. In the matter of food supplies the world today lives more from hand to mouth than ever before. This is due to congestion of population in cities and to the improvement in transportation facilities. In the campaign to force lower prices effort is concentrated on meats. An immediate effect of the "30-day strike" against the use of meat has been a falling off in receipts of live stock at western packing centers. A counter-movement to the labor unions and other bodies in the east has started in the west among stock raisers. At Frankfort, Kansas, a meeting of farmers this week passed resolutions pledging themselves not to buy for a period of one year anything manufactured by union labor, and affirming that, if the meat boycott is continued, the farmers, regardless of party affiliations, will advocate free trade. Similar declarations have been made by stock raisers in Nebraska.

Business is so thoroughly organized and operations so largely concentrated these days that packers and manufacturers of food products generally can regulate supply to demand. Therefore the expiration of the 30-day meat strike might easily find surplus stocks exhausted, not alone those in the hands of distributors, but supplies in individual larders, and the fresh impetus to demand coming at the end of the "strike" would result in higher prices than ever. In this connection, the government report this week on the number and value of farm animals as of January 1st is very pertinent. The number of swine is estimated at 47,782,000, a decrease of 6,260,000 compared with a year ago and a decrease of 8,282,000 as compared with two years ago. The number of beef cattle is 2,091,000 smaller than a year ago and 2,794,000 smaller than two years ago. Owing to the high cost of corn, the farmer is not raising as many cattle and hogs for market as in former years.

In the speculative markets commodity prices declined this week. In the wholesale produce markets butter and eggs are lower and in some of the retail markets there has been a slight decline in the price of meats. In industrial circles the lull noted a week ago in the iron market continues. The Steel Corporation, however, in its report this week showed that the unfilled orders on hand on January 1 were larger than at any previous time since the closing quarter of 1907. The extreme weakness which has prevailed in the stock market has had some effect upon general business sentiment. This is because the trend of the stock market is looked upon as a barometer of prospective financial and commercial conditions. Money rates are easier, and the surplus reserve of the associated banks of New York is much above the season's average.

Imposed Upon By Someone.

Last Saturday's Baltimore American contained a special telegram dated at Oakland giving the details of a fire said to have occurred at Brookside, near Oakland, the day previous, which consumed a helioplane built in secrecy by by one G. P. Blackiston, of Pittsburg, formerly of Cumberland, Md.

A telephone message from Mrs. Kirkpatrick Tuesday morning to this office conveyed the information that there had been no fire on the farm, that no helioplane was at the place and consequently the report was a fake.

The telegram to the American was as follows:

"Destroyed by fire early this morning in its storage-house, on the firm of E. J. Kirkpatrick, 20 miles from this place, nothing but debris remains of the huge helioplane built and owned by G. P. Blackiston, of Pittsburg, formerly of Cumberland, Md., and Washington, D. C. The fire was discovered too late to be coped with. A bucket brigade was organized by farm employes, but their efforts were of no avail.

"The Blackiston helioplane was unknown to the aeronautic world, being invented and tested secretly by the Pittsburg man. The helioplane was the first of its kind ever successfully flown, and had its inception during the extended stay of Mr. Blackiston at the Brookside Farm last August. The machine had remained there ever since.

"Sometime ago Blackiston received information that unknown parties contemplated tampering with the airship. His representative arrived here yesterday but not in time to save the helioplane. The detective and people at Brookside suspect incendiarism, and the former has secretly taken a search for two strange men whom he suspects. Mr. Blackiston was notified of the destruction of his helioplane this evening.

"Very little is known of the Blackiston helioplane. It was constructed under the utmost secrecy, no photographs having ever been taken of it except by its owner. It is said that the airship made several successful flights, and it is rumored that it was the Blackiston helioplane and not the Tillinghast aeroplane that was seen in the vicinity of the Long Island and Massachusetts coast some time ago."

Miss Corinne Manges returned to Oakland Monday evening from a two weeks' visit to friends and relatives in York, Pa.

"WHAT! MARYLAND AMENDMENT AGAIN"

Laugh at State This Time from Knights of Labor.

Maryland is again attracting unfavorable comment through the prospective attempt of Legislators to put through another suffrage amendment. The Journal of the Knights of Labor, published in Washington, in last week's issue has this to say editorially under the caption, "What! That Maryland Amendment Again?"

"Indications are that Governor Crothers will compel his agents and managers, those who are conducting the business end of the State law-making department, to submit another disfranchisement amendment to the voters of the State. These men do not learn by experience. Defeat does not carry with it the object lesson intended. The fact that this criminal scheme to kill off enough votes, under the name of 'Law,' to make it easy for the Governor's machine to control the State politics was twice submitted to the voters and twice overwhelmingly defeated, yet, if we are to accept the press reports, it is to be tried for a third time.

"The people are to be hounded, cajoled, brow-beaten and pleaded with to 'kill the negro vote,' all of which sounds well to the uninitiated, but which means much to the people generally. The proposed amendment, like its defeated sisters, uses the negro as a means to an end. The Crothers' machine is anxious to eliminate from the politics of the State every element regardless of color which is opposed to the present method of conducting the State's business. The negro is not the only voter that it is intended to do away with through this obnoxious proposition. The foreign-born voter is in the same class, disguise it as they may.

"The machine managers know that the great mass of foreign-born citizens who are not fortunate enough to have an education that will enable them to read and understand this villainous proposition that it is again proposed to submit for their consideration, will not present themselves at the voting booths, fearing that they will be arrested for illegal voting, particularly if their inclinations are to vote against the dominant party. Such a law would keep thousands of men who have not a drop of negro blood in their veins away from the polls, and these are the men that it is intended to reach as well as the 'ignorant colored voter,'

"There is no need for any curtailment of the voting powers of the State; no necessity to worry over the colored voter. If he, or any voter, does not live strictly within the law required of him, punish him, but do not inflict a hardship on thousands of other people some do not respect the rights and privileges accorded them by the laws of the State; do not pass sentence in advance on a class because you have failed to enforce to laws on the violator.

"It is well to remind the gentlemen who make up the Maryland Legislature that the day will never come when such an outrageous, unconstitutional and entirely uncalled for amendment will be adopted by the voters of the State, and it is right that it should not be."

GROUND HOG DAY.

Superstition Hath It That It May Storm or Shine for 40 Days.

Yesterday, known to classic weather prognosticators as Candlemas Day, but not recognized by the United States Weather Bureau observers as having more meteoroleogical significance than April 1, nevertheless, with common folk was Groundhog Day.

According to a quaint superstition the day is indicative of the kind of weather that will prevail for the next four or six weeks. If the ground hog, said to be peacefully slumbering in his burrow, comes out and sees his shadow there will be 40 days of bad weather. But if Mr. Hog does not see his shadow there will follow an equal number of days of good weather.

The sun shone bright yesterday, hence the ground hog saw his shadow.

FELL AND BROKE ARM

Mrs. J. N. Robinson Was Painfully Injured Saturday.

Last Saturday morning Mrs. J. N. Robinson met with a distressing and extremely painful accident at her home on Second street when the lady stepped on the rear porch of the house and slipped on some accumulated ice and snow, falling backward into the door way, and in doing so broke her left wrist and painfully sprained he ankle and knee.

Mrs. Robinson met with a similar accident a few year ago and in practically the same manner, at which time she broke her hip, and ever since she has been compelled to use a crutch when outside the house. Her recent accident, while not as serious as the former one, is still a painful one and will keep her to her room for a number of weeks.

THE FARMER IN GARRETT COUNTY

Has No Tendency to Invest His Money in "Wildcat" Enterprises.

The Manufacturers' Record of Baltimore, inquiring of bankers and business men in fourteen southern states regarding farming and the condition of business in those states, received the following reply from R. E. Sliger, cashier of the First National Bank of Oakland:

"Regarding the general business conditions of our community, I must say that there has been a great improvement in the last few years, and particularly in the case of the farmer. While Garrett is the largest county in the State, it is also the youngest, and is not so thickly settled as the older counties. Up to within the last few years it has had many acres of good timber land, nearly every farmer having a portion of his land covered with virgin forest. He has been able to sell this timber for enough to pay his mortgage, if he had one, and to improve the balance of the farm. This also applies to some coal that has been sold, the surface being retained. There is no tendency here to invest the surplus in 'wildcat' enterprises so far as I know, but it has been put back on the farm in the shape of improvements or deposited in the savings department of the national banks. I should say that their deposits have doubled in the last five years, and in many cases the farms have more than doubled in value. Each farmer is becoming more scientific each year and is getting better results from his labor. He is using improved machinery more and more, raising better crops and erecting better buildings. There are a number of cases where investors from other sections have bought land and settled here, and a farmer who is getting up in years sometimes sells his farm and moves into Oakland, the county seat. There is always a demand for residence property in Oakland, which is a delightful resort the year round and has the reputation of having a summer climate that is unsurpassed. The new State road that is now being built through each county has already increased the value of the land that is near it, and when completed will do a vast amount of good to the whole State. I look for a great improvement in the next two years."

GRANTSVILLE.

Jan. 25.—After remaining silent for quite a while I thought I would once more make little noise through the "silent medium."

We have been having weather in abundance during this month. Rain, snow, and more ice than we have had for years. Some of the heaviest sleet damaged the fruit trees somewhat, and at times put the telegraph and telephone almost out of commission.

The Methodist revival meetings which were being held here during the last two weeks, closed on Monday night. The Holy Communion was observed on Thursday of last week, Rev. Reed assisting Rev. Friend in the obsequies.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Maust spent Sunday at Springs.

D. W. Dorsey is busy cutting timber on the Dorsey farm, about 7 miles east of this place.

Our genial friend, Ed. Sausman, of Springs, is seen passing through our burg quite frequently. Ed. never tells where he's going, but we could guess it about the first time if we had a chance.

Among the visitors we notice Mrs. Dr. Lichty, of Meyersdale, and Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Barchus, of Salisburg.

H. S. Yoder strokes his whiskers quite frequently since the arrival of a girl baby. TEDDY.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

Rev. D. A. Friend closed a very successful meeting at this place, resulting in twelve conversions, and all joining the church. Sup't Reed was with us three days during the meeting. Every one is very much pleased with our new superintendent.

We are glad to know that Rev. Young, the Lutheran minister, has decided to stay on this charge. He has done much good while among us.

Ephram Beachy and his brother John, who were here attending the funeral of their mother, Mrs. Aaron Beachy, have returned to their homes in the West.

Miss Tibbie Shaw is home again owing to to the illness of her father, Mr. George Shaw, who is not improving much.

The many friends of Mr. Jonas J. Beachy were glad to see him about town again.

Miss Minie Bonig has taken her old position in Mr. Hershberger's store.

Miss Nellie Bevans, who has been home on a short vacation, has returned to Wheeling, where she is studying for a trained nurse.

Miss Effie Gingrich has gone to Latrobe, Pa.

Mr. Fred Livengood has gone to Baltimore, Md., where he has a position.

GIVE THEM A START

The New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

By reference to another column of this paper today it will be noted that Mr. Albert A. Doub, referee in bankruptcy, gives notice of the first meeting of the creditors of William A. Harvey & Co., who were recently adjudicated bankrupts by the United States District Court for the District of Maryland.

Under the provisions of the new road law, which is published in full in another column of this paper today, the Board of County Commissioners have been engaged since Tuesday making appointments of road supervisors for the various districts of the county. The law as enacted does away with the road engineer and in his stead and place supervisors for each district are authorized.

Americans are noted for being "good livers." The humblest table in the land enjoys luxuries far beyond the dreams of the plain people of other countries. This leads us to observe that if the prevailing high cost of edibles the world over shall teach a lesson in plain living by the use of simple, wholesome food instead of rich and varied viands, the mass of people will have improved their digestive apparatus and at the same time saved money.

Mr. Allen S. Howell, of Oakland, left here yesterday afternoon for Wheeling, West Va., his former home, where he went for the purpose of attending the funeral of his brother, Rev. Richard Howell, who died at the Astoria Hotel, New York City, Tuesday evening, and whose body will arrive in Wheeling today. The deceased gentleman was a prominent minister of the Protestant Episcopal church. Several weeks ago he underwent a surgical operation involving the removal of a portion of his tongue and throat which had become cancerous and from the operation he never fully recovered. He was married a few years ago and was probably the wealthiest minister in the world, being rated at considerably above a millionaire.

FIRE IN A CHURCH

Timely Discovery Saves Mt. Lake Park Edifice from Destruction.

Sunday evening last the Methodist Episcopal church at Mountain Lake Park was saved from destruction by fire by the timely work of a number of people and the application of quantities of snow to the burning timbers.

The fire was communicated to the floor of the building by an over-heated furnace pipe in the cellar while service was being conducted by members of the Epworth League, and had gained such headway that a hole was burned through the floor. As soon as it was noticed, however, the people in the building filed out without alarm. Water being scarce the men at the service gathered large quantities of snow and with this substitute the flames were soon extinguished with but slight damage to the property.

GARRETT COUNTY LAND

Near Grantsville Sold at $125 per Acre at Public Auction Last Friday.

Probaby the highest price ever realized for Garrett county farming land sold at public auction, was on last Friday morning at Grantsville when two parcels of land, the one containing 49¼ acres and the other containing 3⅝ acres, lying contiguous to each other, were solded at public auction under a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county by Mr. William S. Yoder, trustee, the purchaser being Mr. Urias D. Yoder, of near Grantsville.

The price paid by Mr. Yoder for the two parcels of forty-four acres was $5,500, or $125 per acre.

The improvements on this land are of an ordinary kind consisting of a dwelling, small barn and some small outbuilding.

Years of investigation by noted surgeons for a perfect anesthetic, which would have no detrimental effect on the heart or other vital organs of the patient, apparently have been at last rewarded. Electricity has come to the relief of the surgeons, and investigations going on here and abroad, which have just been made public, show that electricity is for superior to any of the drugs now used to produce anasthesia. This discovery, if confirmed by futune investigations, and there seems to be no reason that it will not be, is one of the greatest boons to humanity of modern times. It will means a revolution of modern methods of surgery.

Mr. Charles Liller has on exhibition in the Second street window of his barbering establishment two very handsomely mounted wildcats, male and female. The animals were trapped by James Grimes, of near Aurora and mounted by him, showing excellent workmanship, and from judges of the cat tribe the word is given that the positions of the animals as well as the wicked look of the male are true to nature. The cats are larger than one would judge them to be, especially the male which stands about eighteen inches high.

A communication to the editor from Rev. J. B. Workman, received yesterday afternoon says that "Mrs. Workman is slowly improving; she has been very low and will of course require some time to completely recover. She does not suffer any more except from weakness, and cannot even sit up in bed. Inez is about well of rheumatism. Madge was taken ill today (Tuesday), going to bed with a temperature of 103. I am very well and have been ever since I have been here." Mr. Workman sends his regards to all inquiring friends and highly appreciates the many expressions of sympathy and interest that came to his home from Oakland during the past few weeks.

Messrs. S. Lawton & Sons, a new firm composed of Mr. Samuel Lawton and his two sons, Arthur and Will, have purchased the stock of plumbing goods, gas fixtures, etc., from Mr. J. E. THE DEATH RECORD.

PETER ALEXANDER CHISHOLM.

Mr. Peter Alexander Chisholm, well known throughout Garrett county and parts of West Virginia, died at his home in Oakland Sunday evening after an illness of one week, much of which time he was in a semi-conscious state.

He was the son of James and Marjory Mason Chisholm and was born on the old Wilt farm, in District No. 8 of this county, December 15, 1841. On this farm Mr. Chisholm was reared and when hostilities broke out between the North and South Mr. Chisholm cast his fortunes with the Confederacy and served three years as a member of Co. F (Hardy Grays), 33rd Reg. Va. Infantry, Stonewall Brigade. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Spottsylvania Court House, now known in history as the "Bloody Angle," and was confined at Fort Delaware, one of the Federal prisons near Delaware City. After the close of the war he returned to his native county and had resided here continuously until his death.

As a military man Mr. Chisholm stood high. He was a member of the old Garrett Guards, enlisting as orderly sargeant, promoted to a lieutenancy and finally commissioned captain which position he held until the Guards were mustered out of service. As a member of the famous Haymaker Team, remembered for its brilliant achievements as the crack rifle shots of the country, Mr. Chisholm won a number of prizes for his marksmanship, notably the one carried off at Chicago against the best marksmen of the United States and Europe.

Mr. Chisholm was married to Miss Mary S. Mason July 6, 1871, and to this union three children were born, namely Lee, Guy and Madge. The first died when four years of age and the other two, Guy and Madge, passed away after they had reached young manhood and womanhood.

Besides his widow Mr. Chisholm is mourned by two sisters, a large circle of relatives and countless friends. His funeral took place Tuesday afternoon at two-thirty o'clock from his late home on Center street, the services being conducted by Rev. John M. Davis, of the M. E. church, and Rev. Edmund Manges, of the Lutheran church, with interment in the Oakland cemetery.

ANDREW COLLINS.

Andrew Collins, formerly of Friendsville, but more recently of Cranesville, W. Va., died at the Maryland General Hospital, Baltimore, Tuesday of a complication of diseases. The deceased was a patient at the institution for upwards of two months. He leaves two sons and and one daughter, namely, Messrs. Will Collins, of Cranesville, and Proctor Collins, of Ohio Pyle, Pa., and Mrs. Nathan Selby, of Selbysport. Mr. Collins' remains are expected to arrived in Friendsville today at noon and the funeral will take place tomorrow at Cranesville.

MRS. SALLIE DURST.

Mrs. Sallie Durst, aged eighty-five years, died at her home near New Germany last Sunday morning. Mrs. Durst was paralyzed some time ago, her death resulting. The funeral took place Tuesday afternoon, the interment being made in the Reformed church yard at New Germany.

Must Buy Stamps.

The Department desires that the patrons of Rural Delivery Service put stamps on their mail, so that the carriers can make time on their routes, and thereby enable them to render more prompt and efficient service. A little co-operation on the part of the patrons with the Department will result in great improvement in the service. The carriers at all times carry an ample supply of stamps, stamped envelopes and postal cards, and it will be no trouble for the patrons to keep themselves supplied. Rural carriers as a rule are scheduled to leave the offices from which the service emanates as soon as possible after the arrival of the principle mail trains, care being taken to connect with the trains bringing the daily papers and other important matter. This gives them only a limited time to cover their routes and get back to the home office to make connections with outgoing trains so that mail matter collected for dispatch may go to its destination as promptly as possible. The Department order is as follows:

"In view of the extent to which the practice of placing loose coins in boxes by rural patrons has grown, and the delay in the delivery and collection of mail and the hardship imposed on the rural carriers incident thereto, you are informed that, commencing Feb. 15, proximo, rural letter carriers will not be required to collect loose coins from rural mail boxes. Patrons should enclose coins in an envelope, wrap them securely in a piece of paper, or deposit them in a coin holding receptacle, so they can be easily and quickly taken from boxes, and carriers will be required to lift such coins, and, where accompanied by mail for dispatch, attach the requisite stamps."

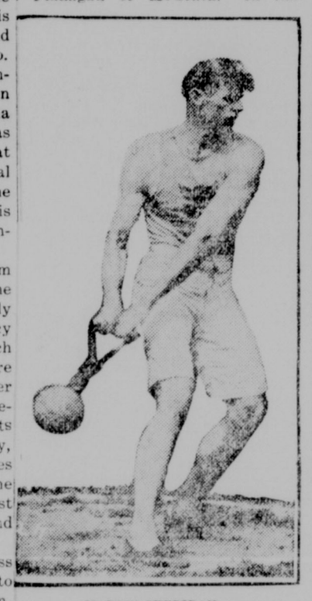
THE SPORTING WORLD

Sheridan May Rival Flanagan.

From present indications Martin Sheridan, one of the greatest athletes ever known, will never stop breaking world's records. Martin is suddenly growing big. His weight has been coming up steadily for the past three or four years, but since the all round championships he has jumped from 190 to 203 pounds.

In another year he may be as big as Flanagan or McGrath. In that case the weight throwing giants had better look out. Over 200 pounds of weight, coupled with Sheridan's cat-like quickness, will mean even more record breaking. He holds half a dozen world's records now.



MARTIN SHERIDAN.

Detroits Long on Road.

The feat of the Detroit Baseball club capturing its third consecutive pennant is all the more commendable when it is considered that, aside from the other teams, it had to travel further than any other club in the American league. During the course of the season the Tigers had to travel 13,965 miles. The Athletics had to travel but 9,808 miles.

The following table shows the distance the teams of the two major leagues were compelled to travel:

American league—Cleveland, 14,094 miles; St. Louis, 13,377; Chicago, 13,-0; Detroit, 12,905; Boston, 11,721; Washington, 10,745; New York, 9,648; Philadelphia, 9,808; total, 95,328 miles.

National league—Pittsburg, 14,673 miles; Chicago, 12,481; St. Louis, 12,-6; Boston, 11,256; Cincinnati, 10,723; Philadelphia, 10,412; Brooklyn, 9,953; New York, 8,732; total, 90,356 miles.

Americans Reserve Four Hundred.

Four hundred players have been reserved for next season by the American league clubs. The Cleveland team takes the lead in wholesale reservation of talent, having sixty men on its list. Chicago has fifty-nine, Philadelphia and Boston each fifty-four, New York fifty-three, St. Louis forty-nine, Detroit forty-three and Washington twenty-eight. The name of Jack O'Connor is on St. Louis' reserve list, which lends credence to the story that he is to be Jim McAleer's successor as manager of the Browns.

"Ducky" Holmes Quits Diamond.

William ("Ducky") Holmes, after a most successful career as player and manager, has sold out his interests in the Sioux City Western league baseball team and will retire from the national game to become a ranchman in South Dakota. Holmes admits that during four years in the Western league he has made nearly $40,000. He has a big ranch in South Dakota comprising about 1,200 acres, which he is stocking with cattle, and he declares he is through with baseball for the present.

The man Who Makes

A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

A MAN really admires beautiful clothes, but his admiration is seldom sufficiently strong to make him want to pay the bills that his wife incurs for them.

Laziness may be a cross to some people, but never to the owner of the quality.

One woman says being a chaperon consists mostly in knowing how wisely not to see.

Nothing could be more fatiguing to a lazy man than to have to hear people constantly wondering how his folks can stand to have him around.

Love in a cottage is certainly all right if the rent is paid and the coal bin full.

It is a good thing to begin now to practice resolutions so that when you have to use them daily they will come easy.

It seems queer that the expansion of a man's head should result in the pinching and shriveling of his brain.

Chance For a Poet.

Oh, who will sing a ditty
Of the city, of the city,
One pertinent and witty
That seems to fit the case?
The country has been getting
From poets lovely petting,
And they have been forgetting
The big and busy place.

He sings of birds and grasses
And useful garden sasses
And in his measure passes
The compliment along.
But no one sings or flatters
Nor tears the rag to tatters
About their humble matters
In verses grand and strong.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY, 3, 1910.

IF THE Baltimore Sun would go for the ring before election instead of helping to put them in power and then scold afterward, the State would be better off and the Sun would be more consistent. It endorsed the "grand old party" before election and flays the ring afterward, which of course suits the ring perfectly.

WHY should it be necessary to pass a resolution providing that legislative employes shall only be paid from the date of their employment? Would a business man pay for services not rendered? If he did he might justify it on the ground that he might do as he pleased with his own money. But no man has the moral right to take other people's money to reward political henchmen.

THE GOVERNOR'S BIG POINT OF VANTAGE.

Every day the Annapolis correspondents tell us of many fine things in which Governor Crothers believes. This is second-hand information. The Governor told us all about it last summer during the campaign and two summers before that during another campaign.

The Governor has a set of beliefs that would be a credit to any man. We advanced the opinion several times last summer, however, and more than once in the previous campaign, that the Governor, if sincere, was running so far ahead of his party that it was doubtful if it would ever catch sight of him again.

The thing we are now interested in is: Do the members of the Governor's party in the Legislature believe as he does? If they do not, can he make them change their views? If he can't, what do we get out of the tremendous excitement of two campaigns, except a very warm pressure of the hand and reached a greedy little hand after th bad box of bonbons Elsie Ticot was pass ing. The model was forgotten. down

"Lay her there." Vivon nodded to that corner divan in the inner studio heap ed high with pillows, sketches and cos tumes. Crane ruthlessly pushed th ing. latter off with his foot to make roo he for his burden. He laid her down ge in a tly and held to her lips the glass o water Vivon brought.

"It is just faintnesss, yes?" asked Vivon anxiously.

Crane stared thoughtfully at th and white face among the pillows. He had sec been hungry once back in the first ts is days of the battle. The little home in pay. Crawfordsville had sent him out t heat the great city of his dreams, and only hich long afterward had the fight been his fuel own. He thought he recognized the ther look that comes to those who are pay tracked by the wolf. cuts

"I think that she's just about starv ber ed," he said bluntly. "Get some wine aise or something." e on

Vivon obeyed. The American had that way that made men obey. blic

"Who is she?" asked Crane when h ash had managed to get a few drops o ugh wine between the pale lips. ate

"One of Ribaut's models," Vivon an ipes swered nervously. The sounds from ich the atelier were not conducive to peace ake of mind. Yes, she was a new one. Ri old baut had sent her to him yesterday em. and he had engaged her for the poise, full the grace, the turn of the head, that th, line from the tip of the ear to the me slope of the shoulder. She did not pose nay for the life classes, merely for drapery age and the pose effective. And the nameved nto —it was in his notebook. ta-

"American?" asked Crane, using more wine as he saw a flutter of the eyelids.

"But, yes." Vivon shrugged his shoulders. "When they come over and are poor they must do something. Some are so proud they hide away and starve, and some put up the grand fight."

"Where does she live?"

Crane glanced up. The little artist had gone back to the atelier as a fresh crash sounded, with Yvette's peal of laughter ringing above it.

When the girl's eyelids opened he smiled down at her in a friendly fashion.

"Feel better?"

"I guess so." She hesitated and added, with a scared look in her dark blue eyes, "Did I faint in there?"

"Oh, yes; that was nothing! Lots do." Laurier had said the American had reduced cheerful lying to an art. "It's so hot there in the mornings, you know."

There was a quiver of hopeless disappointment around the curves of her mouth, and he knew what troubled her. There was a five franc piece in his pocket. He laid it unblushingly on the taboret beside her.

"Vivon said that was yours. He couldn't wait, but he said to come tomorrow, and this is for the two sittings."

Her eyes brightened with surprise, and he knew his surmise had been right.

"I must go home," she said, trying to rise from the cushions.

"Wait while I get a carriage." Crane started for the door decidedly. "I'll send one of the girls to help you."

She thanked him with a smile that

The number of s is estimated at 47,782,000, a decreas 6,260,000 compared with a year ago a decrease of 8,282,000 as comp with two years ago. The numbe beef cattle is 2,091,000 smaller th year ago and 2,794,000 smaller two years ago. Owing to the high of corn, the farmer is not raising many cattle and hogs for market former years.

In the speculative markets comm prices declined this week. In wholesale produce markets butte eggs are lower and in some of the markets there has been a slight de in the price of meats. In indus circles the lull noted a week ago i iron market continues. The Steel poration, however, in its report week showed that the unfilled orde hand on January 1 were larger tha any previous time since the clo quarter of 1907. The extreme w ness which has prevailed in the s market has had some effect upon eral business sentiment. This is cause the trend of the stock mark looked upon as a barometer of pros tive financial and commercial conditi Money rates are easier, and the sur reserve of the associated banks of York is much above the season's a age.

Imposed Upon By Someone.

Last Saturday's Baltimore Amer contained a special telegram date Oakland giving the details of a fire to have occurred at Brookside, Oakland, the day previous, which sumed a heliplane built in secrecy by one G. P. Blackiston, of Pittsbu formerly of Cumberland, Md.

A telephone message from Mrs. K patrick Tuesday morning to this o conveyed the information that there been no fire on the farm, that no he plane was at the place and consequ ly the report was a fake.

The telegram to the American wa follows:

"Destroyed by fire early this morn in its storage-house, on the firm of J. Kirkpatrick, 20 miles from this pla nothing but debris remains of the h helioplane built and owned by G. Blackiston, of Pittsburg, formerly Cumberland, Md., and Washington, C. The fire was discovered too late be coped with. A bucket brigade v organized by farm employes, but th efforts were of no avail.

[illegible] assertion. The conductor was ready to signal the motorman to stop.

But the woman had declared she wasn't going to get off, and she intended to keep her word. She poised the dog carefully in her palms, tossed him off into the street, at the same time bidding him "go home!"

Then she came back into the car and dropped languidly into her seat with a bored tilt to her face.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

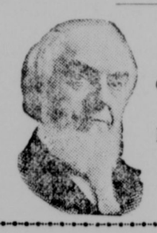
His Reproof.

Somewhere in the pages of her "Book of Joys" Mrs. Lucy Fitch Perkins tells a delightful story of her New England clerical great-grandfather, who was a man of ingenuity and resources. She says:

He employed more than one device to secure wakefulness on the part of his weary congregation. Standing during the prayer was but one of many. My grandmother used to tell us with pride of an instance which occurred at a time when a new church edifice had been proposed and was under warm discussion. Great-grandfather thought this a worldly and unnecessary expense and emphasized his opinion by pausing in the midst of his sermon on a Sunday, saying impressively as he fixed the somnolent members of his congregation with a stern look:

"You are talking about building a new church. It seems to me quite unnecessary since the sleepers in the old one are all sound!"

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...



Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Mass Meeting No. 3

CHURCH FEDERATION

Counting the Cost

What Episcopalians, Catholics and Lutherans Must Surrender.

Sunday, Jan. 30.—The third meeting for the consideration of Church Federation was held today. The spacious Brooklyn Academy of Music was crowded with Christian people of all denominations to attend the third of the series of four meetings called by the Peoples Pulpit Association. Pastor C. T. Russell of the Brooklyn Tabernacle addressed the large audience for an hour and a half. The deep interest felt was evidenced by the profound silence, as well as by the eagerness of face. The text was the same as on the two previous occasions, "Say ye not, A Federation, to all them to whom this people shall say, A Federation; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid" (Isaiah viii, 12). The speaker said:—

We meet today to consider what sacrifices would need to be made in the interests of Federation by the three oldest denominations of Christendom. Of these Lutherans have least to surrender. Their tenacity for the Word of God they may still maintain, even though others of the federated bodies might more and more abandon the Holy Scriptures, under leadership of the Universities, Colleges and Seminaries teaching Higher-Criticism-Infidelity and the Evolution theory. The Federation nevertheless would still permit Lutherans and others to love and reverence the Word of God and yet be in fellowship. Almighty God, the Son of God and the Holy Spirit, firmly believed in by Lutherans, would all be acknowledged with more or less of mental reservation by all the denominations associated in the Federation. Nothing along these lines would need to be abandoned. Even Luther's plea of consubstantiation in the Eucharist may be held without objection. Even the honor of being the first denomination of the Reformation might still be held. We conclude then that Lutherans would not be required to sacrifice anything.

Some Things In Common.

Episcopalians and Catholics have some things in common. They each claim to represent the original apostolic Church. They each claim (through their bishops in the laying on of hands) apostolic authority. Their common claim is that all other denominations of Christians whatsoever are false churches without Divine authority and hence not to be recognized or tolerated. Accordingly no minister of another denomination would be permitted to preach either in a Catholic or an Episcopalian pulpit. And if by mischance such a circumstance should occur it would be considered necessary to purge the sacred spot by a kind of re-consecration. From the standpoint of these denominations all others are heretics; but, they say, not willingly so, but ignorantly so.

Here note the fact that a cleavage is in process amongst Episcopalians. A minority, termed high-churchmen, are gradually separating Romeward, while the majority are sharing the sentiments of other Protestants, to the effect that the matter of "apostolic succession" is probably less important than their forefathers supposed. For the purposes of this discussion we may without offense ignore the high-church minority and say that the Scriptures which plainly foretell the perfecting of Church Federation indicate that it will include Episcopalians, but will not include Catholics. Nevertheless the intimation is that while the Federation will be a Protestant one, it will not be anti-Catholic. On the contrary the two great systems, Catholic and Protestant, will fraternize and co-operate along various lines —especially in the manipulation of social and political influences.

The breadth of the Episcopal creed will not call for particular sacrifices in Federation, if only their pride on the subject of apostolic succession can be satisfied. They are all prepared to admit that no particular wisdom or holiness has been communicated from generation to generation, from bishop to bishop and from bishop to lower clergy through the laying on of hands. They are willing to admit that there have been men as wise and others as foolish outside as inside their Communion. They are willing to admit that no greater light upon the Word of God and its meaning has come down to humanity through its channels than through outside channels. They are willing to admit that their clergy have no more of Divine Grace and Truth, Wisdom and Power than have others of God's people, both clergy and laity, outside their boundaries. Hence they are willing, nay, anxious, for Federation, and ask only that their "face be saved," by some acknowledgment of the long idolized thought that ability to expound the Scriptures and the Grace of God in expounding them could be had only through their channel. They have no desire to prove their claim to superior grace and truth by measuring swords of the Spirit with other ministers.

Up to the present time Episcopalians decline to be parties to the Federation unless their special claim be in some sense or degree recognized. Pride says it would never do to retract now all that the denomination has stood for in separation for centuries. They would urge Christians of the other denominations, especially the clergy, to consider the advantage which would accrue to the Federation by having all Protestant ministers accept their ordination. They do not claim that it would make them wiser or better men, nor more efficient teachers, either of truth or error. But they do claim that it would give them an authority in the eyes of the people and give color and reasonableness to the Federation of many churches with discordant creeds posing as one church in the Federation arrangement.

The argument is, "The common people, the laity," are disposed more than ever to think for themselves on religious subjects and to study the Bible for themselves. If, therefore, as ministers, you desire to hold the people in check so that they shall not think for themselves you would do well to concede the claim of apostolic succession—that no one is permitted to interpret or teach the Bible except those who have received apostolic benediction. It was disregard of this claim of apostolic benediction which led to freedom of thought on religious subjects and ultimately led to the formation of the various sects. You should now seek to restrict further investigation of the Bible and further interpretation of it by accepting our theory, by permitting us to grant you recognition in some simple form of the rights of apostolic authority through our bishops. If you do not do so you will more and more lose your hold on the people, for we are coming more and more to a time of individual thought on every topic.

The Scriptures intimate that this argument will ultimately prevail and great Protestant denominations be thus vitalized and, in co-operation with Catholicism, for a short while dominate Christendom socially and politically, crushing out individual thought and negativing and black-listing all religious teachers outside the Federation and its Catholic Ally. From this standpoint the Episcopal system will lose nothing, but even be a gainer of prestige through the Federation.

What Catholics Would Surrender.

For Catholics to join the Federation would signify the surrender of a great deal, and yet, in the light of the Twentieth Century, surely much could be surrendered without any sacrifice of manhood—merely with the sacrifice of a little pride. For the Church at Rome to federate with the Protestant Churches would mean that they ceased to protest and that she relinquished her peculiar claims:

(1) That she alone is the Church of Christ and has authority to instruct;

(2) That she is more than a Church or prospective Kingdom—that to her has been committed by God the rulership of the world in respect to all matters temporal and spiritual, hence that she is the reigning Kingdom of God.

(3) That her Pope is the authorized representative of Christ, anointed and commissioned of God to fulfill all the prophecies of the Scriptures respecting the reign of Christ, his Millennial Kingdom, etc. This claim of Papacy that the Pope's reign is de facto the reign of Christ is expressed in the declaration that he is the vice-gerent of Christ—the one reigning instead of Christ.

(4) The doctrine of trans-substantiation—that by the blessing of a priest the ordinary bread and wine are transmuted into the actual soul of Christ—(his flesh and his blood) for sacrifice afresh in each celebration of the Mass.

Whatever may have been true in the remote past, assuredly our Catholic friends can no longer claim that all the purity, all the faithfulness to God, all the sanctity of life amongst believers in Christ are to be found in her communion. St. Paul declares, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Surely all Christians admit this standard and the correctness of the Apostle's teaching. Hence the ignoring and setting aside of all creeds and barriers which have heretofore hindered the Unity of the Church of Christ might be possible. Thus the first Catholic objection might easily be removed in favor of Federation, or, still better, in favor of Union. As our Episcopalian friends fail to prove that the apostolic succession to ordination gave either greater wisdom or more grace to their clergy than to other ministers of the Gospel, might not our Catholic friends reasonably admit the same?

The second claim that Papacy is God's Kingdom, that the Popes reign successively as Christ's Vice-gerent, should not be difficult for Catholics of our day to lay aside. However strongly it was held in the dark past it is surely little appreciated by Catholics today. No longer do the Popes dominate the civil rulers of Christendom. And no longer do the people consider it wise that they should do so. More and more the masses appreciate the fact that the original kingdom of earth was given to father Adam and that mankind as his children are the natural heirs of the inheritance. More and more the people are disposed to consider popes, czars, emperors and kings as merely figure-heads, without any real title or authority from heaven to rule or to coerce the people. More and more the masses demand Congresses, Parliaments, Reichstags and Doumas. And more and more do they demand that these shall reflect the sentiments of the people in civil and religious matters. The day of darkness and ignorance in which the people believed that popes and kings were Divinely appointed to rule them with Divine authority has gone by. General intelligence has taught mankind that it is a mistake to suppose that one God-appointed king and kingdom were Divinely appointed to wipe another Divinely appointed king and kingdom off the face of the earth. Hence popes and kings now admit that they reign by a popular sufferance, and their appeals for money, for armies and navies, is no longer on the score that they were Divinely instructed to obliterate each other, but on the score of self-defense.

This claim, however, wholly destroys the argument that we are now or ever in the past have been under Christ's Kingdom, either direct or through the popes. Neither now nor at any other time in the world's history has there been a reign of righteousness such as the Scriptures declare Christ's Kingdom shall be. May we not, then, with good grace—Catholics and Protestants—admit that neither our Catholic popes, emperors and kings, nor our Protestant kings, emperors and heads of Churches are reigning with any Divine authority manifest to human judgment? Let us humbly admit the nonsense of the legends on our coins, Catholic and Protestant, to the effect that kings and popes reign by the grace of God—by Divine appointment. Let us rather say that they came into power through the exercise of brute force and in a time of common public ignorance. Nor by this do we mean any disrespect to the governments of today—rather we have shown that today the people are ruling through their Congresses, Parliaments, Reichstags, etc., and that the kings and emperors are mere figure-heads of power, more or less useful and dependent upon the good-will of their people.

If it be asked how we shall account for the period of the dark ages and autocratic and devilish misrule, our reply would be to point to the Apostle's words. He declares that Satan is the god or ruler of this world, who now operates through the disobedient—through those not in harmony with God, who constitute the vast majority in Christendom and elsewhere. And we remind you that our Lord Jesus also spoke of Satan as being the Prince of this world or age (John xii, 31), and of himself as the Prince or Ruler of the coming Age, the Millennial Age (John xviii, 36).

Ah, yes! the sooner both Catholics and Protestants admit what they and all the world now see, the better—namely, that for a long time our great Adversary held us in a bondage of ignorance and superstition, in getting free from which many bright minds have reacted towards infidelity, because they did not see that many of the teachings of the past, both Catholic and Protestant, were not only irrational, but most positively unscriptural teachings of men, and, as St. Paul declared, "doctrines of demons" (I Timothy iv, 1).

Not Vice-gerent Christ.

In view of the fore-going—in view of the fact that the Divine titles of all kings and emperors are now abrogated, papacy need feel no special disgrace to her cause in similarly abrogating the claim that the popes reign as representatives of Christ or have authority so to do. Indeed such a claim is more safely denied than held, for in the light of our day papacy's best friends cannot look into the past and point with pride to any achievements as properly representing the reign of the Prince of Peace—Immanuel. In the light of the present all of God's people, Catholics and Protesants of every shade, should rejoice to join in the Lord's Prayer—"Thy Kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Surely this is what all saints of all denominations should desire and pray for and labor for.

Not that we can hope to bring it to pass of ourselves, however. Nearly nineteen centuries of efforts show to the contrary. Even our last century of great missionary endeavor, Catholic and Protestant, proves this. United States statistics show that in the year 1800 there were six hundred millions of heathens, and that in the year 1900 their numbers had doubled—there were twelve hundred millions of heathens. While continuing our exertions on behalf of the heathens abroad and at home, let us tie our faith to the Apostle's words and "wait for God's Son from heaven" (I Thessalonians i, 10).

At the second coming of Christ and the glorification of his Church, "his elect," "his saints," gathered from all denominations, Catholic and Protestant (and some from outside of all of them—only then will the glorious reign of Christ and the Church begin. Only then will the spiritual Seed of Abraham be complete and the work of blessing the unregenerate world begin —the Millennial Kingdom work—the overthrow of Satan and his empire—the scattering of darkness, ignorance and superstition which he fostered—the flooding of the earth with the light of the knowledge of the glory of God —the restoration of natural Israel to Divine favor—the bringing in of everlasting righteousness through a mental, physical and moral uplift. Whoever then shall refuse all those blessings and privileges will be destroyed from amongst the people. Thus eventually in the close of the Millennium God's will shall be "done on earth even as it is done in heaven" —as fully, as completely. This is the "Kingdom of God's dear Son" for which we wait and pray. And however good or bad other kingdoms, temporal or spiritual, have been, we need no longer consider them substitutes for this one which shall be the "desire of all nations" (Haggai ii, 7).

Trans-substantiation, Masses, Purgatory.

We are free to admit that the Catholic doctrines of Trans-substantiation, Masses and Purgatory would be difficult for our Catholic friends to abandon for the sake of Federation or for any other reason. Nevertheless we believe that in the light of our day there is more to be learned upon these important doctrines. Without agreeing with these doctrines—without claiming Catholic affiliation, let me here say that the Catholic doctrine of Purgatory, which lies at the foundation of these three, is in many respects more rational than our Protestant doctrine of eternal torture. It would surely be more God-like to provide some way of escape for the millions of humanity than to leave thousands of millions uselessly in untellable anguish to all eternity. However, the Lord willing, it is my intention to discuss this subject in a general Mass Meeting to Christian people of all denominations on Sunday, March 6. So many of you as desire to attend will be welcomed on that occasion. We will then seek for the Scriptural Explanation of these doctrines—Purgatory and Hell.

Summing up, then, we find that Lutherans would have nothing to lose by Federation—nothing to surrender, except a little pride. Episcopalians likewise will find Federation to cost them little. They can well afford to join the Federation, especially on terms upon which they insist—the recognition of the apostolic succession. And this they can afford to concede in its very mildest form, realizing that it has never specially advantaged them anyway and is impossible of demonstration, in view of the fact that the Scriptures declare that there are but twelve apostles of the Lamb and symbolically show only a twelve-star crown to the Church during this Age and only twelve foundations to the New Jerusalem—the Church in glory. How then could bishops either possess or give apostolic blessings? (Revelation xii, 1; xxi, 14.)

Omitting the Catholic church, being assured from the Scriptures that she will not be a member of the Federation, we conclude by advising the Protestant Christian Communions discussed today not to be content with Federation, but to go the entire length of Union—dropping all their pet ideas and acknowledging as fellow-Christians and fellow-members of the Body of Christ, the Church, all who acknowledge Jesus as their Savior, their Redeemer, and who turn from the ways of sin and to the best of their ability walk in the path of righteousness, and who make full consecration of themselves to the Lord. These are and ever should be ONE in the most absolute sense possible, both now and beyond the veil.

THE DRESSING TABLE.

How to Take Care of the Hands and the Fingernails.

The first requisite is always the little basin of warm soapy water in which to soak the finger tips to softness. An orange wood stick, flat at one end and pointed at the other, is the second necessity, and a pair of curved manicure scissors, a bit of cold cream or vaseline, tint and polish, with a chamois buffer, a few strips of emery board and a bit of absorbent cotton, are also valuable.

The cotton is more efficacious than the orange wood stick alone for cleansing under the nails, especially if they have been roughened by cleansing with a sharp instrument. With a careful cutting the emery board will suffice for filing, and the cold cream is rubbed in the last thing to counteract the drying effect of the soaking.

One should begin by trimming the nails to an even roundness. It is no longer considered the best taste to have pointed nails, and indeed it is just as well, for the former style left no means of protecting the corners of the finger tips. The roughest faults in the cutting are then filed away and the orange wood stick, moistened, used to shove down the cuticle till the half moons show and to remove particles of skin that have clung to the nails. Though hangnails must of course be cut with scissors, it is far better to avoid their use, as cutting the cuticle thickens it. Then comes the cleansing, the final smoothing with the emery stick, the touching with nail rouge, the polishing with nail buffer and powder and the rubbing in of cold cream, and you are ready to do the other hand. When both are manicured they should be carefully rinsed and dried and a final polish administered with the buffer. This treatment is necessary once or twice a week and the dry polishing every time you wash your hands.

One of the best preparations for whitening and refining the hands contains raw eggs. To prepare it a raw yolk is beaten with a silver fork, and a tablespoonful of oil of sweet almonds is worked in a drop at a time. A teaspoonful of tincture of benzoin is then added in the same way. A dessertspoonful of rose water is also put in, drop by drop, to finish the paste. This mixture is applied at night, and a pair of kid gloves is drawn on. The gloves should be white and larger than are worn for dress. It is always well to make a few holes in the palms of the gloves worn at night in order to let in air. The paste when not in use must be kept in a tightly covered jar in a cold place.

The local grange participated in the industrial parade at the Galion (O.) street fair with a float decorated with farm products, upon which rode its uniformed degree team and the grange goat. Out of fifty-three floats it won second prize.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, , potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, ay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries' of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

OUR ROADS COMPARED

Reasons Why France Has Best Highways In Europe.

HER METHOD IS SUPERIOR.

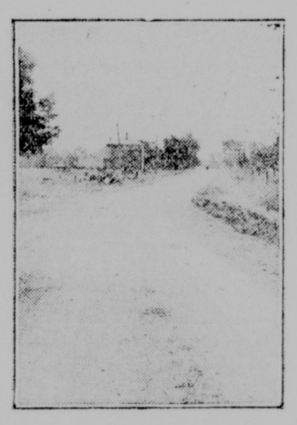
Road Laws In United States Until Recently Were the Same as England's of the Colonial Days—Germany's Unique System.

The present road situation in the United States may be briefly summed up as follows:

In mileage we have the most tremendous system of roads which any country has ever possessed since the world began. According to a careful road census, the length of all of our roads amounts to 2,155,000 miles. The most liberal estimate of our annual expenditure on these roads, both in money and labor, was a fraction over $79,000,000 in 1904, or about $1.05 per capita. At the same rate this would be an expenditure of about $90,000,000 a year at the present time.

According to our road census, we have less than 40,000 miles of stone surfaced road, or about 2 per cent of the total mileage. We have 108,000 miles of gravel road, or about 5 per cent of the total mileage. Small as our annual expenditure for roads has been, it has aggregated during the thirty year period from 1870 to 1900 a total of upward of $1,800,000,000. We may therefore say that the road building in the United States is, considering area, population and wealth, at the same point at which it stood thirty years ago and the seventeen hundred and odd million dollars have produced few appreciable results.

When we turn to the subject of road administration in the United States we find that about half of the states are operating under practically the same road laws as prevailed in England when America was a colony. This system of road administration provides for the payment of road taxes partly in labor and localizes the work to an extreme degree by placing in authority the district or township road overseers or road supervisors, no requirement being made to insure skill or knowledge of road building on the part of these petty officials. With few exceptions no system of accounting is in force, so that an intelligent idea may be obtained as to the disposition of the road tax, and no definite lines of authority are established such as would guarantee the wise and equitable conduct of the work.



THE TYPICAL ROAD OF OUR RURAL DISTRICTS.

[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

A number of states have adopted in principle or practice, or both, the system of centralizing under a state highway department the conduct of all or part of the road work of the state, thereby securing uniformity in methods, economy in administration and skill in supervision. In some of the state highway departments the work is educational and investigative, with a view to ultimately giving these departments administrative powers.

It is not possible in a short article to enter into a discussion of the various systems of state aid in effect in this country. Suffice it to say that the principle of state aid and supervision constitutes the germ of the only road administration which has proved successful in other countries.

This movement is gaining headway at a very rapid rate, and when we consider that it has been little more than a decade and a half since its inception the fact that half of the states have adopted it in principle and have actually expended from state treasuries considerably over $56,000,000 we may well feel encouraged for the future of road building in this country.

The striking feature of the French road system is the skilled supervision provided in every grade of road work and in every unit of the administrative organization. The basis of the system is the school of roads and bridges, one of the finest technical schools in the world, maintained at the expense of the national government. In this school are trained the highway engineers to whom are intrusted the building and maintenance of the roads of France.

At the head of the administrative organization is an inspector general of bridges and highways, under whom are chief engineers in charge of the road work of single departments and communes. Single arrondissements are under the direction of ordinary engineers and underengineers, the latter being equivalent in rank to noncommissioned officers in the army. The subdivisions are under the direction of principal conductors and ordinary conductors. Next in line come the foremen of construction gangs, the clerks employed at headquarters and finally the cantonniers, or patrolmen, each having from four to seven kilometers of highway under his immediate supervision.

Probably the most important unit in this great army of workers is the cantonnier, or patrolman, who has charge of a single section of the road. He keeps the ditches open, carefully fills holes and ruts with broken stone, removes dust and deposits of sand and earth after heavy rains, trims the trees and bushes, and when ordinary work is impossible he breaks stone and transports it to points where it is likely to be needed. He brings all matters requiring attention to the notice of his chief.

* * * * * * * *

There are at the present time 149,759 miles of road in England, for which the annual expenditure for the year 1905 to 1906 amounted to $78,059,000. It is therefore evident that the annual expenditure per mile of road amounts to about $520. In view of the fact that most of the principal roads of England have already been constructed, this large annual expenditure would appear to be devoted in a large measure to maintenance. It would seem that a system which requires an annual outlay of $520 per mile for the entire mileage must be ineffective and costly. The explanation of this is found perhaps in the fact that in England the maintenance of the public highways devolves entirely on local authorities, these numbering about 1,900.

As to skilled supervision it may be said that no qualifications are required by law to be possessed by the men in charge of road building and maintenance, but it is the general practice in the important districts to appoint experienced highway engineers for this work.

* * * * * * * *

Germany is a federation of states, and it follows that road administration is conducted separately by each state of the empire. The imperial government exercises very little control over the highways and does not in any way contribute to the expense of their construction and maintenance.

A striking feature of the Saxon road system is the practice of planting fruit trees along the roads.

Each canton has at the head of its road system an engineer with capable assistants. The engineers and their assistants must have an academic education and possess a diploma from the Polytechnic institute, while the road masters are required to have a good technical education.—L. W. HIGHWAYS IN THE WEST.

Use of the Automobile by Farmers Aiding the Improvement Movement.

Road improvements in the west, already noticeable to a slight degree, are sure to follow when the farmers of that section awake to the realization of their condition as compared with some of those of the east. Nothing will arouse the farmers to this so much as the use of the automobile, and it will be the more general use of the car by the farmer that will result in better roads.

In sections where farmers are using cars to any extent road improvements are already noticed, but there is still room for more, and more there will be in the near future. Motoring is most enjoyed on good smooth roads. Farmers owning cars realize this as well as any, and not only are they bestirring themselves toward appropriations for good highways, but are in many cases furnishing the labor necessary for road betterments.

In some farming sections of the west automobile owners can be picked out by a glance at the roadway in their immediate neighborhood. Near their houses rough, uneven surfaces have been smoothed off and soft, slippery roadways resurfaced. Each farmer seems to take interest in the roads near his own home. When more farmers have cars, and they are buying them rapidly, there will be more short stretches of perfect roads, and at some future time, not far distant, the stretch will be unbroken.

FERRO CEMENT ROADS.

France Trying Experiments With Highways Made of This Material.

Ferro cement roads are being experimented with in France. The substance is made of cement mixed with straw. To make a slab or block of ferro cement a mass of iron straw is placed in the mold, and there is poured over it cement sufficiently fluid to penetrate into all the interstices of the iron and completely cover it. When the whole has set, the core of iron thus intimately incorporated gives to the block a great resistance to breakage and to traction, at the same time furnishing elasticity to compression which enables it to stand superficial shocks. A brick of ferro cement one and three-fifths inches thick has supported during crushing tests a pressure of about sixty-five tons to the square inch. In breakage tests the resistance was quadruple that of ordinary cement. Resistance to wear was no less remarkable.

The Use of Wide Tires.

As to the desirability of the use of the wide tires there can be no question. The most casual observation will suffice to convince any one of the damage which a heavily laden wagon equipped with the ordinary sharp, rounded, narrow tires will produce on any road. There is also another and perhaps even greater advantage to be gained by the use of wide tires—namely, the increased hauling capacity attained.

SOME TURKEY DISHES.

How to Utilize Leftovers In Inviting and Tasty Ways.

For ragout of cold roast turkey cut the meat from the bones in as large slices as possible and quite thin. Break up the bones and put them in a stewpan with cold water to cover them. Cook gently for an hour, then strain out the bones, season the meat with salt, pepper, a very little grated nutmeg and a teaspoonful of chopped parsley. Add to this the broth, and when heated stir in a tablespoonful of flour and the yolk of an egg, mixed with half a cup of rich cream. Add two level tablespoonfuls of butter, and stir over the fire until it becomes thick. Then serve. If you have any cold gravy add that, leaving out some of the water. When done there should be very little liquid.

Another plan is to cut up fine such parts as cannot be utilized in other ways. Put into a shallow baking dish or individual baking dishes, with bits of butter rolled in flour, sprinkle in a little salt and pepper and cover with stock or water. Cover with a thick layer of buttered breadcrumbs, and pour over them two well beaten eggs or one egg for each individual dish. Bake a nice brown in a quick oven. A few small stewing oysters may be added to this dish to help out in both quantity and quality, using the strained oyster liquid to moisten.

For a curry of cold roast turkey slice as thinly as possible any part of the cold roast turkey and serve with the following sauce and a border of plain boiled rice: For three-quarters of a pound of the sliced meat take one and one-half tablespoonfuls of butter, heat in a frying pan, and add a tablespoonful of minced onion. Fry until a light yellow, then stir in the same amount of flour as butter and a level tablespoonful or less of curry powder, a pinch of salt and a dash of pepper. Simmer for five minutes, then strain over the meat and simmer ten minutes longer and serve. A pint of stock or water is added after the flour has been stirred smoothly into the butter and onion. Have the hot boiled and salted rice ready when the meat is done, and serve very hot.

How to Cream Onions.

For a family of four or five persons take seven medium sized onions. Cut the peeled onions into small thick pieces. Cover them with plenty of cold water and set over the fire in an uncovered vessel. When they boil up throw into a colander, pour over the onions more cold water and shake well. Now they will be clean and white looking. Stew for three-quarters of an hour in just enough of water to keep from burning. Make a white sauce of one cupful of milk, one teaspoonful of flour, one tablespoonful of butter, season with one scant teaspoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt and a quarter spoonful of pepper. Pour over the onions about ten minutes before taking from the fire. Onions cooked in this way will not have a strong taste.

How to Decorate Paper.

An effective Christmas present is hand lettered writing paper. This is easily made even by any one who is not especially artistic. Buy plain white or cream writing paper ("kid finish" is better than linen). If you can design your own letters or monogram, so much the better. If not, select some tasteful arrangement of the desired initials and trace or copy it in the upper left hand corner of the paper with pencil. Then go over the letters with gold water color paint, using a fine brush. This does not take long, and the finished result always is appreciated.

How to Make a Beauty Bag.

Beauty bags are made by cutting ordinary cheesecloth into strips two and a half inches wide by five inches long. Fold over and sew up the side. Fill these with oatmeal and sew up the top of the bag, and you have one of the most healthful cleansers for the skin ever devised. The bags are used as washcloths wet in a basin of warm water. A most delightful present is a box of the above beauty bags daintily overcast or buttonholed with wash silk in delicate colors.

How to Care For Waxed Floors.

Never use soap and water on a waxed floor. Waxed floors should be wiped up with a perfectly dry cloth and more wax rubbed into them with a woolen cloth or the polishing brushes that come for that purpose. But do not put on more wax than the floor can absorb, particularly in the corners, which have not been walked on so much. Wash them with turpentine, drying them perfectly dry before applying more wax.

How to Make Peanut Dressing.

Moisten slices of buttered bread with hot water, taking care not to get the bread wet enough to make it soggy. Add a small grated onion, a stalk of chopped celery, salt and pepper to taste and a gill of peanuts rolled fine. Stuff and truss.

How to Cure Laryngeal Catarrh.

Benzoin is usually beneficial in such cases of catarrh of the larynx. Take one teaspoonful of the compound tincture to a pint of boiling water and inhale the vapor. This treatment may be repeated every half hour or hour, as required.

How to Soften Water.

To soften hard water put one ounce of quicklime into four gallons and a half of water. Stir it thoroughly and allow it to settle. Then pour off the clear solution, which will be enough to add to four barrels of hard water.

THE SPORTING WORLD

Sheridan May Rival Flanagan.

From present indications Martin Sheridan, one of the greatest athletes ever known, will never stop breaking world's records. Martin is suddenly growing big. His weight has been coming up steadily for the past three or four years, but since the all round championships he has jumped from 190 to 203 pounds.

In another year he may be as big as Flanagan or McGrath. In that case the weight throwing giants had better look out. Over 200 pounds of weight, coupled with Sheridan's catlike quickness, will mean even more record breaking. He holds half a dozen world's records now.

Detroits Long on Road.

The feat of the Detroit Baseball club in capturing its third consecutive pennant is all the more commendable when it is considered that, aside from three other teams, it had to travel farther than any other club in the American league. During the course of the season the Tigers had to travel 12,965 miles. The Athletics had to travel but 9,808 miles.

The following table shows the distance the teams of the two major leagues were compelled to travel: American league—Cleveland, 14,094 miles; St. Louis, 13,377; Chicago, 13,030; Detroit, 12,965; Boston, 11,721; Washington, 10,745; New York, 9,648; Philadelphia, 9,808; total, 95,328 miles. National league—Pittsburg, 14,673 miles; Chicago, 12,481; St. Louis, 12,126; Boston, 11,256; Cincinnati, 10,723; Philadelphia, 10,412; Brooklyn, 9,953; New York, 8,732; total, 90,356 miles.

Americans Reserve Four Hundred.

Four hundred players have been reserved for next season by the American league clubs. The Cleveland team takes the lead in wholesale reservation of talent, having sixty men on its list. Chicago has fifty-nine, Philadelphia and Boston each fifty-four, New York fifty-three, St. Louis forty-nine, Detroit forty-three and Washington twenty-eight. The name of Jack O'Connor is on St. Louis' reserve list, which lends credence to the story that he is to be Jim McAleer's successor as manager of the Browns.

"Ducky" Holmes Quits Diamond.

William ("Ducky") Holmes, after a most successful career as player and manager, has sold out his interests in the Sioux City Western league baseball team and will retire from the national game to become a ranchman in South Dakota. Holmes admits that during four years in the Western league he has made nearly $40,000. He has a big ranch in South Dakota comprising about 1,200 acres, which he is stocking with cattle, and he declares he is through with baseball for the present.

Talbot Barred From Competing.

The Cornell track team prospects received a severe blow by the loss of Lee Talbot, the intercollegiate champion hammer thrower. Talbot is barred from the university owing to an entrance condition hanging over him from his freshman year. He arrived in Ithaca in time to enter college, but the professors in the College of Agriculture refused to grant a petition to let him back into the university. Talbot is a sure point winner, and his loss is felt keenly by the red and white.

Navy May Row at Poughkeepsie.

There is an excellent prospect that the Naval academy will be represented by an eight at the Poughkeepsie regatta next year, and the matter is now being considered by Captain J. Y. Bowyer, superintendent of the Navy academy. It is believed that he is much more favorably disposed toward the proposition than was his predecessor, Captain Charles Badger. The midshipmen rowed at Poughkeepsie in 1907 and were beaten only by Cornell and Columbia.

Kinley Mack Sold by Owner.

Kinley Mack, the horse that won both the Brooklyn and Suburban handicaps in 1900, has been sold to a prominent horseman in Buenos Aires for $5,500. Kinley Mack and 118 thoroughbreds were shipped abroad to be sold by James B. Haggin several months ago. About $100,000 was realized from the sale.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

A MAN really admires beautiful clothes, but his admiration is seldom sufficiently strong to make him want to pay the bills that his wife incurs for them.

Laziness may be a cross to some people, but never to the owner of the quality.

One woman says being a chaperon consists mostly in knowing how wisely not to see.

Nothing could be more fatiguing to a lazy man than to have to hear people constantly wondering how his folks can stand to have him around.

Love in a cottage is certainly all right if the rent is paid and the coal bin full.

It is a good thing to begin now to practice resolutions so that when you have to use them daily they will come easy.

It seems queer that the expansion of a man's head should result in the pinching and shriveling of his brain.

Chance For a Poet.

Oh, who will sing a ditty
Of the city, of the city,
One pertinent and witty
That seems to fit the case?
The country has been getting
From poets lovely petting,
And they have been forgetting
The big and busy place.

He sings of birds and grasses
And useful garden sasses
And in his measure passes
The compliment along.
But no one sings or flatters
Nor tears the rag to tatters
About their humble matters
In verses grand and strong.

Of cows and colts and porkers
We've had some corking corkers,
But how about New Yorkers?
Do they deserve the slight?
And other urbane dwellers?
For no poetic yellers
In garrets or in cellars
Sing up and treat them right.

Yes, really, it's a pity
That no one sings the city.
Will not some poet gritty
Tune up and give it voice?
Its buildings tall and spacious,
Men braver than Horatius—
The topics there, good gracious!
The first come has his choice.

More Up to Date.

"So they are going to sail the sea of matrimony together."

"Sea of matrimony nothing."

"Why, I heard they were to be married."

"Oh, I guess they are going to be married all right, but it is aviating the empire of ether that they are going to do."

The Difference.

"What is the difference between an actress and a chorus girl?"

"If she is an actress she generally has a large wardrobe."

"Yes?"

"And if she is a chorus girl her wardrobe is small, but swell."

Queer.

"You are such a slow walker."

"Yes; I always did walk slowly."

"I have noticed that, and I have often wondered"—

"Yes? What?"

"How you ever managed to run in debt so fast."

Not Utilitarian.

"I would have you know, sir, that I am proud."

"Well, what of it?"

"What of it?"

"Yes. It doesn't pay the rent, does it, or fry the bacon for breakfast?"

To Keep Him Guessing.

"What are you so nervous about?"

"I am to learn my fate tonight. Ethel has promised to give me her answer."

"Calm your fears. Her girl friends all know that she is engaged."

Saw an Opening.

"Have you been over Banker Ora's new house?"

"Well, partly."

"Personally conducted by him?"

"Well, he showed me the door."

Essential.

"What is the first thing to be done in order to learn to save money?"

"The very first thing?"

"Yes."

"Earn it."

Himself, of Course.

"He is the most conceited thing."

"Is he?"

"Yes, and he talks all the time."

"About what?"

"Nothing."

Marvelous.

"He can turn out more work than two men."

"What two?"

"Any two who are not working."

The Question.

Well, how about the pole by now?
Does anybody care?
And was the doctor's tale cooked up,
Or was he really there?

ERRATIC WEATHER

February Will Be Filled With Storms of Snow, Sleet and Rain.

Peter R. Smith, after calling the turn on every change in the weather during the past month, gives us the following forecast for February:

February will bring many storms. A number of exciting elements center in this month which will keep the meteorology in a state of excitement through most of the month. Erratic weather will be experienced.

Sleet, rain and snow will prevail at periods. Winter thundershowers will be in evidence toward the latter part of the month. Taking a view of the month it will be much below the average February for disagreeable and changeable weather.

The month is likely to be very disagreeable from the 4th till after the new moon on the 9th, when extremely cold weather will prevail.

The 11th, 12th and 13th will bring severe storms and cold weather.

The period from the 15th to the 20th will show up blustery weather.

The 22nd, 23rd and 24th are days on which storms are likely to prevail.

As February passes to March storms will be in progress. After each storm period a cold wave will follow.

Windfall Brought His Reformation.

Thomas McDermott, of Davis, W. Va., a well known character of that place, went before Justice Bowman, of Davis, on Wednesday last and swore off drinking for one year, after which he made preparations to leave for the west where a brother had just died and left him a fortune of $15,000. By some the amount left by the brother is estimated at close on to $100,000, the property consisting principally of city blocks and outside real estate.

McDermott later took a train for Alexandria, Arkansas. He is 61 years old, but appeared like a new man, dressed in his new suit, shaved and cleaned up, and without the use of intoxicants for several days.

SWANTON.

There have been more sheep-killing dogs in this community than, perhaps, have ever previously afflicted it, and most of them are still at large. Mr. Richard Custer and others, it is said, lost many sheep this winter by dogs, and within the last ten days C. M. Miller had nine fine ewes killed by neighboring dogs. Owners of such dogs seem to have but an imperfect idea of their responsibility in such damages, and it will require a firm enforcement of the law to impress that responsibilty and to reduce the number of worthless and destructive dogs.

Mr. Edward Sweitzer, who has been critically ill with appendicitis, was taken to the Hoffman Hospital in Keyser, W. Va., for an operation. He is reported to be gradually recovering but still very sick. A modern claim of secret knowledge for the cure of appendicitis by external application was a dismal failure in the case of Mr. Sweitzer, it appears.

Many in this part of Garrett learned with no small concern and regret of the death of Mr. Peter Chisholm, of Oakland. His has been a familiar form on the streets of Oakland for a period covering the memory of a good many of our citizens, and the circle of his friends reached far beyond the county bounds. Mr. Chisholm was justly esteemed as a man of many superior traits, and while brave in his convictions was never obtrusive in their maintenance.

The grain mill in Swanton has closed its doors for the season. RELLIM.

BITTINGER.

A number of residents of this village report having seen the comet which recently made its appearance in the western sky.

This week began with a snow storm in progress and all the roads badly blockaded by immense snow drifts.

There were 850 bushels of coal hauled from F. M. Bittinger's coal mine at this place, on Friday of last week, that being the largest sale for any one day this season.

There seems to be a deadly malady prevalent among the hogs in this neighborhood, as we have had reports of several swine having died within the past few weeks.

Clark Snyder returned to this place last week, after a short visit to Washington, Baltimore and Annapolis.

Miss Myrtle Wiley returned to Cumberland last week, after a short visit to her parents here.

George Friend, of the Backwoods settlement, was hunting foxes in this neighborhood last week.

William Broadwater, of New Germany, was buying cattle in this section last week.

Elias Orendorf had his foot slightly injured one day last week, by a large lump of coal falling upon it.

ORIGIN OF THE SPLIT LOG.

Novel Manner In Which Farmer Devised Scheme For Dragging Roads.

A few years ago a Missouri farmer named King became disgusted, as many a farmer has been before and since that time, with the condition of the highway between his farm and the neighboring village. He studied the situation and one day devised a rude contrivance to smooth the rough places and round up the surface from the ditch to the center so as to drain off the water.

It was a simple affair, made of a log split into two equal parts, a few braces between them, and a chain by which the horses hauled the drag with him upon it. He tried it after a rain when the road was soft, and it worked so well that its fame and the fame of the improved road spread through the neighborhood and thence far and wide.

That was the modest beginning, and now the split log drag, which any farmer or road commissioner can make in a few hours, is revolutionizing the methods of maintaining dirt roads—methods which have always been notoriously expensive and ineffective. The drag was not patented, and its inventor, with nothing to sell and only as a good roads enthusiast, has toured the country telling gatherings of farmers, road commissioners and local officials the marvelous results both in immediate improvement and in the subsequent cheapness of maintenance accomplished in the middle west, where the drag is now in general use. Indeed, in one state, Iowa, its use on all country roads is now required by legislative enactment.

The great value of good roads to the agricultural interests of the country is appreciated everywhere. A comparatively small mileage of the roads can be surfaced with crushed stone or gravel, and in the cheap and effective maintenance of the prevailing dirt roads the device, primitive in appearance, made from a split log and backed by the energy of an intelligent western farmer, promises to be a most important agent.

TOWN MAKING ADVICE

How Foreign Cities Promote Safety and Convenience.

AVOID PARALLEL STREETS.

The "Wheel Spoke" System of Laying Out Thoroughfares, However, Is Not Being Adopted—How the German City of Stuttgart Is Laid Out.

City building in accordance with practical principles is being reduced to a science in Germany. Today scores of cities in the empire are studying, planning and adjusting old to new conditions, with the result that ugliness is being replaced by beauty and the health, convenience and safety of the people very much enhanced.

One idea is to get away from parallel lines. No street from end to end, if it is of any considerable length, is of the same width throughout. Then two streets, though close together, may not exactly parallel each other. They twist and turn where the "meandering" will be the most effective from every point of view, with short cuts where they are needed for traffic or other purposes and pleasing vistas where the grouping of the buildings already erected and the others contemplated has been planned for.

None of the cities now being beautified inclines to the "wheel spoke" system, such as is seen in Versailles, Washington and Detroit. Very seldom does the configuration of the land lend itself to this idea, even if what is already in existence in the way of improvements could be utilized. It is the plan not to ruthlessly tear down old landmarks, but rather to build around them or up to them and to make the most of them. It is a combination of utility, beauty and picturesqueness, with systematic rules ignored and an eye always kept on traffic requirements, local prejudices, trade, healthful habitations and atmospheric conditions.

Stuttgart, the capital of Wurttemberg, is an example of this methodical and scientific German planning. The city is located in a narrow valley, and the hills on either side are covered with vineyards. First a resident architect spent five years in closely studying the available area, the character of the buildings already erected, the direction the probable expansion of the city would naturally take and the necessities of the residents. Then the plan was subjected to all sorts of criticism. There was a detailed explanation by the architect; the mayor, himself a scientist, reviewed it; criticisms were made from the social economic viewpoint; learned men in hygienics studied it, and others trained in their several professions reviewed it. Adopted after a searching examination, rejuvenated Stuttgart will be a city where the very best results will be attained for its particular environment.

What has been going on in Stuttgart has been progressing in many other German cities, not to quite so elaborate an extent perhaps, but sufficiently so to relieve congested centers, extirpate slum districts and to create healthful conditions where heretofore lurked disease and death.

In Germany, as elsewhere, extraordinary expansions of urban municipalities have led to land speculation, and many who were only in moderate circumstances have become rich. Sylvester Baxter in his article in the Atlantic on the German way of making better cities says that "in one of the Berlin suburban towns alone there are as many as forty 'peasant millionaires,' men who a few years ago were peasant proprietors and are now made rich by the values the growth of the great capital has given to their land."

Others have been made rich by the fact that the improvements effected through planning for more beautiful cities have taken in parts of their holdings, leaving them with valuable real estate from no efforts of their own.

The budget now under discussion in the reichstag is taking cognizance of these values, and it is proposed, as it is in England, to take for taxes a certain percentage of this annual increase. Some of the cities when making these improvements condemn the land outright, holding the fee title of what remains for rental purposes and thus themselves getting the benefit of the increased land values.

The Knockout of a Knocker.

There once was a man named Bill Skink,
Who had an abdominal kink.
To be more exact,
His intestinal tract
The doctors pronounced on the blink.

Bill's liver developed a chill;
His stomach backed up and stood still;
His lights and his gall
Were of no use at all,
And this made a knocker of Bill.

Some men use their brains when they think,
Some only use language and ink,
While some cerebrate
With their livers, which fate
Was that which pertained to Bill Skink.

When Bill by his stomach was stung
The ailment affected his tongue.
He'd talk by the hour,
And his language was sour
Of some folks that ought to be hung.

"This town is the worst one on earth,"
Would grumble this killer of mirth.
"Its stores are a joke,"
He would dismally croak
Till his friends gave him all a wide berth.

Bill's custom took wings, and ere long
His business was sold for a song.
There is no sort of doubt
That he "knocked" himself out.
'Twas his bile ducts that got him in wrong.

If your liver should get on the blink,
Kind reader, just pause on the brink.
Look cheerful and smile,
Do not think with your bile,
And avoid the sad fate of Bill Skink.

J. A. EDGERTON.

THE AUSTRIAN NAVY.

A Possible Menace to England In the Near Future.

Because Austria has not been a sea power in the past is no sign that she is not going to be one in the future. You are not aware that within two years Austria will have available thirteen of the most powerful battleships in the world. Do you appreciate that these thirteen battleships will be at the service of Germany, and do you appreciate what such an Austrian fleet can do in the Mediterranean with no force to hold it in check? It would have Malta, Cyprus and Egypt at its mercy.

Austria would not find the slightest difficulty in dispatching an expeditionary force to any of these points, and once in control of Egypt and dominating the Suez canal she could dispatch her smaller ships to attack commerce, proceeding by the Cape route to India.

Thus it is clear that in case of war a powerful British fleet must be stationed in the Mediterranean unless the British people are prepared to see their commerce destroyed, their communications with the east interrupted, their fortresses in the Mediterranean one by one attacked and captured and staggering blows struck in every quarter against their empire. With a navy which will certainly be the most efficient in the Mediterranean in the near future, Austria may entertain daring ambitions.—Everybody's Magazine.

Dormice Immune to Snake Bite.

Three animals have long been known to be immune to the bites of snakes—the pig, the porcupine and the mongoose. According to M. G. Billard, a naturalist of Clermont-Ferrand, France, the common or garden dormouse must be added to this list. This little animal does not hesitate to fight a viper and kill the reptile. Of course he would be helpless if attacked by a big rattlesnake, for this would swallow him at one gulp. M. Billard injected four milligrams of dried viper poison into a dormouse with absolutely no effect. Half an hour after the injection the dormouse was nibbling an apple as if nothing had happened. The dormouse weights only two ounces, and the amount of venom he received was enough to kill eleven pounds of such animals as rabbits and guinea pigs.

Imperishable Pavement.

A new paving material devised by a French engineer consists of the iron shavings from lathes and similar machines, which are mixed with cement, making a combination which is almost indestructible. In making paving blocks according to this process a mold is filled with these iron shavings and the interstices filled with cement grout sufficiently fluid to penetrate the entire mass. The blocks thus formed are said to possess great strength and resistance to abrasion and also (what seems less credible) elasticity under blows or jarring. Tests made of such blocks are said to have shown a resistance to compression of about 150,000 pounds a square inch and at a tensile strength four times that of neat cement.—Chicago Journal.

Conducting Without Baton.

M. Wassili Safonoff, who has been conducting the Newcastle music festival, is a Russian and famous in both hemispheres as a conductor. Finding himself without his baton on one occasion, he used his hands and was so satisfied with the result that since then he has never reverted to the use of the customary stick. "Where there is no baton," he once remarked, "the players cannot be lazy, they must watch your fingers so carefully. In a few years there will be no batons." Certainly M. Safonoff, who has often conducted in London, gets wonderful results from an orchestra, but no other conductor in the first rank has yet followed his example in abandoning the baton.—London News.

Paris Wants Dog Meat.

According to a Paris paper, the prefecture of police has received numerous applications from persons desirous of selling dog meat. The permits have not been granted, for such traffic is not considered lawful. But if the number of applications continues to increase it is said that the police will have to obtain a definite decision on the subject. Horse, it is well known, is sold in continental cities, but, as the Paris authority observes, there would be an instinctive repugnance to eat the flesh of man's best friend. The flesh is eaten in China and by the Eskimos; but, like that of all carnivorous animals, it is tough.

Nice Traveling Companions.

The railway station at Bragulia, Servia, is so infested with snakes that special precautions are taken when trains stop there to prevent the reptiles from entering the compartments. An Englishwoman coming from Constantinople was appalled to find a small snake coiled around the handle of her traveling bag. The consequent search resulted in the discovery of several other snakes among the passengers' rugs.—London Standard.

A Rap at the Fresh Air Theory.

If you want to purify your blood it is of little value to inflate your chest pouter pigeon fashion. The blood in your lungs takes up just as much oxygen as your muscles call for and no more. Exercise your legs instead of your diaphragm and chest. Even the inhalation of pure oxygen in diseases of the lungs has yielded disappointing results and is gravely questioned as to its theoretical basis.—Outing Magazine.

Long and Freda Long, his wife, at the suit of The Lichtenstein Company, the same being No. 7 Judicials to the March Term, 1910, of said Court, I have seized and taken into execution, and will on the 12th Day of February,

A. D., 1910, at 11 o'clock a. m., on the premises of the First Lot herein described known as The Hotel Lot, at Friendsville, Garrett county, Maryland, offer at public sale for cash to satisfy said execution and costs the following property:

All those three certain pieces, parcels or lots of ground situate, lying and being in Friendsville, Garrett county, Maryland, described as follow, to wit:

First Piece or Lot—Beginning at a point on the South side of alley, and South 73 degrees East, 12 feet to a stone standing in County Road, and running thence South 73 degrees East, 38 feet, thence South 17 degrees West, 125 feet to North side of Maple Street, thence with North side of Maple Street, North 73 degrees West, 50 feet to a stone, thence North 17 degrees East, 70 feet to line of County road, thence by a straight line to the beginning, containing 6,000 square feet, more or less.

Second Lot—Beginning at a point on a line drawn North 73 degrees West, 38 feet, thence South 17 degrees West, 50 feet from C. V. Guard's northwest corner on Maple Street, and running thence South 17 degrees West, 100 feet, thence North 73 degrees West, about 108 feet to the the 4th line of "Look Sharp" in the River, thence with said line, down the river, North 15 degrees East, 100 feet, then South 72 degrees West, to the place of beginning.

Third Piece—Being Lot No. 16 in Block A., except 20 feet off of the rear end of said lot. This lot hereby conveyed has a frontage of 25 feet on Maple Street, and a depth of 130 feet.

Being the same lots, pieces or parcels of ground which were conveyed to the said George R. Long by Calvin L. Dean and wife by deed dated October, 12th, 1906, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 54, folio 68, &c., one of the Land Records of Garrett County, Maryland.

The first lot described above is a very desirable one for a hotel, and is improved by outbuildings though there are no improvements on the third lot. The improvements on the Second lot consist of an ice house and a large stable suitable for livery purposes.

Andrew J. Alexaneer vs. Elmer Deal, J. F. Northcraft and Lizzie Northcraft, his wife.

No. 1643 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland

The object of this bill of complaint is to set aside a deed from J. F. Northcraft to his wife, Lizzie Northcraft, dated October 19th A. D., 1909, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 59, folio 261 &c., one of the Land Records of said Garrett County, and to subject the real estate therein described to the payment of a debt due by the said J. F. Northcraft to the said Andrew J. Alexander.

The bill alleges that prior to the time said deed was executed, the said Northcraft and Deal were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of Fifty dollars, with interest from May, 1906, and that the said Elmer Deal is a non-resident of the State of Maryland, and is also insolvent.

The Bill further alleges that said deed from J. F. Northcraft to his said wife, was made in prejudice to the rights of his subsisting creditors, and was not made for a bona fide consideration, and for a pretended and simulated consideration, and that it was made for the purpose and intent to hinder, delay and defraud the creditors of the said J. F. Northcraft, and especially with the intent to hinder, delay and defraud the plaintiff in the collection of his said debt.

The prayer of this Bill is, that the said deed may be annulled, vacated and set aside, and that said property may be decreed to be sold and subjected to the payment of the plaintiff's claim.

The Bill contains the further prayer for process, and for an order of publication against said Elder Deal.

It is thereupon this 26th day of January, 1910, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff by causing a copy of the order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 25th day of February, 1910, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this Bill warning him to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor on or before the 14th day of March, next, to show cause, if any he has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

VOLUME 33. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1910. NUMBER 50

GOVERNOR CROTHERS ACTIVELY LOBBYING

For General Primary Bill—The First Batch of Appointments Sent In.

ANNAPOLIS, Feb. 8.—Legislators deserted their usual roosting places tonight. They even passed up the charms of a trolley ride to Baltimore, and those who boasted such glad rags appeared in full spiked-tailed glory at the executive mansion. The occasion was the governor's regular reception to the members of the legislature and their wives and families. The guest of honor was Senator Isidor Rayner. The members of the Garrett county delegation attended as guests.

Governor Crothers is acting as his own lobbyist for one of his own pet measures, the general primary bill. The governor spent nearly an hour prior to the convening of the legislature today in the State House corridors urging the passage of his bill among the Democrats and Republicans. In addition to his approaching the members openly, he has also summoned many of the leaders of both parties to his offices and endeavored to secure promises of support for the bill. How far the governor has succeeded will not be known until the measure comes up for final passage.

The bill proposed by Governor Crothers makes mandatory upon both parties statewide primary for all elective offices.

Mr. Marriott began circulating a petition calling a Democratic caucus on the prmiary law, but as soon as the governor heard of it, he hurried down into the corridor again and called it off. He informed Mr. Marriott in emphatic language that it is too soon for a caucus.

The governor is evidently anxious to know where he stands before that step is taken.

The list of appointments sent to the Senate last night by the governor was not the selection of the party leaders. On the contrary, it is stated upon good authority today that none of the leaders, but only a few political friends of the governor were consulted. The list of appointments may mean future trouble for the governor.

Governor Crothers sent in last night his first batch of appointments and, with few exceptions, he named officials who are now serving. the most important nomination is that of T. J. C. Williams, newspaper man and lawyer, for judge of the Juvenile Court for Baltimore city, to succeed Judge Jacob M. Moses, resigned.

Among the other appointments were the following:

Chief of the Bureau of Statistics and Information—Charles J. Fox, Baltimore county.

State Fire Marshal—Thos. J. Ewell, Baltimore.

Fish Commissioner—John H. Wade, of Washington county, for the Western Shore; Samuel J. Twilley, of Worcester, for the Eastern Shore.

The governor said he intended to send in appointments from day to day as they are made up and decided upon. The time limit expires on February 21.

Senator Wilkinson's joint resolution to investigate the condition of the State Treasury was voted down by a strict party vote in the Senate on Wednesday. The Governor stands by his statement that we are facing a million dollar deficit and Senator Gorman denies it, but the Democratic Senators are against an investigation to get at the real truth.

STATE FACES DEFICIT.

Maryland's Funded Debt Being Added To Yearly.

Discussing the treasury conditions in Maryland and the possibility of facing a deficit in revenue to meet needed requirements, the financial circular of Hambleton & Co. says:

"Conditions have reached such a stage that the State of Maryland is facing a deficit in its revenue, and, not only so, but is at each session of the Legislature adding to the funded debt of the State. The State of Maryland should have no public debt, and if its affairs were administered in a business-like manner the tax rate would be decreased to a minimum and not increased, as it promises to be at present.

"Several years ago the State adopted a policy of building roads through the issue of bonds at the expense of the taxpayers. The result has been practically the same as the system of street paving in Baltimore, fortunately now abolished, which paving consisted of detached patches of modern pavements in localities controlled by ward politicians, with the result that we have a crazy-quilt patch-work system of paving all over the city, without any reference to the general benefit of the city and its people.

"The same thing is going on now in the counties through the building of these State roads. Not only so, but these roads are costing at the rate of at least $10,000 per mile, a cost out of all reason and which, if persisted in, together with the extravagance which is now so pronounced in the Legislature, will cause the tax rate to be raised every two years, and finally will be so onerous that the people will rise up in their wrath and relegate to obscurity the party responsible. The policy of road building by the State should be stopped at once.

"There should certainly be no increase in the debt of the State for this purpose. The counties should build their own roads, and we are glad to note that Baltimore county is contemplating the issue or bonds for road-making purposes."

PRACTICAL POLITICS BEING PLAYED AT ANNAPOLIS

Kind of Legislation Democrats Are Planning.

Fearful of the retribution which they believe to be near at hand, the Democratic machine is endeavoring to fasten its tentacles upon the counties in the State in such manner as will render it difficult to dislodge them or until they are compelled to let go various schemes that have been and are still being devised at Annapolis to make certain continued control of the State, but no definite plan has as yet been reached which is wholly acceptable. The Brewington plan is regarded as too radical and will not be adopted unless as a last resort. Others are now under consideration, including that which would prevent a removal of supervisors by a Republican governor in the event of their continuing the high-handed proceedings in the Wilson law counties in defying the law.

It is possible that but for the strained relations between the executive and the leaders greater progress would have been made in the preparation of such legislation as would answer every purpose. As long, however, as the situation continues as at present nothing will be done. Perhaps some action may be taken after the appointments have been made.

Meanwhile the Democrats in Republican counties are doing some tinkering to benefit themselves. Those who succeeded by questionable methods at the last election in securing control are seeking the enactment of legislation which will enable them to hold on and prevent the Republicans from coming back into their own, while others are planning such changes in the election laws as will make it possible to disfranchise enough Republicans at the next election and have returned a Democratic majority.

Charles county is the first to ask for legislation which will insure possession to the Democrats and prevent the Republicans from registering the will of the people. The senator who owes his election to the outrageous trick ballot which prevented Republicans from voting is jamming through a bill which legislates out of office a Republican county commissioner and another who was appointed by the Governor to fill a vacancy and whose successor must be chosen at the next election and continuing in office the two Democrats who owe their election to the trick ballot and one Republican. As the terms of the two Democrats do not expire until 1915, they would hold the fort until then and the Democratic machine be in absolute control. As the Democrats have an overwhelming majority in the legislature, the bill will undoubtedly pass, the vote on last Friday against the reasonable request of Republicans to postpone action until the bill had been printed indicating a determination to ride roughshod over the rights of the minority.

During the past week Democratic leaders in Frederick county were at Annapolis endeavoring to secure the enactment of legislation which would render nugatory the Republican victory in the county last fall. They were said to have appealed to several senators to father a bill which would take from the county commissioners the appointment of road supervisors and give it to the Governor with the view of making this important work part of a political machine. Those appealed to did not take kindly to the proposition, contending it was going a little too far to override the wishes of the county's representatives in matters purely local.

It was rumored that they also urged the extension of the Wilson law to Frederick but that pending general political legislation it was not deemed wise to take it up piecemeal. The Republicans assume that if this law is made to apply to Frederick that the machine would not hesitate to go the limit to gain possession, even to the extent of imposing such ballots as were inflicted upon Somerset and Charles counties. There was also some talk of including Cecil county.

A leading Eastern Shore Republican, who was in Annapolis last week and who was advised of the schemes contemplated by the Democrats, made the prediction that if the Wilson law was extended to these two counties Democratic voters would resent the imposition by voting the Republican ticket.

Said he: "Our people won't stand for fraud. As long as their party gives to elections a semblance of fairness Democrats will stand by it, but if they put up a ballot like that in Charles and Somerset, we will sweep them out of business. The counties of Frederick and Cecil have enlightened communities which will not submit to a general disfranchisement of voters. They are jealous of their reputations and may be depended upon to resent any move that would tend to besmirch them."

Experienced as the Democratic leaders profess to be in the game of politics they have still much to learn before they are entitled to medals. They made a monumental blunder last week when they voted to lay upon the table the message of Senator Wilkinson to the House asking for a joint committee to examine the State's finances. Assuming that this was an attack on the State Comptroller and the administration of affairs in the treasury the Democrats refused to concur and voted solidly against adoption. As a matter of fact, Mr. Wilkinson had no idea of reflecting on either official. What he desired was information as to whether the construction placed on the Comptroller's report by the Governor or that by the President of the Senate was correct. The Executive had declared the treasury was facing a deficiency while Mr. Gorman insisted there would be a surplus. Here was an honest difference of opinion and inasmuch as the legislature was about to make the usual large appropriations, Mr. Wilkinson thought it wise to determine just what the conditions are. Hence his message.

If, as is claimed and as everyone believed, the accounts of the financial officers are straight and in perfect order there was nothing to fear from an investigation. The committee appointed would simply have called at the office of the Comptroller, gone over the books and obtained from the Chief Clerk an explanation in keeping with the figures, which would have set at rest all contention and enabled the General Assembly to proceed intelligently. Such a report would undoubtedly have done much toward the enhancement of the value of the State road bonds of which investors are fighting shy, especially when signed by members of the opposite political party who would surely not be parties to a whitewash.

More than that, the Democrats by appointing Republicans on this committee would have spiked one issue in the next campaign which has always figured in the platform, namely, a criticism of the conduct of the finances of the State. The report signed by Republicans would have been in the nature of an indorsement. While the benefit derived would have been distinctly political it would also have inspired confidence in the administration and would therefore have boosted the Democratic regime.

The inert brains of the Democratic managers were unequal, however, to the emergency. They have instilled in their noddles that nothing good can come from a Republican source, that is to say, nothing that would benefit the Democratic party, and so when the proposition of the St. Marys senator was put up to them they voted it down on general principals. In doing this the wise and mistrusted Democrats played right into Republican hands. If the latter had planned the more it could not have resulted more satisfactorily to them. For now that it is all over it may be stated that several of the Republican senators sat on needles until the message was laid on the table. They realized that Senator Wilkinson, who offered the resolution in good faith and not as a political move, had made it possible for the Democrats to put them in a hole and they breathed much more freely when their opponents spurned the opportunity.

Now what is the result? The Democratic party is placed in the position of having refused to permit an inspection of the public accounts and instead of allaying a suspicion the governor had aroused they strengthened it so that in the next campaign they will be called upon to explain their action.

In the meantime the question as to who is right, the Governor or President Gorman, remains unanswered.

Rules for Lent.

There is no material change in the customary observances prescribed for Lent as per the Lental Regulations which were read in all the Catholic and Episcopalian churches on Sunday. All persons more than 21 years old, unless exempt by dispensation, are required to fast, which means that only one full meal a day is allowed. Meat is permitted once on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, with the exception of the second and last Saturdays of Lent. On Sundays meat is allowed to be eaten at all meals, but on Wednesdays and Fridays meat is forbidded.

Yesterday was Ash Wednesday—the first day of Lent. Ashes were blessed in the Catholic church that day and distributed at the late mass and in the evening before and after the mass.

STATE BOARD OF FORESTRY

Recommendations Made in the Report for 1908 and 1909.

The report of the State Board of Forestry for 1908 and 1909 shows that forest surveys and studies of forest conditions have been completed in 18 of the 23 counties of the state. The forests are being used over three times as fast as they are growing. With reference to farests fires, the report says:

"Forest fires continue to be a serious menace in many sections. The damage is greatest in the mountain counties, where there are large continuous tracts of woodland, and where there is more carelessness in the matter of fires. Many of the forested mountains have been so repeatedly burned over that fires are too often accepted as the inevitable happenings following a dry season. These fires destroy the young growth, injure the larger trees, impoverish the soil and reduce the water conserving capacity of the forests. As long as forest firest are frequent and forest property unsafe, there is little inducement to practice conservative forest management. The fire damage in the central counties of the state is less than in the mountains, but here also it is a serious problem, especially along the railroads. The woodlands are cut into smaller woodlots by cleared fields, so that a fire is not likely to spread over such large areas, and in the more densely populated sections forests fires are not allowed to go unchecked to the same extent as in the mountains, where less effort is made to control them."

The board makes the following recommendations with reference to legislation:

"The appointment of forest wardens for each county at the rate of one warden for every 15,000 acres of woodland. Each warden to be commissioned by the governor on recommendation of the state forester, and to serve for four years or until his successor is duly qualified.

"Giving to the forest wardens the power of arrest without warrant in in cases of detected violation of the forest laws, and the authority to summon ablebodied men, require the use of teams and tools in extinguishing forest fires

"The expense of extinguishing forest fires to be borne half by the state and half by the county in which the fire occurred, and prompt payment required.

"The payment of an annual salary of $20 per annum to each warden for posting fire warning notices, preparing reports upon forest conditions in his district, and such other work as may be required by the state forester, such salary to be paid by the state, and to be in addition to payment for services actually rendered in extinguishing forest fires.

"Penalty for tearing down or defacing forest warning notices.

"Requiring railroads in the state to construct and maintain on each side of their rights of way suitable fire lines to prevent the spread of fires when such rights traverse woodlands or grasslands."

THE DEATH RECORD.

BABY REXRODE.

At Deer Park on Monday, of pneumonia, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Rexrode, aged five months. The funeral occurred yesterday with interment at Deer Park.

DR. FRANK WEBER.

Dr. Frank Weber, aged twenty-five years, died at the home of his mother adjoining Oakland, yesterday afternoon, after months of illness and excrutiating suffering. The deceased graduated last spring from the medical department of the University of Maryland as an honor student and shortly afterward began the practice of his profession at a point near Frostburg, Allegany county. Soon, however, disease, which he probably contracted through overwork while yet a student, made such inroads that he was compelled to give up his work, and he returned to Baltimore for treatment where an operation was performed and later he was brought to his home here where he was tenderly cared for until the end came. The funeral will occur tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock from the family residence and will be conducted by a minister from Brooklyn, N. Y.

BABY JOHNSON.

The infant child of Mr. and Mrs. William Johnson died last Monday morning and was buried Tuesday afternoon in the Oakland cemetery.

Dwelling Burned.

The dwelling house of George Smith, located on the road leading from near King's Run to Deer Park, was burned Tuesday afternoon about three o'clock during the absence of the family. The loss was total with no insurance.

WOULD MAKE THE OFFICE AN ELECTIVE ONE

Bill Relating to the Mine Inspector Introduced by Delegate Wittig.

Delegate Walter Wittig has a bill for the election of a state mining inspector. This official is now appointed by the governor. Mr Wittig's bill is as follows:

A BILL

Entitled an act to repeal and reenact with amendments Section 196 of Article No. 1 of the Code of Public Local Laws entitled "Allegany County," sub-title "Mining and Mine Inspector," as the same was enacted by Chapter 124 of the acts of 1902, and to repeal and re-enact with amendments Section 150 of Article 12 of the Public local laws title "Garrett County," sub-title "Manufacture and Mines" as the same was enacted by Chapter 124 of the Acts of 1908.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland that Section 196 of Article No. 1 of the Code of Public Local Laws, entitled "Allegany County," sub-title "Mining and Mine Inspector," and Section 150 of Article 12 of the Public Local Laws, title "Garrett County," sub-title "Manufacture and Mines" as the same was enacted by Chapter 124 of the Acts of 1902, be and the same are hereby repealed and reenacted so as to read as follows:

Section 196 of Article 1 and Section 150 of Article 12. That there shall on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in the month of November, in the year nineteen hundred and eleven be a mine inspector elected by the duly qualified voters of the counties of Garrett and Allegany, who shall hold his office for the term of two years from the first day of January, ninteen hundred and twelve, or until his successor is duly elected and qualified. The mine inspector so elected at said time shall be a resident of Allegany county and at the expiration of his term of office his successor shall be a resident of Garrett county, and thereafter the said mine inspector so to be elected shall alternately be a resident of Allegany and Garrett counties. Prior to each election held under this act there shall be a convention held in the cities of Cumberland and Oakland, alternating, for the purpose of nominating candidates upon the respective tickets for said office, delegates to which convention shall be elected in the same manner as they are elected for a Congressional convention, each county being entitled to cast five votes at said convention.

No person shall be eligible to the office of mine inspector until he shall have attained the age of thirty years. He shall possess a competent and practical knowledge of the different systems of mining and properly ventilating coal mines in said counties and the natural and constituent parts of the various gases found in coal mines, and of the various ways of expelling the same from said mines, and shall have had five years practical experience as a miner in one or both counties combined, next immediately preceding his election, and shall receive an annual salary of fifteen hundred dollars, payable quarterly by warrant of the comptroller upon the state treasury for the same. Before entering into the discharge of the duties of his office the said mine inspector shall take the oath provided in the Constitution of the state, and shall give bond in the sum of two thousand dollars with security to be approved by the Chief Judge of the Fourth Judicial Circuit of Maryland. Said mine inspector while in office shall not be interested in the operation of any mine or act as land agent, superintendent or manager of any mine; and it shall be his duty to make a report to the governor of his proceedings in office, and to set forth in such report all such information that may be proper or beneficial, and also to make such recommendations and suggestions as he may consider important as to legislation on the subject of mining.

Section 2. Be it enacted that this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

MRS. TRIPP'S CHINA TEA SET.

How It Brought Discord Among Rival Inheritants.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.]

When good old Mr. and Mrs. Tripp died within a week of each other there was, I regret to say, an immediate disagreement among their heirs over the small property left by the old people.

Such disagreements are so shamefully common now that this one might not have excited any particular interest had it not been for the somewhat peculiar nature of the article over which the cupidity of the various heirs had asserted itself.

Few indeed were the possessions Mr. and Mrs. Tripp left behind them. They did not own even the humble little brown house in which they had lived for the past ten years, and when their funeral expenses had been paid there was not a dollar left of the sum found in an old pewter teapot on the top shelf of the red cupboard in the kitchen. Frugal as they had been, it was evident that this sum represented the sum total of their savings of many years.

But Mr. and Mrs. Tripp had not always been so poor as they were at the last, and there was one of Mrs. Tripp's possessions which she had always exhibited with pride as a relic of her better days and as undeniable proof of the fact that there had been a time when she "had had a-plenty."

Over this her relatives now disputed. What was it? Only a white china tea set, each piece of which had a broad gold band around the rim.

"It's pure chany," Mrs. Tripp would often say, with a thrill of pride, as she held a saucer or a plate before the eyes of her visitors. "See how thin it is. You kin look right through it. Solomon give it to me on our tenth wedding day. He was in the grocery business then an' doin' well, an' he'd gone to New York to buy goods, an' when he come home he brung this, all packed so carefully in straw that they wa'n't a piece broke, but one of the sass dishes was cracked a little, an' I never used it none, so it ain't never broke either. I think the world an' all of my chany."

The dearly prized "chany" had for years graced an old fashioned whatnot in a corner of Mrs. Tripp's best room. There was nothing else on the whatnot but two big "chany" dogs, one a reddish brown and the other a dark blue, which looked as though they felt themselves responsible for the safety of the dishes and intended being faithful to their trust.

Mr. and Mrs. Tripp had no children, but they had some relatives—cousins and second cousins and more remote connections. These relatives were numerous, however. Just how numerous they were was made manifest when it came to dividing the few personal belongings of the old people.

The "heirs" met at the house on their way home from the funeral. Hardly were they assembled when Nancy Johnson, own cousin to Mrs. Tripp, said:

"Of course you all know that my father an' Betty Tripp's mother was own brother an' sister, an' that made me an' Betty own cousins. So it seems only fair that I should at least have my choice of her things, speshly

POLITELY BUT FIRMLY REFUSING ADMITTANCE.

when I might claim 'em all. But I ain't one to act selfish, an' I'm willin' you should all have your sheer of what's left after I've packed up Betty's chany tea set an'"—

"I knowed that was what you was goin' to say," interrupted Mrs. Cephas King, "an' I can tell you that Solomon Tripp was my own cousin, an' the tea things was as much his as they was Betty's, an' I've as much right to 'em as you have!"

A thin, sharp voice came from a corner of the room.

"Betty Tripp told me ag'in an' ag'in," it said, "that she wanted me to have them dishes when she was done with 'em. She said"—

"She told me the same thing," interposed Mrs. Cyrus Masterson, who was only a third cousin.

"I took more care of her endurin' her last sickness than anybody else!" interrupted Second Cousin Beulah Hovey, "an' one day we was talkin' 'bout the chany, an' Betty says, says she, 'Beulah,' says she, 'bout that chany tea set,' says she, 'I'd as leave you had it as any one an' a little leaver.'"

"Them's the very words she said to my wife," put in Mr. Ezra Simmons, a little old man with a feminine face and voice. "An' Betty was a own cousin of mine."

"An' of mine!" said a tall woman in rusty black near the whatnot on which the coveted china stood.

So the strife continued until there was no possibility of an amicable adjustment of the claims of the various claimants. They finally left the house and the china in possession of Miss Selina Sharpe, a lady of about fifty years, who, although an own cousin of Mr. Tripp, had put forward no claim to the china, declaring that she had no wish to claim it.

"But there's one thing certain," said Miss Sharpe as she closed the door behind the last of the "heirs," "there shan't one of 'em step their foot into this house again to touch the chany or anything else until it's settled by law who has a right to 'em. I've rented the house myself of its owner, an' I won't have my doors darkened by any of them."

Miss Sharpe adhered to this resolution, politely but firmly refusing admittance to several of the claimants who called during the following week "to talk it over" with her and possibly to carry the china home in triumph.

Besides the china, there was nothing among Mr. and Mrs. Tripp's few poor belongings that the relatives coveted, all of the furniture of any value having been sold or given in payment of a few bills that came in after the funeral.

Accordingly Miss Sharpe was soon left in undisturbed possession of what was left, and the china, guarded by the faithful dogs, still rested on the old walnut whatnot three weeks after the old couple to whom it had given pleasure had been laid away in the little cemetery behind the village church.

Mrs. Cephas King and Nancy Johnson had been next door neighbors and very warm friends up to the time the dispute over the china arose, but now, alas, they scornfully passed by without a word or smile of recognition when they met, and the King children were forbidden to have anything at all to do with the Johnson children.

Mrs. Cyrus Masterson lived directly across the street from Beulah Hovey, and so frequent had been the friendly, pleasant little calls the ladies had made upon each other that a smoothly worn path led from one house to the other. Now all was changed. The path was wholly disused, and Mrs. Masterson carefully gathered up her skirts when she met Mrs. Hovey on the street lest they should suffer contamination by coming into contact with those of her once beloved neighbor.

Mrs. Ezra Simmons returned a certain basque pattern she had borrowed of Selina Sharpe with a note stating that "in consequence of the course you have seen fit to pursoo in relations to my husband's own dear dead cuzzen's chiny tea things, which now rightfully belongs to me, I return the inclosed bask pattern an' would thank you for my cup cake reseet an' my polynay pattern, not desiring that anything of yours should remain in my possession, an' visa versy, an' that we do not speak to each other from this date."

So it was that there were discord and enmity where there had once been peace and harmony. Not one of the contending claimants condescended to speak to any of her rivals to the inheritance.

A month had passed and the bad feeling was at its height when Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Simmons one evening concluded to spend an hour with their friends Mr. and Mrs. Deacon Drewe. The deacon and his wife were not at home when Mr. and Mrs. Simmons arrived, but Sally, the maidservant, said that she was expecting them every moment and invited the callers to wait until their return.

They had waited in the parlor a few moments when the bell rang and Sally was heard to tell other callers that her master and mistress would be in very soon and to invite them also to come in and wait. Directly afterward Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Masterson were ushered in. Seeing the Simmonses, the newcomers haughtily withdrew to a corner of the parlor and sat down in silence.

A third ring of the bell and Mrs. Beulah Hovey appeared at the parlor door. She gave the previous occupants of the parlor a stony stare and then went to sit stiffly erect in the center of a sofa, where she seemed engaged in studying intently the pattern of the paper on the wall.

Perfect silence ensued for a moment when the bell again rang and Nancy Johnson's voice was heard at the door. When Mr. and Mrs. Drewe followed all these callers into the parlor, strange as it may seem, they had with them Mrs. Cephas King, who was too courageous a woman to be in the least daunted by what she beheld. She calmly seated herself in a comfortable rocking chair and composedly returned Mrs. Nancy Johnson's stare.

While Mr. and Mrs. Drewe were vainly endeavoring to start a general conversation the village fire bell rang for the first time in many months. The fire company consisted of those who could be first in getting to a small room in the rear of the postoffice, where there were six fire extinguishers and a hand reel and hose.

The entire population of the village was in the street in less than five minutes after the first sounding of the bell, and it was soon known that the fire was in the little brown house lately occupied by Mr and Mrs. Tripp, but now in the possession of Miss Selina Sharpe.

The first comers found the present tenant of the cottage flying wildly around, throwing her few belongings into the street and screaming "Fire!" at the top of her voice.

When the occupants of Mr. Drewe's parlor reached the cottage they found the roof in flames and smoke pouring from the windows, while the fire company was still in the distance.

"Has my chany been got out yet?" shrieked Nancy Johnson.

"Your chany?" said Cyrilla Mills, who was only a fourth cousin.

"I'd say 'my chany,'" said Beulah Hovey.

"It won't be anybody's if it ain't got out o' there right off!" shrieked Ezra Simmons.

At that instant the men appeared in the smoking doorway trying to balance the whatnot and its contents between them. The blue dog toppled over and fell to pieces on the stone step as they reached the door. The brown one threatened to do the same, and the cups and other dishes were swaying unsteadily from side to side.

"Be careful of my dishes!" cried Mrs. Mills.

"Your—oh!"

"Oh!"

"O-o-o-h!"

"If that ain't too bad!"

One of the men had stepped off the little porch sooner than the other, thus tilting the whatnot forward and sending every piece of the cherished china down with a crash on the brick walk before the door.

The several heirs looked at each other in silence for a moment. Then Beulah Hovey suddenly cried out, with a hysterical little laugh, "Well, what geese we be!"

"So we air, Beuly—so we air!" acquiesced Ezra Simmons. "I'd never have made any fuss about the old chany only for Emmeline making me do it."

This frank confession of the ascendency of Mrs. Simmons created a laugh, in which every one joined.

There were several waggish fellows in the crowd who turned the occasion into one of such merriment that even grim Mrs. Johnson was found chuckling half aloud, while Thyrza Masterson and Mrs. Simmons, being at heart good natured and keenly susceptible to even poor wit, laughed louder than any one else and walked home together side by side in the most amicable manner. That was the end of all ill feeling over the china as well as the end of the china itself.

An Australian Blowhole.

A great natural curiosity is the "blowhole" on the Australian coast near Klama, in the colony of New South Wales. It may be found in the middle of a rocky headland running out into the sea. With each successive breaker the ocean spray is sent shooting up into the air, sometimes from 300 to 400 feet, accompanied by a rumbling noise as of distant thunder, which can be heard for miles. This "blowhole" consists of a perpendicular cavity, nearly circular, with a diameter of about ten yards, and has the appearance of being a crater of an extinct volcano. It is connected with the ocean by a cave about a hundred yards in length. Into this cave waves rush during stormy weather, and as the cave extends some distance farther into the rock than the "blowhole" on the entrance of each wave this hole becomes full of compressed air, which, when the tension becomes too great, blows the water with great force up the perpendicular opening.—London Standard.

The Giraffe's Timidity.

A giraffe is very timid on hearing slight sounds, but is indifferent to loud ones. A writer in the Leisure Hour says: "Noisy sounds, like a man walking by with hobnail boots, it does not notice, but a lady coming in with hardly more sound than the rustling of her dress makes it start, with pricked ears and eyes distended. We remember well, after a terrible explosion of gunpowder on a barge on the canal, asking the keeper of the giraffes of that day how they had taken it, and he said he was surprised how very little notice they took. They jumped to their feet, but almost at once lay down again when they found nothing happened. 'But,' he added, 'if I were at nighttime to creep along that gallery in my socks they would be so scared that I believe they would dash themselves to bits. They fear the lurking foe.'"

THEN AND NOW.

Some Interesting Figures About Farm Supplies.

An Iowa Granger Compares Prices Received and Paid Now With Those of Thirty Years Ago and Says One Can Pay For a Farm Easier Now Than Then.

At a meeting of Jones Mill grange, in Iowa, C. H. Johnson read a paper on the opportunities and possibilities which are offered the young man of today who is willing to take up an honorable employment and enter upon his life work as a progressive farmer. The superior inducements offered at this time are compared to the conditions that existed from twenty to thirty-five years ago.

"The purchasing power of our products at that time," said Mr. Johnson, "and the prices we paid for the necessities in the home and on the farm and the rates of interest on borrowed money all combined to make life on the farm a most serious problem and indeed caused many a young man to leave the farm and seek the city in hopes that he might secure a paying position with less effort and shun what to him seemed a life of drudgery.

"Let us now make a comparison of prices of farm products and cost of farm supplies," continued the speaker. "Thirty years ago we could in Iowa buy ten yards of calico for $1, taking forty pounds of butter; today the same amount of butter will buy 200 yards. Twenty-nine years ago you paid $17 for 100 pounds of barbed wire, which took over 100 bushels of oats; today 100 bushels of oats will buy 1,200 pounds of wire and the staples thrown in. Thirty years ago we paid $225 for a harvester, taking 450 bushels of good wheat; today the same amount of wheat will buy four self binders. Thirty-five years ago the wife took a trip on the railroad a distance of 400 miles, round trip, which cost $16, which took 300 dozen of eggs; today the same number of eggs will carry you 5,000 miles, with better accommodations. Twenty-eight years ago a first class work harness cost $33, which took 1,000 pounds of pork; today the same pork will buy two sets of the same quality of harness.

"Shoes are some higher, but you can buy today from the products of the farm three pairs where you could buy one pair thirty years ago.

"Thirty years ago you paid for shoeing a pair of horses $4, which took sixteen bushels of corn; today the same corn will shoe five horses.

Thirty years ago a bill of lumber on $1,000 for one year took 4,000 bushels of corn. The same bill, which today is $1,500, will take 2,500 bushels of corn, leaving 1,500 bushels of corn to sell, bringing $900, which you still have left after being robbed of the $500 advance. Now, this you can donate to the poor or buy more land.

"Thirty years ago you paid $100 interest on $1,000 for one year, which took 400 bushels of corn; today the same corn will pay interest on $4,800 for one year.

"I contend, all things considered, that you can buy a farm at the advanced price of today and pay for it easier than you could thirty years ago."

Co-operation In Kansas.

The Patrons' Co-operative bank at Olathe is making money, pleasing the stockholders and its patrons. Its stock is worth $300 per share, par being $100, and none of it is on the market. Its capital stock is $50,000 paid up, $50,000 surplus, and its deposits amount to $435,692, secured by the guarantee fund of the state of Kansas. It pays a dividend of 30 per cent per annum. The Patrons' Fire and Tornado association carries risks amounting to $10,000,000; net gain from Jan. 1 to Nov. 1 was $1,660,000 in risks, $200,000 more than was written during the first ten years of its existence. The cost of insurance has averaged $2 per thousand in the face of great losses.

Farmer Versus Banker.

A feature of the Williams Grove (Pa.) picnic last summer was a debate between Leslie M. Shaw, former governor of Iowa and ex-secretary of the treasury, and John A. McSparran of the Pennsylvania state grange legislative committee upon the grange's position upon a number of public questions. From authentic reports reaching this office the farmer proved more than a match for the banker, completely demolishing the ex-cabinet member's argument against direct nominations, direct legislation and election of United States senators by direct vote.—National Stockman.

A Profitable Enterprise.

The Johnson County (Kan.) Co-operative association has, from the small beginning in 1876 with a capital of $900, at the end of its thirty-second year increased its capital to $100,000 and has made sales to the amount of $7,226,003.44, with a net profit to the stockholders of $471,919.82.

Corn In Cornerstone.

In laying the cornerstone of one of the new college buildings at the Missouri station a perfect ear of corn was placed in the cornerstone. It would be interesting to know whether those who open that stone generations hence will have improved on that corn.

FOR TRADE AT HOME

Things That Lead to Success In Country Stores.

INDIVIDUALITY IS A FACTOR.

Small Merchant Who Depends Upon Others to Run His Business Will Prove a Failure—Question of Buying Stock Important.

After all, individuality counts in business as in other things. System is necessary, as are all the mechanical aids, but above and beyond these success or failure depends on the man. The personal equation cannot be neglected. Mere rules will never take the place of the character, manner, method, charm, magnetism and intimate touch with customers that belong to the merchant himself. This is true even of the great department stores of the cities. One man succeeds, while another fails, yet their outer methods, the mere machinery of their business, are not largely different, at least so far as appearances go. It is the animating spirit, the soul behind the machine, that in the last analysis is the determining factor. There are frequent little turning points in a business as well as in a nation where a slight change of direction, a feather's weight in the scales, may be decisive. It is here that the individual counts. Emerson has said that an institution is "the lengthened shadow of a man," and it is equally true that a business concern reflects the nature of some dominant personality. This is especially true of the village or country store. In it the merchant comes into personal touch with his customers; he buys goods, arranges the stock, directs the advertising and shapes his business in a hundred ways. His spirit animates it. He alone is the arbiter of its fate. He determines its success or failure.

In the last analysis the winning of home trade depends on the individual merchant. There are certain general rules that can be laid down, certain methods that can be outlined, certain suggestions that can be made, but beyond these the merchant himself is the trade winner and trade holder. If he has the knack of it, the know of it, he will win in spite of catalogue houses, city competition, rivals in business and all other obstacles. His energy, his methods of buying, of cutting corners, of keeping accounts, of displaying goods, of advertising, of telling his customers the truth, of winning their confidence and friendship, of selling and buying for cash or as nearly so as possible—all these things and many more that are peculiarly his own will determine what sort of a business he builds up and maintains.

This line of thought was suggested by a sentence from an address of Medford Walls of Church Hill, Md., on "How to Conduct a Country Store." Mr. Walls deals with his subject in such a sensible manner that his talk is commented on and largely quoted by James C. Henry in the Cleveland Leader. Here is the sentence that struck my own eye:

"Back of all rules that may be laid down there must be a certain individuality, and so far as my observation goes I find it true that the man who does not run his own business, but leaves it solely in the hands of his clerks, will either not make a success or else will soon have none to run."

The clerk in the big department store is, for the vast majority, the only point of contact that is had with "the powers that be." And likewise in the country store the clerk is second in importance only to the proprietor. For this reason Mr. Walls insists that the small merchant should have "as experienced and capable help as the business will justify."

And the practice once upon a time so largely in vogue of exaggerating the quality of goods is now relegated to the past, along with haphazard and uncouth arrangement of the stock. Modern store fixtures, with their accompanying cleanliness, have replaced the former, or should, and "it is better to miss a sale than to have a customer tell us we have misrepresented" is now the rule of business of the successful merchant, whether his store is a ten story building or a single room at "the crossroads."

In his advice Mr. Walls lays emphasis on the question of buying, which by some is said to be of more importance than being able to sell.

He says: "We will never be able to buy to the best advantage until we have established a reputation for payments."

Another condition which the "new" country merchant has completely overturned is the matter of credit. His prototype almost without exception followed the "unlimited" plan. Six months was probably the average time before "John Smith" would settle his account, or it might be a year.

But this was not business according to the modern meaning of the term. "A customer ought not to expect it," says Mr. Walls.

Advising the country merchant to advertise liberally, Mr. Walls declares that the time has come when he must follow out some system in keeping count of his expenses and profits. It is as much a part of the new era as is the discarding of the "free lunch" cracker barrel.

This system of keeping account of everything that has to do with the business and being able to lay one's finger on any detail, however trivial it may seem at first sight, is one of the keynotes of "How to Conduct a Country Store Successfully."

THE PROBLEM.

DO we like winter?
Are we four flushing
Or in dead earnest.
Then, in our gushing,
Or would we rather
Send it a-kiting,
Trade it for weather
Not so exciting?

Is it the weather
We would have chosen?
Are we enraptured
When we are frozen,
Or are we feeling
When we declare it
Such an allurement
We could not spare it?

It is so healthy,
So says the fable.
But how we shun it
When we are able,
When we are certain
It is a comer
Buying a ticket
Routed for summer!

Beautiful winter,
Lovely as ever,
But from its charmings
Gladly we sever,
Leaving to love it
Those who can only
Stay round and bear it,
They won't be lonely.

Clever.

"Do you know how to manage a woman?"

"Sure."

"How?"

"First find out just what she is bent on doing."

"Well?"

"Then enter into an elaborate explanation of how to do just that thing and insist on her doing it."

"Then what?"

"Then want? Why, man, she will be so mad that she will do something else, but you never can tell just what."

Explained.

"Women certainly are the most unreasonable creatures. I wonder why."

"It is quite necessary."

"Necessary?"

"Yes; that they be unreasonable, not having any use for reason."

"How is that?"

"Most of their dealings are with men, aren't they?"

A Little Higher.

"How is he getting along with his study of the English language?"

"He is making fair progress."

"The last time I heard him he talked through his nose."

"He has got over that."

"That's good."

"Yes. Now he talks through his hat."

Method In It.

"How carefully Brown avoids temptation!"

"Yes, of a certain kind."

"He keeps clear over on the other side of the street from it, doesn't he?"

"Yes; the more tempting things are that way."

Cautious.

"Jones has never spoken an unkind word to his wife."

"He must be a model husband."

"Well, he found out the day after he was married that she had taken boxing lessons."

Not Necessary.

"I just can't tell you girls apart."

"Can't you?"

"No."

"Really?"

"To save my soul I can't."

"Well, tell us together then. What is it you want to tell us?"

Excruciating.

"How dreadfully pained that fellow looks!"

"Yes. Funny, isn't it?"

"How can you say it's funny?"

"Because that's the way he laughs."

No Relation.

"Well, how do you like Billy?"

"I thought you said he was a kissing bug."

"Isn't he?"

"He is a humbug."

Which?

"He is a man of good deeds."

"At the county recorder's or the recording angel's?"

GREAT THINGS ARE BEING PLANNED

The Business of Optioning Coal Land Is Booming.

A correspondent writes thus to the Confluence (Pa.) News:

The optioning of coal lands through this vicinity has been steadily going on and now it may be said the work is about completed. The financial interests back of this big merger is Clarkson & Co., bankers, of New York city. They have agreed to underwrite and take over the whole issue of bonds covering the purchase of over 100,000 acres of coal lands and coal properties between here and Kendall, Md. This will include the Huff Co.'s mines, holdings and railroads, and the Kutz estate and its holdings and options; all the mineral rights and mines on the Whites Creek branch of A. W. Cook & Co., the Listonburg Coal Co., Elk Lick Coal Co., the Somerset Fuel Co., and the Smith Mevers & Co. mines at Anspach.

It is the intention to build a large dam on the Yough above Kendall sufficient to generate a water power of 250,000 horsepower and to transmit electric power from there over a radius of fifty miles for manufacturing industries of all kinds, borough lighting and heating, street car service, etc., and as the company would use this electric power in the operation of their mines and roads they would be in a position to furnish this service to consumers at a low price and at a handsome profit to the company. The mines taken over by the combine are to be enlarged and other contemplated improvements as arranged are to be installed immediately and these orders are being carried out under the directions of the New York Co.

The Ursina & North Fork R. R. is to be extended in a northerly direction into Somerset county, opening up a virgin territory hitherto untapped and will also be extended southerly with a branch up the Whites Creek so as to have a connection with the proposed new line of the Western Maryland road. The said branch is to be extended on up the Yough valley so as to tap the coal fields which are being taken over by the new company. The connection with the B. & O. and the Western Maryland extension will place the new company in a very advantageous position as they will have their own engines and crews to take care of their own business on their own lines and will not be dependent in this respect on the B. & O. or the Western Maryland. The motive power which will most likely be used is the electric third rail system. The several mines now in the combine are to be enlarged to their fullest capacity so as to release a large tonnage immediately and other mines are to be opened up as quickly as the engineers may consider feasible.

The name of the company has not been settled on yet, but the incorporating papers are being prepared under the laws of the State of Delaware and will probably be known a. the West Pennsylvania, Maryland Railroad and Coal Co. It is reported that the average price to be paid for the land taken over is $25 per acre.

The main office of the company will be at No. 1 Broadway, New York, and the vice president, general manager and superintendent will be located in Confluence, where suitable office buildings will be erected for their accommodation. It is reported that all the arrangements pertaining to the taking over of all the properties now held on option, and some yet to be optioned, will all be closed up by April 1st.

Clarkson & Co., the underwriting bankers, are in a position to take over the whole bond issue themselves and will probably do so though the well known bankers, Lee Higginson & Co., of Boston, have asked for half of the allotment.

OUR SOUTHERN LETTER.

If a Man can Stand the Climate of Pennsylvania He Will Have no Trouble with that of North Carolina.

A western Pennsylvania man writes me an interesting letter—interesting for the question it asks. The first question that strikes me is whether people from the North can stand the climate here. That is interesting because it shows what a singular misconception exists in the north as to the climate of the South.

I am of the impression that North Carolina has in some sections the best climate found in the United States, and that impresion comes from a familiarity with the most of the States through actual residence. We never have the extreme heat that is felt in California, but because California was discovered by Pennsylvania people when nobody was figuring on climate no one in Pennsylvania thinks of California climate except to suppose it is the only real good climate in the world. The truth is that the climate beats California completely. We never have the exhausting hot weather that prevails in summer in California, nor the dreadful cold fogs that roll in from the ocean during California nights.

In California I never put my overcoat away summer or winter, for I expect to wear it every evening that I went down town in San Francisco. You can see a man there with his straw hat on at the same that he wears his overcoat, and his neighbor with him may be wearing a fur coat. A man comes up the street with his thin duck coat on in the afternoon, and to go out after supper he puts his overcoat on top of his duck coat. You see women with fans talking with women with furs on.

Here we have a short mild winter and a long agreeable summer, the extreme of heat not great, and not many not days in a season, and the most of them not as uncomfortable as the hot days of summer in Pennsylvania. The most uncomfortable summer temperature I have see in a good while was during a few days in Pittsburg and Philadelphia a couple of years ago in June, and I was glad to get back to North Carolina from the oppressive heat of those places.

Here we have a dry atmosphere, and a dry air is not an uncomfortably hot one. The average man from Pennsylvania kicks at the weather here when he comes. Some do not but many do. That is human nature. When I fall in with a stranger from Pennsylvania, Georgia, Iowa, or any other state, I am disappointed if he does not at once begin to show me how much better things are where he came from. But most of them after they have stayed here a little while confess that they would not go back to the terrible cold winters of the North for anything.

To answer my friend's questions, this is a climate that no man need be afraid of for a minute. The man who can stand Pennsylvania weather need never fear the weather of North Carolina. His health will be better here, and his children will have better health, and his wife will have better health. This is so because they can be out of doors more, and their vitality is not exhausted in fightiug the fierce cold of winter.

This is one of the best watered regions of the world, for it is a sandy country, and the whole country is a gigantic filter. We have a better rainfall than in Pennsylvania, and the rain is better tributed through out the season. Droughts, such as prevailed up there during the summer, our people here cannot understand.

The country in my neighborhood was originally a pine timber region, from which most of the pine has been removed, leaving various sorts of hard wood. The land is slightly hilly, of a sandy character with a clay subsoil, different from any western Pennsylvania soils and must be handled differently,

Cotton is the foremost crop of this section, although to the north of my place fruit is decidedly the leading speciality. But cotton is extending its range, and in a few years I think almost every farm south of mine will be a cotton farm while fruit will continue to grow in favor further northward, as the character of the soil changes in my vicinity, the land to the south having a heavier clay basis and that to the northward more sand.

Other crops that are raised are hay, in which we can beat Pennsylvania, corn, oats, potatoes and sweet potatoes, peanuts and various things.

The best section of the State for a man to go depends wholly on his individual likes. I like this section better than any other. Up toward Charlotte and Greensboro more wheat and grain is raised, partly because that section is out of the cotton belt and partly because it is better adapted to grain. Farther south more trucking is done; largely because the sand is warm and early. To my notion the best farm section of the State is the land in the county adjoining my county or perhaps the next county beyond, but as the ground gets lower down that way I do not like it quite so well.

Then I like to live where I do because there are a lot of people here from Pennsylvania, where I came from, and I had my feet wet too often in the muddy waters of the Allegheny river to wholly forget the land that grew up with me. I wouldn't let my Pennsylvania friend infer that I am not content with my Southern neighbors, for he will never find a more considerate and kindly people than these about us who are native to the State. And that can be said of every Southern community I was ever in and I have been a citizen of two different Southern States and a resident of several.

Farms sell for almost any price, from five dollars an acre for wild land up to a hundred, or from about the same price for pieces with patches cleared up to thousands. Good farms as a rule are not for sale. The reason is obvious. The man who owns them would rather have his farm than be obliged to go out to make a new one.

Now this is the way I have answered the man. And in addition I told him that he must come here, if he comes, expecting to find farming different than he finds it in Pennsylvania, and prepared to learn new ways and new customs in dealing with his crops. If he will come and see for himself he will get the only correct ideas of the possibilities for him. It is not a question of what the country will do, but of whether he will like a country different from the one he is accustomed to and where methods are different. Incidentally he must also consider whether his family will take kindly to moving to a new country. This disease they call homesickness. I have seen it in pretty severe form at times and while it does not often prove fatal, it does sometimes but the worst form of it is where it hangs on and leaves a sequel of discontent and discouragement. You recollect so intelligent a man as General Sheridan said that if he owned perdition and Texas he would rent Texas and live in the other place. Yet Texas is the satisfied home of more people than any other state in America with just five exceptions. So you see it is a matter largely of where you live and what you think of the country.

CUPID'S GOLD MINE CLOSED

Postoffice Department Rudely Busts Up Hopes of Many Lovers.

The cold-blooded postoffice inspectors have got to a point where they interfere with the search for soul mates by lonely women, languishing from psychic hunger. There is the case of Alice Peterson, of Johnstown, Pa., who was barred several days ago from the use of the mails merely because she employed modern business methods, including advertising in newspapers, to secure a new husband.

Alice, according to a statement sent out by the postoffice department, now has a perfectly legal husband, but she advertised for another. The cases when Alice's correspondents looked good to her, she wrote asking them to send her the price of getting from Johnstown to their place of residence, and when she got the money she failed to seek the society of her would-be soul mate. She just hung on to the money.

In explanation Alice said she wanted to try, try again, until she found exactly the right man. Then, she declared, she meant to return all the money she had received from the other men and cleave only to the ultimate eligible.

The inspectors had a hard time getting evidence, as the men who sent her money and were then left waiting at the train on which Alice did not come, were reluctant to have their names used in the case. One man was found at Maybury, Pa., who consented to help the inspectors. He sent Alice $7.50 to pay her fare from Johnstown to Maybury, but she never came. Another man living away out at Eugene, Oregon, who claimed to have given up $110 to Alice, also gave the postoffice inspectors a lift.

BALLOT FRAUDS STIR PUBLIC.

The crooked work of over-zealous Democratic partisan Supervisors in certain counties, encouraged by the Wilson law, which gives wide latitude for tricks, is slowly but surely arousing fair minded men of all parties to the seriousness of the situation. Popular government is today at an end in a number of counties of Maryland, and in other counties there is no longer any restraint upon crooked work, except the character of some supervisors, who will not stoop to unfair methods. The Wilson law enables partisan Supervisors without principle to disfranchise thousands of voters and there is no hope of better things, except an appeal to the manhood of the State to see to it that our elections shall be conducted honestly and fairly in every part of Maryland. The circulation, for public information, of the trick ballot used in Charles county, with a view to arousing public opinion, is effectively bringing home to the people the truthfulness of the charge of fraud and prominent Democrats are joining with Republicans in forming organizations to work to put an end to this disgrace to our State. This is a question far above party—it is one of common honesty and square dealing. The Democratic party cannot carry this load of iniquity, because there are too many adherents of that party who believe in a square deal. When once convinced that all the talk of trick ballots is true, they will make short work of those responsible fof them.

UNDERSTANDING ONE ANOTHER

We have all, perhaps unconsciously, formed estimates of our friends and imagine that we understand them—their tastes, inclinations, disposition and characteristics, and, we might almost say, their idiosyncrasies. We are willing to make allowance for the latter and for the embarrassment caused by some decided eccentricity on the part of a friend by dismissing the subject with the careless comment, "That's only his way; he doesn't mean anything." Often, however, the very trait of character for which we endeavor to apologize really covers a degree of feeling the depths of which we have never sounded. It is not to be denied that we all have our pecularities in greater or less degree; where they spring from and why they have never been conquered is written deep in the hearts only of their possessors, who alone know the secret embarrassment their existence causes and the unavailing efforts made to overcome them. In like manner one person is not always able to read aright another's character in all its essential details. He may understand that character to a certain extent and believe he has read clear through to its very core, but even in this day of enthusiastic friendships and freedom of thought and speech there is scarcely a person, notwithstanding the prodigality of friendship he may bestow, who does not withhold some confidence, or some depth of feeling too sacred even for the most intimate relationship.

WHY THE PUBLIC IS BEGINNING TO WORRY.

The effort made by some of the Democratic leaders to allay public fear in regard to conditions at Annapolis would be more successful if we could forget what has happened in the past. When people have been deceived again and again and still again, you can't expect them to be satisfied because somebody says "there is no need to worry" and insists that "the Democratic party is all right."

Apprehension for instance, that a primary election law may not be passed is based not only upon reports from Annapolis, alleging that certain leaders are bitterly opposed to it, but upon the record of the party in the last Legislature. You can't stop people from worrying by assuring them that "the Democratic party keeps its pledges" when there is staring them in the face evidence that it does nothing of the kind. Never were more explicit pledges given than those of the Democratic party two years ago to enact a State-wide direct primary and to permit the people to indicate by a direct vote their choice for the United States Senate. Both pledges were repudiated boldly and defiantly.

With this exhibit of what a political party can do and will do in the way of breaking pledges, is there cause to wonder that there is fear the same thing will be done again? Certainly distrust is not dispelled by the amazing promptness with which the promise of the party platform to conduct the business of the Legislature without the scandalous extravagance which has heretofore characterized it was broken.

STATE HOUSE DOINGS

The practical politicians who guide the destiny of the Democratic party in this state are indisputably in position to obtain from the controlling majorities of the legislature just what they desire in way of political legislation. The indications are plain that unfair—unscrupulously unfair—legislation of a partisan nature is in process of incubation. It was thought four years ago that the trick-ballot law constituted the limit to which the Democratic bosses will dare to go in their defiant determination to grab the state and make of it a fixed asset for themselves. At the following session, however, this election-stealing scheme was extended to two additional counties, and now there are floating rumors of a purpose in contemplation to push the trick game into other counties. If not by the hook of a general disfranchising law, by the crook of manipulated ballots the Democratic bosses are determined to make their dominance permanent.

More than one-third of the session is over, but scarcely anything in the way of results is apparent. The political legislation will, according to preredent, be rushed through expeditiously when once the supervising powers have determined just what they need in their business. Having let down the bars to the payroll padders, there was no particular reason to expect that the economy propagandism would be given any after-attention. How gratifying and reassuring it is, therefore, to find that some of the House members who voted for that padded payroll grab, involving at least $40,000, have had their scruples stirred over the extravagant overcharges in a printing bill of $198. The State House atmosphere is not exactly surcharged, hovever, with enthusiasm for economy propositions.

Letter From Oklahoma.

KAW CITY, Okla., Jan. 26, 1910.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:—I am in Oklahoma among the Indians on a pleasure trip. I left Yoder on the 20th and came to Silverdale, Kansas, where I spent a few days with relatives and sight-seeing, leaving Tuesday morning in company with my cousin Philip Lish for Kaw City, Okla., located twenty-five miles south of Silverdale on the Kaw Indian Reservation. We traveled on horseback over the rolling prairie, not seeing any dwelling houses for a distance of fifteen miles, which brought to mind the time when the wily redskins were roaming these same prairies and fighting to keep back the white settlers, but little by little they were forced back until they now have only the land allotted them by the government.

Across the Arkansas river from Kaw City is an Indian village named Washunga, in honor of their head chief. We visited this village and for the first time I saw an Indian in blanket and moccasin. An interesting but not a pretty figure.

We next came to the home of John W. Irons, who came here from Maryland thirty-one years ago, and is now a prosperous farmer and rancher at this place. He farms about 200 acres and grazes over 700 acres, having fifty-one head of horses and mules and at times over five hundred head of Texas cattle. One would never get tired listening to Mr. Irons tell of his adventures and chases on the frontier.

This is an ideal country for the farmer and cattleman: Good water, rich soil and an excellent climate. At present the weather is warm and dry, with an occasional frost. Potatoes, wheat, corn and alfalfa are the principal crops, and each one yields well in this section.

We also called at the home of Jesse Harvey, another Garrett countian, located at Silverdale, Kansas.

While the people in this part of the West are rather rough in their way they are kind hearted and will help any one in need.

We will start on our return trip in about an hour, after spending a couple of very pleasant days in Oklahoma.

My address is Yoder, Kansas.

A. W. KILLIUS.

BITTINGER.

On last Monday morning the mercury stood at twelve degrees below zero at some places in this section, that being the coldest for the winter.

Mrs. Mary Ann Durst, of Negro Mountain, died at the home of her son, Mr. George Durst, on last Sunday evening, aged about seventy-five years.

Miss Lizzie Orendorf, assistant teacher in our public school, was unable to take charge of her school on Monday of this week, on account of illness.

Silas Platter is confined to his bed at this writing by an attack of rheumatism. Dr. Robinson, of Grantsville, is attending him.

William Glotfelty, of near McHenry, was a business caller in this village last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Amos H. Reckner and their little son John, of North Glade, spent part of last week with friends and relatives at this place.

Miss Laura Fazenbaker has accepted a position in the home of J. Turner Lohr.

Edith, the infant daughter of Prof. and Mrs. Beahm, of this place was taken seriously ill, on Thursday night of last week, but at this writing the child is improving.

C. E. Ellithorpe, Jacob Brenneman and Harry Wiley, of this place, were business visitors to Oakland last week.

Ground Hog day was bright and clear and if his Hogship saw his shadow and hopes to maintain his prestige as a prophet, we will have six weeks yet of winter.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Rathbun, who have been in Baltimore for two weeks, returned home Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. R. had been in a hospital and returns with every indication of a permanent cure.

The scarlet fever and dyphtheria scare in Loch Lynn has all passed away.

The ice harvest at the lake was again resumed Tuesday. About three hundred cars have been loaded for the B. & O. railroad, over one thousand tons stored in the Association ice house and all the private ice houses in the Park and Loch Lynn filled with the finest quality of ice.

Mrs. Adam Long is still quite ill and suffers greatly.

Mr. Levi Echard is still confined to his home from injuries sustained to his hip by a fall on the ice several weeks ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Willett, who have been away most of the winter, have returned to their home in the Park.

Mrs. Nancy J. Haymond, who has been with friends in Fairmont since before the holidays, returned to her home here yesterday.

Nearly four hundred cars of ice, lumber, crossties, mine ties and mine props have been shipped from this station in the past three months.

The mill is still cutting on the timber in the northeastern section of the Park. They expect to finish up by May 1st

Mrs. King, who has resided on Cosey Row since last spring, has purchased the Kerfoot cottage and will soon occupy it.

It is reported that Mr. M. M. Schrock has tendered his resignation as president of the Annual Committee.

A bill has been introduced in the legislature amending the charter of the Mountain Lake Park Community, which is not likely to pass.

Miss Blanche Chance, who has been teaching school in this county near Cranesville, was brought home last week being quite ill. She has so far recovered as to hope to resume teaching next week.

STOYER.

We are still having plenty of snow and cold weather. The young people have been making good use of the skating.

Our school is progressing nicely under the management of Miss Mae Williams, of Gorman.

Mr. N. L. DeBerry and daughter, Lucretia, of Wildell, W. Va., are visiting friends and relatives here.

Mr. W. T. Steyer was visiting friends in Blaine last week.

Miss Grace Riley was visiting friends at Kurtz Chapel last Thursday.

Mrs. Tom Wilson left here Saturday morning for Chaffee, W. Va., to be present at the wedding of a friend.

Miss Emma Steyer, who has been ill for the last few days, is slowly improving.

Mr. Chas. Kidd was the guest of his sister, Mrs. A. J. DeBerry, of Deer Park, last Saturday.

The Out-of Sight Cross Tie Co. is working full time.

Mr. J. C. McLoney was seen on our streets the first of the week.

Sheriff Andrew Shartzer was in town last Thursday.

Mr. Dick Boyles, of Philippi, W. Va., is visiting his brother, Mr. Dowden Boyles of this place.

Mr. C. E. Hilleary was in town last week.

Some of our young people attended the series of meetings at Gormania, W. Va.

The diphtheria scare is over. There was only one case here.

Our expert trappers are having great success.

FLATWOODS.

So much coal is being hauled this winter that the mines are unable to supply the demand. Every morning there is a race among the farmers to see which will get to the mines first to load up with coal which has been mined during the night.

Mr. J. L. Englehart and family, of Accident, were visiting at M. L. Fresh's Sunday.

Mr. Luther Keller was calling at Beitzell's Sunday evening.

Mr. Frank Callis and Rev. Jas. W. Beeghly made a business trip to Oakland on last Friday.

The preaching services held at the Bethel by the Rev. Jake Speicher were largely attended owing to the beautiful evenings and good sledding.

Mr. Ervin Fresh has been visiting at M. L. Fresh's during the past week.

Several applicants from this vicinity attended the enumerators examination held at Oakland Saturday.

A spelling bee was held at the Flatwoods school Friday afternoon which showed the progress in orthography made by the students of that school during the winter.

GORMAN.

Groundhog day passed off here very quietly.

Charley Thompson was hauling a car of lime last week. J. W. King, Ernest Hilleary and Tom Rush were helping him.

Gus Hilleary is at home from school for a few days.

Road Supervisor M. S. Wolf was on this side of the mountain last week repairing bridges.

John L. Harvey was in town one day last week.

J. Pope is hauling lime from the tannery with two teams.

Scott Harvey was in town with a load of potatoes.

Rev. E. P. Idleman is holding a series of meetings here now with favorable results.

T. E. Shillingburg is improving.

Attorney to Commissioners.

At the meeting of the County Commissioners held last week, Mr. George W. Legge, Jr., of Oakland, was appointed attorney to the Board.

Mrs. G. A. Fraley arrived home yesterday morning from Baltimore, being accompanied by Mr. Fraley who went to that city from here Monday afternoon. Mrs. Fraley is very much improved in health and her home-coming was a happy one for her family and many friends.

Mr. Thomas J. Peddicord, accompanied by Mrs. Peddicord, left Oakland Monday afternoon for Annapolis, where Mr. Peddicord argued the case of Thomas F. Smouse vs. Morgart in the Court of Appeals yesterday. From Annapolis Mr. and Mrs. Peddicord went to Florida where they will spend two or three weeks.

Mr. U. O. Blocher, of Grantsville, was elected assistant cashier of the First National Bank at Grantsville, succeeding Mr. Henry H. Baker, who recently purchased an interest in a marble yard at Hyndman, Pa., where he will move within a month. Mr. Blocher is a most excellent young man and his selection as Mr. Baker's successor is to be commended.

Miss Ellen Connell was summoned to Baltimore last Thursday evening by a telegram announcing the very serious illness of her sister, Mrs. Dennis Glover, of Hutton, who has been in one of the Baltimore hospitals for several months receiving treatment. Miss Connell was accompanied to Baltimore by her sister, Mrs. Parley DeBerry, of Terra Alta, both of whom will remain in Baltimore indefinitely. Mrs. Glover's condition yesterday was unchanged.

The Misses Miller entertained a number of their friends at flinch last Friday evening at their home, the Commercial. Delicious refreshments were served and the evening was a most enjoyable one for their guests.

Last Thursday morning a special train carrying President Willard and other officials high up in the management of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, passed throught Oakland on an inspection trip of the lines of the company west. Wednesday night was spent at Deer Park by the party, the special train being sidetracked there late Wendesday evening.

We publish today the appointments of road supervisors made by the County Commissioners at the meeting of that body last week. The list numbers about one hundred and sixtv and these appointees will be required to fill bonds for the faithful performance of their duties. Clerk A. G. Ross is now engaged in preparing the necessary papers for the appointees to be forwarded to them as soon as possible.

The preacher didn't use these words exactly but this is what he meant in rebuking his congregation as to their confidence in their own surety of reaching the pearly gates: The way a lot of people are living in the church you would naturally think they had a through ticket to Heaven in a Pullman palace car and were waiting for the porter to wake them up when they head into the yards of the New Jerusalem. But many of them will be sidetracked with a hot box sure.

Sunday was the stormiest day of the winter, in this section of the country at least, when the wind approached a hurricane and was accompanied by snow and biting cold. As a consequence services in the various churches were attended by very few worshippers. Sunday night was the coldest of the year, the thermometer going as low as five or six below zero, resulting in the freezing and bursting of innumerable water pipes in dwellings and other buildings. In some cases serious damage was averted by property owners shutting off the water before nightfall.

At the examination for census enumerators, conducted in Oakland last Saturday by Postmaster Peddicord, forty-one applicants for the fourteen positions to be filled in Garrett county were present, a number being here from each of the several districts of the county. The examination was much more severe than was anticipated by the applicants, some of whom consumed the full three hours' time allotted for filling out the schedules prepared by the Census Bureau. The examination was conducted in the Knights of Pythias lodge room and the rules governing it were very severe.

Orphans' Court Proceedings.

Tuesday morning with all the judges present the semi-monthly session of the Orphans' Court convened when the following business was transacted:

Letters of administration were issued to Orpha Lowman on the estate of Victor Lowman; to David E. Root on the estate of George R. Root; to John P. Miller on the estate of Catharine Miller.

The first and final account of Thomas K. Harvey, executor of Emily S. Perry, late of Garrett county, was ratified

Miss Nellie M. Broadwater was appointed guardian of Russell Broadwater and other minor children of the late Noah Broadwater.

ROAD FOREMAN INJURED.

While at Work Clearing Away a Wreck at Altamont Sunday Afternoon.

Ill luck seems to be following in the wake of the Baltimore and Ohio railway trackmen, as a number within the past two weeks have been killed and seriously injured.

The last victim of the god of ill fortune was Foreman Henry Schmidt, of Altamont, who was very seriously hurt last Sunday afternoon while in the performance of his duties superintending the clearing away of a wreck of two engines which occurred at Altamont that day. Mr. Schmidt was assisting his men to remove a rail on the track when it slewed around and struck him over the right eye, inflicting a deep wound and producing a slight concussion of the brain. He was attended by Dr. Henry McComas. For two or three days following the accident his condition was quite serious, but from last reports he is well on the road toward recovery.

DEMOCRATS HAVE BOLD SCHEME TO GRAB STATE

Believing That the Supreme Court would Uphold Their Action.

The boldest scheme that has yet been advanced by the Democratic party to grab an election in Maryland was made known Friday by former State Senator Marion V. Brewington, of Wicomico county, who is in Annapolis in the interest of another disfranchising amendment.

The new scheme is nothing less than to take over the election two years hence, at which a governor will be named, in addition to a dozen or more important state officers, by refusing to register any negro voter in any part of the state, in direct defiance of the Fifteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The plan made known by Senator Brewington is said to be without a doubt the boldest of all of those the Democratic party has yet considered, and although Senator Brewington admits that the leaders haven't yet come around to his way of thinking, it is not at all unlikely that it will be adopted.

The first move in this gigantic scheme is to postponed the general registration of voters, which the law requires shall take place this year, until October of 1911. That will mean only a month before election and too late for the Republican managers to take the matter to the Court of Appeals. Then if it is taken after the election it will be too late, for the grab will have been made and there will be no possible way of rectifying a great wrong.

In outlining his plan in detail Former Senator Brewington showed that the right of the negro to vote in Maryland under the Fifteenth Amendment will be put squarely up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and he believes that it will be decided in favor of this state, in view of the fact that Maryland never ratified the amendment.

The Supreme Court, according to Senator Brewington, has always side-stepped that question, and he believes that it is just waiting for an opportunity to decide that negroes have not the right of suffrage in those states which never ratified the amendment. If that is done, every state South of Mason and Dixon line will be forever rid of the negro vote, a thing which the Democratic managers in Maryland have been trying to bring about for years.

"The great stroke will be to postpone the general registration," declared Senator Brewington Friday. "If that registration takes place in October, 1911, and it can be accomplished in three weeks, we will then have the state in our own hands. If the Democratic managers will adopt my suggestion we will then refuse to register any negro voter in any part of the state.

"The election will then, therefore, be conducted without a negro vote, and if the Republicans take the matter to the Court of Appeals and the election is declared void we will still be the winner. The Court of Appeals cannot order a new election, and as we control the State Senate, it will name the governor, by reason of the election being declared void by the Court of Appeals, and the Senate and the House of Delegates have the authority to say who shall sit in those bodies."

The boldness of former Senator Brewington's scheme almost took the Democratic leaders off their feet when it was suggested by him to them. But now, it is said, they are becoming reconciled to it and are looking upon it more favorably. Senator Brewington declared Friday that he wished he was back of this legislature for one day; that there would then be no question of what the Democrats would do.

FROM OLD KENTUCKY

If you had asked Mr. Harry Sothern why he was spending his vacation at Port Natal, South Africa, he would have gravely told you that the Kentucky summer climate did not suit his health because it was too hot, and you might have suspected that the colonel was guying you, and you would probably have been right. Nevertheless the colonel would have been telling you the exact truth. Kentucky had become too warm for him. The immediate cause of this warmth in his old home was a slight disagreement with another gentleman during a game of cards, in the course of which he had been forced to use his pistol in order that the other gentleman might not use his.

Mr. Sothern had had the good luck to come out in a steamer chartered by the British government for the transportation of supplies to Africa. On the way out he had cultivated the acquaintance of the officer in charge with an assiduity that can be appreciated only by those who have made a long voyage in a supply ship. At first that gentleman, a lieutenant in her majesty's service, did not respond cordially to these advances. He changed his mind a few days later. He was practicing with his pistol at the time with indifferent success.

Harry Sothern, who had been watching him, suggested that his aim was too deliberate. The lieutenant turned quickly and handed the revolver to his critic, who showed him how it ought to be done. When they reached Natal the lieutenant introduced him to the people whom it was desirable for him to know. Just at this time the Matabele war was "on." After weeks of waiting he got his permit to join a bullock train which was on the way to the front, where the fighting was going on.

The main division of the British South African corps had just defeated a division of the Matabele army at Kraal and had set fire to the villages around that place. Captain Williams, with about thirty-five men, while pursuing the enemy, was led into an ambush and found himself cut off from all chance of escape in a small plain surrounded by foothills fairly swarming with the enemy. There was absolutely no chance for him. The pass by which they had entered was already occupied by the enemy. There was nothing to do but wait for help or annihilation. He dismounted his men in the middle of the plain among a clump of bushes and small trees. The natives circled around out of range, indulging in what seemed to be a war dance.

"When I get out of this," began Harry Sothern, "I'm going into the undertaking business. There seems to be a good field for it here."

An old sergeant near by replied: "Oh, no; you're not! When you get out of this you're going to heaven if you've been a good boy. If these devils leave enough of you, you'll be a fit subject for undertaking yourself."

Harry did not reply. He had taken off his coat and was rolling it up to put under the head of a young ensign who had been wounded as they entered the pass and whom Sothern, amid a shower of assagais and bullets, had thrown across his saddle and had then galloped after the rest. He could see now that the boy was dying, and it gave him a great throb of pity and of rage against those who had done it. He wondered if the boy knew his condition.

A few minutes later the young soldier was dead. Harry gently laid the boy's head back upon the ground and then picked up his Winchester with an oath. The natives were advancing all around them with continuous shouting and beating of shields. The English soldiers were picking off the Matabele warriors with a certainty and precision that nothing could withstand. The natives broke and fled. With a ringing cheer the men sprang to their feet and fired and cheered together. Harry Sothern staggered back with a bullet in his thigh.

Captain Williams helped his men move the wounded to a more sheltered spot behind the trees. Harry objected to the arrangement for himself, saying: "Don't bother about moving me back. Just turn me over so I can shoot. I've got an engagement to kill half a dozen niggers yet."

The captain laughed. Then, turning to his men and for the first time speaking to them as equals, he said, "Gentlemen, let's sing 'God Save the Queen.'"

Across the valley to the savages, who were waiting like vultures for their prey, there floated the sound of the national song from the throats of men who knew they would never sing it again. A Matabele chief who was captured a few weeks later says that the 6,000 savages stood awe bound for a moment before the handful of men who were teaching them so easily how not to be afraid of death. He says that as they came across the valley for the attack he could see a man in epaulets (the captain evidently) taking the loaded rifles from a wounded soldier who was lying beside him loading them as fast as the captain emptied them. And he saw, too, a man in civilian's clothes—the same man who had jumped off his horse to pick up a wounded man as they entered the valley—lying on his face and firing very rapidly. And every time he fired a savage fell dead. Soon the crackcrack of the Winchesters ceased, and there was nothing left to show for the superiority of the Anglo-Saxon race but a hundred Matabele warriors who failed to join in the war dance that followed.—William McLeod Raine in Denver News.

PREVENTION OF FIRES.

How to Avoid Them by Taking Proper Precautions.

Avoid matches whose heads readily snap off. Scores of deaths and destroyed homes are traceable to this cause.

Liquid stove polishes of the kind sold by fakers are nearly always dangerous. Furniture polish should be used with great care too.

All cloths used in rubbing polished floors should be burned away from the house. Neither should they be thrown carelessly around at any time, as there is danger of spontaneous combustion.

Cleaning compounds are always dangerous. Never use benzine, gasoline or like fluids in any room where there is artificial light. These oils are extremely volatile, and their fumes catch fire at a great distance, the flames traveling back to the source. Explosions and scattered fire are the result.

Never drape a mantel near a gas jet or a stove. Be careful that no portieres or curtains are so hung that they can blow against the flame. Many fires are due to such carelessness.

When you retire for the night see that all the doors in the house are closed. Open doors create a draft. Danger from a dumb waiter may be minimized by seeing that it is tightly closed at night.

When open fireplaces are in use the bricks of the hearth should be imbedded in cement and should not rest on wood. Each hearth should have a fine wire screen shield to prevent sparks flying on rugs or carpets.

How to Roast a Small Pig.

Lay a nicely dressed pig in a tub of cold water all night. In the morning change the water and let it remain until it is time to roast it. Then wipe it dry, rub the inside well with sage, cayenne and salt mixed and stuff it with a dressing made of breaderumbs, salt pork chopped fine, pepper, salt, sweet marjoram and an egg. It should be roasted on a spit before the fire; but, lacking convenience for this mode, the pig must be placed (the feet turned under) on a rack in the dripping pan with some water in which are some sprigs of sage and marjoram tied in muslin. Keep it well floured until half done; then take it out, wipe off the flour, return it to the oven and baste well with butter, repeating this several times until the pig is roasted. Serve on a large platter with a potato or small ear of unhusked green corn in its mouth. The herbs may be taken from the dripping pan, the gravy thickened with flour and seasoned to taste with pepper and salt. Then serve in a boat. Allow three hours for roasting.

How to Lacquer Brass Bedsteads.

A valuable suggestion was given by a dealer concerning the keeping of brass bedsteads and all brass fixtures in as beautiful condition as when new. It is a trade secret and is used by all who deal in brass fittings. Nearly all brasswork when sent out is lacquered to prevent corrosion and to avoid the labor of frequent polishing. This lacquer is gum shellac dissolved in alcohol. This makes a thin varnish which is applied with a small brush. Ten cents' worth of shellac made thin with the alcohol will lacquer your bed, and an ordinary workman can do the work in an hour, and your bed will look as good as it would if sent to the factory, which would cost several dollars.

How to Open Sugar Bags Easily.

Place the bag of sugar in front of you right side up, with the chain stitch at the left. With a pair of scissors cut one stitch on the plain side. Now take one end from the front, between the thumb and finger of the right hand, and one end on the back, between the thumb and finger of the left hand. Pull on them at the same time and the entire length will come out. If you wish the bag for any other use turn wrong side out and remove all the stitching the same way. Be sure and have the chain stitch at the left.

How to Make Charcoal Tablets.

Some charcoal tablets that may be made at home to sweeten the breath are composed of half an ounce of willow charcoal, half an ounce of saccharine and an ounce and a half of unsweetened chocolate and a quarter of a dram of powdered vanilla. These are mixed and made into a paste with pure gum arabic mucilage. The mixture then is broken into bits and left to dry.

How to Fireproof Paper.

To make paper fireproof, whether written, printed, painted or stamped as for hangings, dip it in strong alum water—a saturated solution—and dry thoroughly. Test after the first dipping. If it burns, dip and dry again. Neither color nor quality will be in the least affected; on the contrary, rather improved. Title deeds and insurance policies can be preserved this way.

How to Extract a Splinter.

When a splinter has been driven deep into the hand it can be extracted without pain by steam. Nearly fill a wide mouthed bottle with hot water, place the injured part over the mouth of the bottle and press tightly. The suction will draw the flesh down, and in a minute or two the steam will extricate the splinter and the inflammation will disappear.

How to Clean Milk Jars.

Milk jars in which the milk has soured can be most quickly cleaned by putting first under the cold water spigot, then filling with hot water in which has been dissolved a liberal amount of washing soda.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

FEDERATION VALUE

The Church Militant's Surrender to the Church Triumphant.

"Say ye not, A Federation, to all them to whom this people shall say, A Federation; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid" (Isaiah viii, 12).

Brooklyn, Feb. 6.—The fourth and final meeting for the consideration of doctrinal surrenders necessary to Church Federation was held today, Brooklyn's largest auditorium, the Academy of Music, being crowded. Pastor C. T. Russell, of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, delivered the address as follows:—

Having viewed during the past three Sundays what the leading denominations would need to sacrifice in the interest of Federation, we come today to the final discussion of this series—The Church Militant and Triumphant and her interest in the Federation movement. Let us endeavor to take so broad a view of this subject that there will be no room for disagreement on the part of true Christians of any denomination.

Unnecessary as it may be to explain to this large and intelligent audience the significance of our topic, The Church Militant and The Church Triumphant, I must think beyond the thousands present of the millions who to-morrow will receive reports of this discourse from that great channel of the world's progress, the Secular Press. Hence I explain that the term Church Militant signifies the Church in warfare, struggling with the powers of evil, while the Church Triumphant signifies the Church victorious, glorious, joined with her Lord, the Heavenly Bridegroom, as his Bride and Queen in the great Millennial Kingdom soon to bless and uplift the world of mankind. I should further add that while in this discussion we have considered the various denominations of Christendom and their creeds, we must today ignore all human systems and creeds. We must take the broad, general ground of the Scriptures and recognize only one Church.

Nor may we make the mistake of saying that the one Church is one Sect. No sect, no denomination, however great and influential and numerous and rich, either in sordid or historic wealth, can be conceded the right to appropriate the name which our Lord gave to all truly his disciples. Surely none of us is sectarian enough to dispute this premise. We must learn to recognize the Church of Christ from the same viewpoint as does the Head of the Church. We must learn the force of St. Peter's words to Cornelius, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him" (Acts x, 34, 35).

Taking, therefore, the Scriptural view of the Church, we recognize it as the "Body of Christ" of many members, over which he is the Head. It is composed of consecrated followers of Christ irrespective of all denominational lines—those who, turning from sin, accept Jesus as their Redeemer, through whom they have forgiveness of sins and reconciliation to the Father—those who have become disciples of Christ, taking up their cross to follow him and who have received the begetting of the holy Spirit. Who could dispute that these are the Church of Christ? Who shall say that they must belong to this Communion or that, or lose their relationship to the Head, Christ Jesus? The apostles never referred to Baptist Christians, Methodist Christians, Catholic Christians, Presbyterian Christians, etc., but merely to these whom we have described and whom they styled saints—"the Church of the living God, whose names are written in heaven" (Hebrews xii, 23; I Timothy iii, 15). Let us keep strictly within the lines of God's Word and avoid the errors of the past. Let us today consider this Church as the Church Militant and prospectively the Church Triumphant.

The Church Militant.

If we all agree that we have before our minds the real Church, the Church of the New Testament, let us notice that there is a nominal Church also and that we are not competent to fully determine which are the real and which are the nominal Christians except by the test which our Lord has given—"by their fruits ye shall know them." While the real Church of fully consecrated believers, faithful to the Lord and his Word and the principles of righteousness, is represented by a very small number, there is a nominal Church related thereto as is a shell to the kernel of a nut. The nominal Church includes those whose manner or whose attendance on worship implies a relationship to Christ without having gone the length of a full faith-acceptance of him in sacrifice, perhaps without having fully turned from sin even in their hearts, and without having made a full consecration to serve the Lord. This nominal class may be subdivided into believers who are favorably disposed toward Christ and righteousness; others who regard the Church as merely a moral club designed for social and moral benefit or influence upon the world, by counteracting sinful influences; still others, bitter at heart, sinful and selfish, having no faith whatever in Jesus and no care whatever for morality and using the name of Christ hypocritically, merely as a garment to deceive, that they may the better gain their ends. Thus we find the nominal Church to consist of:—

(1) Hypocrites; (2) Moralists; (3) Indifferents; (4) Seekers after godliness; (5) The true Church, "the sanctified in Christ Jesus" (I Corinthians, i, 2)—"members of the Body of Christ"—prospective members of the Church Triumphant.

Fightings Without and Within.

Every member of "the Church of the first-born" was called "to suffer with Christ" that he may be also later glorified with him in the Millennial Kingdom. Only those who will stand the test of faithfulness under sufferings, trials, crosses, self-sacrifices, have the promise of sharing with Christ the glories of the Church Triumphant. "If we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him; if we deny him, he also will deny us" (II Timothy ii, 11, 12).

But why should the Church fight? Is she not commended to live peaceably with all? Are not Christians exhorted to war not with carnal weapons and to be smitten on both cheeks, rather than to return evil for evil? Where, then, comes in the fight? Who are the foes? Surely none would assail a non-resistant!

We reply that the facts do not bear out that suggestion. Our Lord and his apostles were peaceable and non-resistant, obedient to kings and laws, and yet they suffered violent deaths, as well as stripes and imprisonment. They had their names cast out as evil. And those who persecuted and maligned them verily thought that they did God service. All who follow in the Lord's footsteps must expect similar treatment, because, as Jesus said, "The servant is not greater than his Lord." "Marvel not, if the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you" (John xviii, 18, 19). The Master said, "The darkness hateth the light," which explains why the chief religionists of his time, being of wrong condition of heart, instigated his crucifixion. They were of the darkness, living outwardly holy, while in heart they were far from consecrated to God. The very holding up of the torch of Truth was painful to them, reproved them and excited their animosity. Human nature is the same today. Notwithstanding the fact that heretic-roasting has become unpopular and intolerable to the world, there are methods of privately and symbolically roasting, slashing, wounding and killing practised by those estranged from God, though sometimes highly esteemed of men and wearing vestments only slightly less glorious than those worn by Caiaphas and Pilate.

"Who Scourgeth Every Son."

The Scriptures explain that there is a two-fold reason why Jesus and all of his followers are required to suffer for righteousness' sake.

(1) It is requisite to their own character-development that they should not only profess absolute loyalty to God and to Truth, but that this loyalty should be put to the test. Thus we read of our Lord that though "holy, harmless, undefiled," he was proved perfect in his loyalty by the things which he endured—by his obedience even unto death, even the ignominious death of the cross. The same principle, the Scriptures assure us, operates in connection with all whom God is now calling to be Emmanuel's associates in the Millennial Kingdom. They must suffer with him if they would reign with him. They must walk in his steps (Galatians v, 11; vi, 12; II Thessalonians i, 5; II Timothy i, 12; ii, 9, 12; iii, 12).

(2) These experiences are designed of God to qualify us to be judges of the world during the Millennial Age—that the Christ, Head and Body, may be merciful and faithful towards the people of earth. Likewise it is proper that the world should know that its judges have thus been tempted and tried, and are able to sympathize with them in their weaknesses and in their endeavors for righteousness—and more willing to help them up, up, up to human perfection than to consign them to the Second Death.

Although this conflict has lasted for more than eighteen centuries it has not been long for any single individual. With the Master himself the test period was only three and a half years. On the whole, as compared with eternity, the entire Gospel Age Sacrifice, as the Master said, is but "a little while." And as for the afflictions and testings themselves, St. Paul gives the proper thought, saying, that at most they are "the afflictions but for a moment and not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us," the overcomers (Romans viii, 18).

The Church Triumphant.

The Church in glory and in power will contain no hypocrites and no merely nominal Christians—only the true, the saintly, the "sanctified in Christ Jesus." Nevertheless it will be composed of two classes, as illustrated by the Priests and the Levites in the type. (1) Jesus glorified, the antitypical High Priest, and his faithful footstep followers, the antitypical under-priesthood—otherwise his "Bride." Together these are styled a Royal Priesthood or a Kingdom of Priests. St. Paul tells us that Melchizedek, who was a priest upon his throne, merely typified the Church Triumphant—Head and Body—The Christ, "A priest forever after the order of Melchizedek"—a priest upon his throne. During the Millennial Age that glorious Priest, Head and Members, will bless and uplift, rule and judge, the world of mankind, with a view to recovering as many as possible, as many as will obey him, from the ruin of sin and death. During the thousand years of the Melchizedek reign all the families of the earth will be blessed with opportunities of return to human perfection and to earthly Paradise. The willing and obedient will be destroyed in the Second Death. At the close of the Millennium, Christ's Mediatorial Kingdom will terminate.

As the Levites were much more numerous than their brethren, the priests, so there is another class in the Church corresponding—styled "a great company, whose number no man knoweth," in that they were not specially predestinated. These less earnest, less zealous than the faithful "little flock," will reach a plane of glory through tribulation also, but with less joy. These, we are told, will be with the Bride as her companions. As Levites they will serve God in his temple, but not be members of the temple class, the Priesthood. These will have palm branches and be before the Throne, while the Royal Priesthood will have crowns and be in the throne as members of the Body of Christ.

The Church Militant's Surrender.

All the soldiers of the cross, experiencing fightings without and within against the powers of sin and darkness and their own weaknesses, surely long for the time of their "change" in the "First Resurrection." They long for the time when this mortal shall put on immortality; when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption; when we shall be like our Redeemer and see him as he is and share his glory. Gladly, therefore, do all of God's consecrated people wait for the blessed change promised at our Lord's Second Coming, when that which is sown in weakness shall be raised in power; when that which is sown in dishonor shall be raised in glory; when that which is sown an animal body shall be raised a spiritual body (I Corinthians xv, 42-44, 53, 54). Surely such, having prayed, "Thy Kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as in heaven," are waiting for the King and God's time for establishing his Kingdom for the blessing of the world. No wonder the Apostle wrote of these, "Ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our Body"—the Body of Christ, the Church, through the power of the "First Resurrection" change. This will be our glad surrender to the Church Triumphant, when we shall hear the Master's voice saying, "Well done, good and faithful servants; enter ye into the joys of your Lord. You have been faithful over a few things, I will make you ruler over many things"—participants in the Millennial Kingdom glory and its dominion of earth for the uplifting of mankind (I Corinthians vi, 2; Revelation ii, 26).

Union or Federation—Which?

I ask you, my hearers, and indirectly I ask the millions of my larger congregation whom I address weekly through the public prints,—What advantage will accrue to the Church Militant through the on-coming Federation? I reply that great advantage will come to the saintly few, not in the manner expected, but along the lines of the Divine promise that "All things shall work together for good to them that love God—to the called according to his purpose." The Church Federation, which the Scriptures distinctly show us will be effected, will include the various classes already indicated:—(1) Hypocrites; (2) Moralists; (3) Followers afar off; (4) Saints.

But in the Federation the Moralists and Higher Critics will be dominant forces. The saintly will less than ever be in evidence and appreciated. The outward and apparent success of the Federation will seem wonderful for a moment, but the results will be disastrous.

The saintly few, guided by God's Word and holy Spirit, will awaken to the true situation and become separated from the nominal mass. Their misguided hopes as respects the bringing about of a spiritual Kingdom on earth will be thoroughly shattered, and, more than ever, they will look to the Lord as the source of help and wait for his Kingdom to come through the Redeemer's advent and the Resurrection "change."

In a word, God's saintly people need no outward Federation, even as they need no creedal fences. So far as these are concerned, the sooner all barriers between them are leaped and they come together as members of one body, joined to the one Heavenly Head and Lord, the better. Let Churchianity produce its Federation and see its folly and failure, as outlined in our text. But let the saints of God draw near to him and to each other in spiritual Union and realize to the full the meaning of the Apostle's words, "One faith; one Lord; one baptism"—one "Church of the Living God whose names are written in heaven." This condition cannot be attained through outward bonds, but can be attained only through drinking into the one Spirit obtainable through the proper understanding of the Word of God.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

An Amateur Who Kept a Hotel and Made a Mistake.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"Dear Phil—Mighty glad to hear from you and to know you're at leisure and contemplating a visit east. Start at once. I fired the letter as a chance shot, for I remembered you wrote to some of your people at that place.

"Seems odd we've never heard a thing of each other in all these twenty-five years. But never mind. I feel just as ready for a lark as I did when I said goodby on the college campus, and I know you do.

"Now to business. I'm mighty sorry, but a whole lot has happened since I wrote you that letter seven days ago. My people are off pasturing in Europe, and I'd planned for us to have the whole summer together.

"But now I am cabled that my wife has been picked up by brigands in some of the old wornout mountains and that I must hurry over with a ransom.

"It will take some money, and, what's worse, a whole lot of time, and, what's still worse, I shall not be able to see you till after I get back.

"I remember you were a pretty good fellow to take hold of things, but not very good in arranging circumstances to your own advantage, so I don't suppose you've prospered much.

"I have, in the hotel business, and think we can make your visit of mutual advantage. I have 300 guests already in the house and 500 booked for later arrival, and there's a good manager for practical details, but not for the social side. You used to be great on that line.

HE BEGAN TO SEEK OUT GRACIE TO ENTERTAIN HER.

"Now I'm going to ask you to fill my chair until I get back—in fact, make it sort of compulsory—for I must take the steamer this afternoon. There will not be any real work, understand, only just to have a good time with the guests. Mr. Burke, the manager, will be looking for you. Start at once. And, oh, yes, there'll be no expense to you, of course, and if things go right there'll be something handsome when I return. Your old chum, BILL.

"P. S.—I have a little girl off at school whom I'll not have time to see. She'll not be any trouble, of course, but I'd like you to keep a general oversight of her. She'll be home for the summer vacation in a few days. Ta-ta. BILLY."

Philip Cudahay, just from college and recently come into possession of his father's millions, had commenced the letter with perplexed face; he ended it with a laugh.

"Evidently thinks I am my father," he thought, "and just as evidently, from our home address being in the country, considers him a small farmer of limited means. H'm!" He drew a letter from a pigeonhole in his desk. It was the one he had received seven days before and read:

"Phil Cudahay, Oakwoods, Md.:

"Are you still living, and could you arrange to make a visit east?

"BILLY BLACKWELL."

Phil's answer to this had been equally brief and to the point: "Certainly. Am contemplating a visit east even now. What'll you have?"

"Don't seem as if I ought to take advantage of it," he said, still grinning, as he thrust the letter back into its pigeonhole, "but it would be a lark to run a big hotel with a capable manager to hold the reins. The child would be the real trouble, though I've been told I have a way with children.

"H'm! I can't write and say father is dead, and the thing is jammed down into my pocket, with the owner already out of sight, and my idea of the man from his letter is that he didn't tell Manager Burke a thing except that a Phil Cudahay would have charge.

"I could be twenty or eighty, with any old size or looks, so long as the name proves up. H'm! I'll do it."

Hotel Amberset was seven miles from the nearest railroad point and reached by stage.

A number of people were in the same car, apparently guests for the hotel, but only one child.

He wondered if it could be Blackwell's daughter. He hoped not, for the child was peevish looking and evidently mischievous. Having charge of her would be a task as onerous as unpleasant.

With her was a young woman as nurse, or perhaps, as the child was ten or twelve, she was governess.

But instead of avoiding them at the station, as he was inclined, he lifted the little girl into the waiting bus and then took a place beside them. The whole thing was a great joke, but some of the component parts were likely to be very earnest.

Burke, the manager, accepted him as a matter of course, in a practical, businesslike way, but even he for the first day or two seemed a little surprised at the facility with which Phil dropped into the owner's chair.

Perhaps, after all, there had been some intimation of country rearing.

For the first week Phil was conscious of a strong desire to avoid the child, who had now advanced to the familiarity of "Gracie," but this very consciousness made him seek her out oftener than he otherwise would. It was a joke, but he was personating his father, who was her father's friend.

By that time the nurse, or governess, was unconsciously occupying a good deal of his interest. He began to seek out Gracie, to entertain her, as he supposed, but it was her companion he looked at, with whom he talked.

"Miss Marian," as Gracie called her, was a remarkable young woman—beautiful, entertaining, accomplished, cultured—everything that Philip Cudahay thought a young woman should be and carrying all the accomplishments with an ease that was noticeable even in the big hotel full of people.

The guests themselves seemed to realize it, for they treated her as one of them, and many even sought her company.

Had it been any other nurse or governess Philip would have noticed and wondered. But with Marian it seemed a matter of course. He would have wondered had it been otherwise.

And so it happened that Miss Marian became uppermost in the amateur hotel keeper's mind. He thought about her so much that had he not had an admirable manager in Burke the hotel would have been soon deserted by its boarders.

His attentions were ostensibly devoted to Gracie, but really to the governess. He invited them both to drive with him afternoons, to go boating—indeed, to share with him those pleasures usually enjoyed by people in summer who have nothing to do.

One afternoon he was pulling the two along in one of the light boats used on a lake near the hotel, with his back to the bow, where he could not see what was coming.

Suddenly there was a crash. A man rowing in the same relative position had fouled him. At first it did not appear that much damage had been done, and the man who had caused the trouble pulled away. But Phil's boat had sprung a leak. Handkerchiefs were thrust into the aperture, but the water, though checked, was not stopped.

The oarsman pulled for the shore, but the water gained so rapidly that it was impossible to reach it. The boat sank some fifty feet away, leaving all three in the water.

Phil was the only swimmer in the lot. Seizing an oar, he gave it to the child; then, taking the governess by the arm, he swam ashore with her, she all the while protesting that he should leave her and save Gracie.

As soon as he got Miss Marian into shallow water he returned to her charge, who was clinging to the oar and crying vigorously for help. It was an easy matter to assist her to the shore.

"You should have been ashamed of yourself," said the governess, "to devote yourself to me and leave that poor little thing out in the lake."

"Didn't I provide her with an oar?" quoth Phil.

"Yes; you did that."

"The oar would not have supported you. And if I had saved the child, leaving you to take care of yourself, you would have drowned. And then what would I have done?"

He spoke the last words in a low tone, a tone that would tell any woman that there was something more to come.

The same evening after they had got off their dripping clothing a cablegram came from Blackwell. "Ransom paid. Got wife. Start for home at once. How is my girl? Cable me at Naples."

Marian was on the veranda by herself, with Gracie playing at a little distance. Phil went directly to her.

"Miss Marian," he began abruptly, "I've come to ask you to be my wife. I love you and think you have grown to like me a little. It's abrupt, I know, but I may not remain here long."

"Why," she exclaimed, rising in some confusion and consternation, "I thought you were to have charge of the hotel all summer."

"The owner's about to return. I have just received a cablegram from Naples."

"Didn't he send any message to me?"

"N-no," in some surprise. "He asked about Gracie."

"Gracie? Father doesn't know her."

"Father!"

Her eyes opened a little. Then she comprehended and smiled.

"Yes. Didn't you know I was Miss Blackwell? Gracie is an unpromising child in my mission class, picked up from the street. I brought her down this summer in hope of reforming her."

Phil changed color, then collected himself.

"About my question?" he insisted.

An hour later a cablegram was on its way to Naples.

"Girl all right. Everything all right. Anxious to meet you. PHIL."

SHERIFF'S SALE

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate

Lying and Being in the Town of Friendsville, Garrett County, Maryland.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued out of the Circuit Court of Garrett County and to me directed, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of George R. Long and Freda Long, his wife, at the suit of The Lichtenstein Company, the same being No. 7 Judicials to the March Term, 1910, of said Court, I have seized and taken into execution, and will on the 12th Day of February,

SATURDAY,

A. D., 1910, at 11 o'clock a. m., on the premises of the First Lot herein described known as The Hotel Lot, at Friendsville, Garrett county, Maryland, offer at public sale for cash to satisfy said execution and costs the following property:

All those three certain pieces, parcels or lots of ground situate, lying and being in Friendsville, Garrett county, Maryland, described as follow, to wit:

First Piece or Lot—Beginning at a point on the South side of alley, and South 73 degrees East, 12 feet to a stone standing in County Road, and running thence South 73 degrees East, 38 feet, thence South 17 degrees West, 125 feet to North side of Maple Street, thence with North side of Maple Street, North 73 degrees West, 50 feet to a stone, thence North 17 degrees East, 70 feet to line of County road, thence by a straight line to the beginning, containing 6,000 square feet, more or less.

Second Lot—Beginning at a point on a line drawn North 73 degrees West, 38 feet, thence South 17 degrees West, 50 feet from C. V. Guard's northwest corner on Maple Street, and running thence South 17 degrees West, 100 feet, thence North 73 degrees West, about 108 feet to the the 4th line of "Look Sharp" in the River, thence with said line, down the river, North 15 degrees East, 100 feet, then South 72 degrees West, to the place of beginning.

Third Piece—Being Lot No. 16 in Block A., except 20 feet off of the rear end of said lot. This lot hereby conveyed has a frontage of 25 feet on Maple Street, and a depth of 130 feet.

Being the same lots, pieces or parcels of ground which were conveyed to the said George R. Long by Calvin L. Dean and wife by deed dated October, 12th, 1906, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 54, folio 68, &c., one of the Land Records of Garrett County, Maryland.

The first lot described above is a very desirable one for a hotel, and is improved by outbuildings, though there are no improvements on the third lot. The improvements on the Second lot consist of an ice house and a large stable suitable for livery purposes.

Terms of Sale—Cash.

Lesson VII.—First Quarter, For Feb. 13, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. vi, 19-34. Memory Verse, 24—Golden Text, Matt. vi, 33—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Our Lord has been talking about rewards here in this present time from men, contrasted with rewards hereafter in the kingdom, and now He contrasts treasure on earth, which may perish or be stolen, with treasure in heaven, which endures forever, durable riches. If we lay up only for ourselves we may become rich in this world, but not rich toward God (Luke xii. 19-21). We are everywhere warned against the danger of this world's riches. "Labor not to be rich;" "He that maketh haste to be rich shall not be innocent;" "Trust not in uncertain riches, but in the Living God" (Prov. xxiii. 4; xxviii. 20; 1 Tim. vi. 9, 17). To the majority of people these are foolish and impractical sayings, and a little hard cash is far more to them than the Living God. But our Lord is here speaking to believers, to whom it is also written in Col. iii. 2, "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth." Yet there are many in the pulpit as well as in the pews to whom dollars are more real than God.

The eye affects the heart, and the heart walks after the eyes (Lam. iii. 51; Job xxxi. 7), so that unless we are looking in the right direction we will not walk in the right direction. We cannot serve God and gold, or God and the world, or God and the devil, for all that is in the world—the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the pride of life—is not of the Father, but is of the world, and the whole world lieth in the wicked one (I John ii. 16; v. 19, R. V.). God is looking for those whose hearts are whole toward Him, which means that we must see no one but Jesus only (II Chron. xvi. 9).

Then people say: "Prayer won't feed you; religion won't provide bread and butter. It is all very well to talk good, but I've got to earn my living." We do not wonder to hear the world talk so, for the world is blind and dead to God and the things of God, but the words of our lesson are for believers—the redeemed of the Lord. Do they talk in reference to business as if the Lord did not care, as if all depended upon their own efforts and they must put forth every effort with all earnestness or they will never get on? Ask Christian business men and you will find that not a few will tell you that business cannot be done on Bible principles. But there are those—and I personally know some of them—in various lines of business who testify that Matt. vi. 33, stands true even in business relations, and some of them can testify that even in the financial straits of the past two years they have not felt the hard times. Five times in the closing verses of our lesson we hear the admonition not to be anxious (verses 25, 27, 28, 31, 34, R. V.), and they are the words of Him who created all things and upholds all things by His power. He stoops from the things we cannot comprehend to talk to us of birds and flowers and on another occasion speaks of even sparrows, saying "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father" (chapter x. 29). On that occasion, however, He was speaking of His care of our bodies in preserving them from death, while in this lesson He is speaking of the food and raiment essential to the health of these mortal bodies. Apart from Him in whom we live and move and have our being no amount of anxious care and toil on our part can obtain the necessary food and raiment or prolong our days. Does not He who gave us life care for it enough to prolong it as long as it pleaseth Him to do so, and as to raiment, what father is he who will not see that his children are becomingly clothed? Do not miss the contrast between the clothing of the lilies of the field and the clothing of Solomon in all his glory. His, however grand, was all put on, but the lily's beauty is part of itself. The work within us is the chief thing—the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, a heart right with God, is the great essential. Then He will surely care for the minor matters, for He knoweth what things we have need of. The contrast between Jew and gentile in verse 32 brings before us all His wondrous care of Israel from the day that He brought them out of Egypt—the difference which He put in so many ways between His own people and the Egyptians, and then all through the wilderness journey the food from heaven, the water from the rock, the pillar of cloud and fire and all His manifold mercies. He is the same unchanging Jesus, and He will not do less for His church, His own body.

We are here to give the gospel to all and thus seek His kingdom by seeking to complete His body in order that His kingdom may come. If we as His redeemed make this our first business He will see to all our need. Let us obey Phil. iv. 6, and I Pet. v. 7, and we will surely prove His faithfulness.

The remedy for all anxiety is found in Phil. iv. 6, 7, and I Pet. v. 7. And in John xiv. 1, 27, with Matt. xxiv. 6, we are forbidden to be troubled. The same confidence in our Father in heaven which we desire our children to have in us will give that quietness and confidence which are our privilege, but how necesary the admonition "Have faith in God."

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 33. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1910. NUMBER 51

ONE APPOINTMENT FOR GARRETT COUNTY MADE

Mr. Samuel Lawton, Republican Supervisor of Elections, Sent to Senate.

Last night Governor Austin L. Crothers appointed Mr. Samuel Lawton of Oakland, Republican supervisor of elections for Garrett county, and sent his name to the Senate for confirmation.

This is the only nomination yet made by the Governor for any of the Garrett county appointments. Mr. Lawton was recommended by the Republican County Committee and is at present the Republican member of the Board of Supervisors.

DETRACTS FROM WORSHIP

A Correspondent Believes School Entertainments Detrimental to Religion.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Please allow me a small place in the columns of your valuable journal to tell the people at large what I believe these public school entertainments are doing for our community.

I want to be rightly understood, in the first place, and do not want my neighbors and friends to think that I oppose anything that is righteous or anything that will in anyway edify the children or have a tendency to make the world better, but the entertainments given by the schools are making empty churches, empty class rooms, empty prayer meetings; we have no Epworth League, but we should have—not in name only and empty like the other services above mentioned.

I fear that there are a great many young people and some middle aged that are married to the school entertainments and will have to secure a divorce if they want to get to heaven. My reason for saying this is that I do not think there has been an evening this winter too bad to have a full house for a school entertainment, while there have been many too bad for our people to go to church—their first duty to themselves and their families and neighbors.

Very truly yours,
SAMUEL WILAND,

HALLEY'S COMET VISIBLE.

Simple Directions for Seeing the Great Terrestrial Wanderer.

A layman who is always keenly alive to the movements of the astronomical bodies, has given the following simple directions for finding Halley's comet, the most noted wanderer of the heavens. Astronominal terms have been discarded and the instructions, simply expressed are as follows:

In the evening when the sky is clear, about eight o'clock, stand with the face directly toward the west. Elevate the eyes at an angle of about forty degrees. You will see a large, yellow star which is the planet Saturn. Look one and one-half degrees, or about three diameters of the moon north of Saturn, and you will see Halley's comet. The comet is not visible to the naked eye, but can be seen through an ordinary field glass or opera glasses.

The comet is traveling at the rate of about 1,500,000 miles a day, and is something the diameter of the moon further from Saturn each evening. It drops toward the horizon, of course, as the hour of the evening grows later.

The Tramp Daniel comet which was visible to the naked eye in the southern sky for a few weeks has disappeared, and cannot now be seen. It was the fourth comet visible during the present year. Halley's, Moorehouse's and Winkle's being the other three.

After March 24th, astronomers expect to get their best view of Halley's comet. It will then be visible about four-thirty o'clock in the morning. Astronomers are expecting to see a tail extending through fifty or sixty degrees. The diameter of the luminous centre is estimated at 375,000 miles. Records of the past show that the tail has, on the occasion of one previous appearance at least, extended through ninety degrees.

"Trip to the Philippines."

Lieutenant E. S. West, who spent several years in Uncle Sam's service in the Philippine Islands and Japan, during which time he secured pictures to the number of several hundred and had them transferred to stereopticon slides, has promised the Knights of Pythias lodge of Oakland that he will reproduce these pictures for the membership of the lodge on their splendid moving picture machine at the next several regular meetings, to begin on next Friday evening and continue until the entire series is concluded. The series cover many parts of the world and the Lieutenant will explain every detail as the scenes are thrown on the screen.

The exhibition will be well worth coming many miles to see and will prove a great treat to everyone. Let every member of the order make an effort to attend.

Mr. George D. Browning, of Swallow Falls, was a business visitor to Oakland Tuesday.

EX-GOVERNOR EDWIN WARFIELD WARNS

Says Maryland State Treasury Is In Serious Condition.

Declaring that the Treasury of Maryland is in a serious condition and that trust-funds are being used for the payment of current expenses, Ex-Governor Edwin Warfield, in a letter sent to State Comptroller Joshua W. Hering, strongly urges the sale of the Northern Central Railway mortgage held by the State.

The former Governor denounces extravagance at Annapolis and says that in the last three sessions $225,000 of the people's money has been wasted and that this sum will probably reach $300,000 by the end of the present session. He says the $225,000 went for useless employes, and he advises Dr. Hering to refuse to issue warrants unless the money is in the State Treasury.

The Legislature of 1910, he says, was in session in January about 16 hours and 46 minutes, and he says it cost $21,597.58 to pay the employes of the session for that month. That is $1,288 an hour for employes only, he says, and characterizes this and other instances as "unwarranted extravagance and base grafting."

In making these statements Ex-Governor Warfield says he is keeping his promise to the people and to himself, when he left the Governorship, to watch the State and warn when he believed danger is near. He considers the situation now critical.

United States Senator John Walter Smith's characterization of the talk of legislative extravagance as "making mountains out mole hills" is replied to by Mr. Warfield. He also pays his compliments to Senator Arthur P. Gorman and those who recently stated that the State Treasury is in a flourishing condition.

Ex-Governor Warfield, in discussing the situation, said:

"In my message of 1906 and 1908 I went into details in the matter of the number of employes, and very severely criticised the wanton squandering of the people's money. The last three sessions of the Maryland Legislature (1904, 1906 and 1908) were the most expensive Legislatures in proportion to size that ever assembled in the United States. The amount of unwarranted and unnecessary expenditures of those three sessions was $225,000, and it looks as though the grand total will be raised by this Legislature to at least $300,000. What a goodly sum this would be if devoted to educational and charitable purposes.

"Remembering how in the past the extra appropriations for legislative expenditures were passed in the closing hours of the session, I recently wrote to Comptroller Hering suggesting how the necessity for an extra appropriation for legislative expenses might be prevented.

"The Treasurer's statement of funds on hand, published January 31, showed such a small amount in the Treasury, not withstanding the speeches made by the Democratic leaders in the House and the President of the State Senate, in which they stated that the Treasury was in a plethoric condition, that I began to examine the figures and found that the Treasury was in a very serious and depleted condition, and that there was no money in the treasury and specially dedicated trust funds had been used for current expenses.

"In view of this condition of the Treasury I think that the appointment of so many extra and unnecessary employes was, at this time, most inexcusible; one-third the number would be more than sufficient for all purposes. This is apparent to everybody who has had any experience in legislative matat Annapolis.

"Of course, I was very bitterly denounced for my exposure of legislative extravagance in my message, being charged with 'cheese paring' and 'making a mountain out of a mole hill.'

Senator John Walter Smith had recently expressed it as his opinion that all of this talk in Annapolis about economy in legislative expenditures was simply 'making a mountain out of a mole hill.'

"If criticising this wanton expenditure of the people's money in payment of useless and unnecessary employes is 'cheese paring,' if it is 'making a mountain out of a mole hill,' then I am guilty. I shall never cease denouncing such unwarranted extravagance and such base grafting.

"Nothing has discredited the State of Pennsylvania more than the graft unearthed in connection with the furnishing of the Capitol at Harrisburg; nothing has discredited Maryland more than the padding of the legislative pay rolls during the last three Legislatures and by the present one.

"When I am told that it is 'making a mountain out of a mole hill' to denounce the appointment of three men (a postmaster, and assistant postmaster and a messenger to the postmaster of the Senate) to handle the mail of but 27 Senators; and the appointment of five folders, when there is nothing to be folded, and no possible work for them to do; and the appointment of clerks and messengers to committees that never meet, all of which costs the State thousands of dollars, I feel that I am justified in continuing my 'cheese paring' criticisms and 'making such a mountain out of a mole hill.'

"Nothing that has ever happened in the history of the legislative bodies of Maryland has been more scandalous than this appointment of unnecessary employes. I can fully understand the difficulty which the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House have experienced in finding positions for unnecessary appointees. It really required great and painstaking ingenuity to create such a number of positions in which to 'take care of political workers.'

"The Journal of the Senate shows that that body was in session, all told, during the month of January 16 hours and 46 minutes, distributed over 13 days. The Journal of the House does not give this information in all cases. That body was in session 13 days also. The length of those sessions is stated in the Journal during 8 of the 13 days, and shows that on those 8 days the total length of the sessions of the House was 11 hours. This would seem to indicate that the House was in session about the same length of time during the month of January as was the Senate. The amount paid the legislative employes for this 16 hours in the month of January was $22,579.58, or $1,288 an hour.

"This does not require comment. The people must not forget that all these employes so appointed are paid $5 a day every day for the 90 days of the session, including Sundays and days when there are no sessions and the time when they are absent from the duties supposedly assigned them."

Mr. Warfield intimated that if any of the members of the Legislature desired any further information concerning his figures he would furnish it. He went to New York last night and will return Thursday.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

A large sleighing party under the direction of the Epworth League took a drive to Deer Park Tuesday night, leaving here about 7.30 and returning about 10.30. There were about seventy-five in the party conveyed in four large sleds. They all claim to have had a good time though some were compelled to walk on striking bare ground.

A bill for the incorporation of the Park as other towns in the State has been presented in the Legislature by Senator Speicher.

Mr. C. F. Dawson, who has been employed at his trade in Rowlesburg and Fairmont, W. Va., was at home a few days this week. He has work at the places named for some months.

Building operations will be resumed on the water plant as soon as the weather will permit.

We understand that the Association will erect a postoffice building at the station this spring.

Preaching in the M. E. church Sunday at 11.00 a. m. and 7.30 p. m.

Mrs. F. P. Arnold had the misfortune to fall on the ice and break her arm a few days ago.

Mrs. Freeland, wife of the manager of the Park, was very dangerously ill a few days ago. She has now almost fully recovered her usual health.

Mr. Levi Echard has so far recovered as to be able to drive to Oakland yesterday.

A number of our boarding houses will most likely not take boarders the coming season on account of the extremely high price of everything that goes on the table.

On oyster supper under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church will be given next Tuesday evening at Haydenhurst. A musical and literary program will be presented and ice cream, cake and coffee will also be served. A good time is anticipated and all will be made welcome.

Mr. and Mrs. Winchell are now with us, occupying "Land's End."

THE LEGISLATURE IS NOT DOING MUCH

No Important Bill Has Yet Been Reported.

There have been introduced at Annapolis about 525 bills of greater or less importance, mostly less, and of these fewer than 25 have been enacted into laws. Not one measure, however, in which the public at large is interested has as yet come out of committee. Some of these committees, notably the Judiciary and Corporations, are already loaded down with all sorts of propositions, not a few of which will not see the light of day until the session nears a close, and then they will be accompanied by an unfavorable report. Hearings have been granted for and against some, but there appears to be no indication of a desire to push any of them along.

Within one week two-thirds of the session will have passed, and unless something is done to expedite business all of the work will be crowded into the last four weeks of the session. While this is not an unusual proceeding, it should not be followed this time inasmuch as there is more, much more, important legislation under consideration than has been offered in many years. Business propositions, political reforms and amendments to the Constitution of paramount importance must be disposed of if the General Assembly hopes to satisfy the people. If, after careful consideration, the committees feel convinced that the bills should or should not be passed action should be taken and the measure disposed of, but no more than a reasonable time is required to reach a decision.

It is a favorite method of opponents legislation in which they are interested to prevent action by demanding more hearings, and frequently the committees in charge, hard pressed on either side or for reasons best known to themselves, play into the objectors' hands. There are now important bills that are being held back which could readily be disposed of and the passage of which is endangered by reason of delay.

Not a single bill of importance has reached either House or Senate, nor has there been any discussion of passing interest. The Senate is not, as a rule, in session more than half an hour, nor does the business in the House require more than one hour's time. The legislature convenes at noon and by 3 o'clock the State House is practically deserted. Three-fourths of the Baltimore contingent hurry off to the train immediately after adjournment instead of remaining to consider bills of local interest. Not half a dozen committees meet in the afternoon and none at all at night.

If it were not that legislation absolutely essential to an improvement in business and political conditions was imperiled no harm would be done, as the bulk of the bills might as well be thrown aside. Unfortunely for the people these measures receive as much attention as the good ones when time is pressing.

Probably the most important matter with which the legislature has to deal is the financial problem. Some scheme must be devised to make both ends meet. If political parties would treat this proposition as does a merchant his business there would be no difficulty. Unfortunately, however, the politician believes it more advisable to disregard the necessities of the people than to add a penny to the state tax rate. He does not believe in cutting off useless offices created to make places for favorite workers, but he does not hesitate to deprive an institution, which accomplishes much good, of the aid it requires to continue its beneficent work.

There are at least a half dozen bureaus costing the state thousands of dollars which might well be dispensed with, and the money they now receive directed to charitable and educational institutions. If any of these useless appendages have been conducive of good or added to the revenues of the state, their reports don't show it. Inasmuch, however, as it is the political policy to continue these, some provision should also be made for the necessary appendages, nor would the taxpayers object to the imposition of an extra cent or two if they know they are getting returns.

Two years ago the legislature fixed the tax rate at such a figure that there was not enough to meet the expenditures. Apprehending a shortage in view of the additional demands that have since been made upon the treasury the Governor cut down many appropriations for deserving institutions, a number of them not receiving more than one-half what they required. As a result some have been obliged to go into debt. The hearings before the Finance and Ways and Means committees brought these conditions to light.

Now it is proposed to make even further reductions, reductions which would actually cripple some of them, and yet not a word is heard about abolishing the departments that might well be spared.

When men and women of standing in the state, who devote much of their time to improving the physical, moral and mental conditions of their fellowbeings, call upon the state to aid them in their laudable undertakings, they should be given every encouragement. One of the ladies who appeared in behalf of an institution which is engaged in making useful citizens of incorrigible boys without sending them to reformatories, and who demonstrated very clearly the effectiveness of the work already done, stated that the benefit derived by the state could not be measured by dollars. And she was right.

When therefore it has come to a pass that such institutions, and there are many others of equal worth, must suspend or even curtail operations because the state treasury cannot stand the drain, it is time that political expediency be made a secondary consideration and a few cents be added to the state tax rate.

It is argued that there are institutions not entitled to assistance and that the money they receive is not expended judiciously. This may be true, but the treasury could be protected if a bill like that introduced by Senator Gorman was enacted into law. The state could well afford to pay an inspector whose sole duty should be to investigate the accounts of all institutions receiving state aid and determine the uses to which the money is put. He could report his findings to the next legislature, which would then be guided in making appropriations.

There is still talk of "tinkering" with the election laws so as to make voting more difficult for Republicans. The extension of the Wilson law to Baltimore is favored by some of the most daring politicians in the city, but the leaders are fearful of the result. They would not dare to practice the tricks the Eastern Shore politicians have found effective and if all voters were placed on an equal footing, the ballot being fair under the law, the Democrats might lose as many votes as the Republicans.

The latest scheme is to bag the congressmen in the First and Fifth districts by combining the state and congressional elections. The Price amendment to the Constitution empowering the General Assembly to fix the time for elections would, if passed, make this possible. It is not so easy now, even by using trick folds, to defeat the Republican candidate for Congress, especially in an off year or when only one cross-mark is required, if, however, the names can be switched between the many others in the state ticket, a Charles county puzzle would render it easy for Democrats to return their candidate.

A multiplicity of amendments on the ballot at the next state election would help to put the scheme through; that is to say, in the counties affected, but it is not likely that the great number of independents in the city and Western Maryland would consent to such an amalgation. It is also intimated that another disfranchisement amendment may be put to the voters with the hope the illiterates in Southern and Eastern Maryland will be unable to single this out from the many others.

The Frederick county schemers who have sought to induce other party men in the General Assembly to deprive the Republicans of the county patronage failed in their mission. They could not find a party man who would introduce the bills they wanted passed, and even had they succeeded, the Governor would undoubtedly have interposed a veto. He does not believe in executive or legislative interference in affairs purely local.

Leaving the Farm.

An English writer gives some significant figures in an article published recently in the London Magazine. He says that in 1851, with a population of 18,000,000, Great Britain had 1,376,000 workers on farms, while in 1901, with 38,000,000 people, there were only 727,000 workers on farms. At the same we are told that since 1898 an area of of half a million acres has been added to the deer preserves of Scotland alone, bringing the total of such preserved lands up to 3,000,000 acres. Nevertheless there are still some people who have a sort of sentimental sympathy for the peers who own a goodly share of the land of Britain, because they happen to be sons of their fathers—first sons of their fathers, to be precise.

NO GROUND FOR DISCOURAGEMENT.

Just because the Missouri, Michigan or New York orchardist reads of fruit returns from the mountain and Pacific coast states far surpassing any he has been able to secure is no reason why he should throw up the sponge, if he feels inclined to do so, and grub out his trees. Rather should he take account of the careful methods by which the western fruit ranchman is able to secure such high returns—namely, painstaking handling of the soil, great care in pruning and spraying, costly thinning, which insures fruit of a proper size, and lastly, and as important as any factor, co-operation in the matter of packing and marketing. Many a New England orchard has been rejuvenated and made immensely profitable by the employment of scientific methods in caring for it, and many another may be made a large source of revenue if handled in the same way. Nearness to market is another factor decidedly to the advantage of the eastern apple grower, as it costs about 90 cents a bushel to land the bushel box of fancy fruit from the Pacific coast in New York or Boston. Let eastern orchard owners make their orchards a primary instead of a second or third rate consideration and give them the attention that the western ranchman does his and they will be surprised at the results.

A NEW MEXICO QUERY.

A lady reader of these notes living near Mountainair, N. M., writes inquiring if strawberries will grow and do well in the rich chocolate soil of that section and if they will need covering during the winter. While the writer is not acquainted personally with the section in question, two or three general statements may be made which will be helpful. In the first place, chocolate soil is usually as rich in fertilizing elements as any other and would seem to be all right for the strawberry. A more important consideration would be sufficient moisture to insure the growth of the plants and the maturing of the fruit, and this would have to be supplied by ditch at needed times if the rainfall were not sufficient. Cultivation should be given often enough to keep the soil mellow and to conserve the moisture. If during the months when the plants were dormant the mercury did not go lower than 10 above zero, the bed would hardly need covering. However, in this connection it is well to keep in mind the fact that it is not degrees of cold that kill berry vines, but alternate thawing and freezing, and local conditions would determine to quite an extent the probable danger from this source.

BLOOD TOLD.

That blood will tell, even in the raising of corn, was nicely illustrated in the case of an Iowa grower who paid $5.35 per bushel for his seed at the time of the corn contest at the State Agricultural college. To prove to his own satisfaction the value of pure bred seed over the best seed selected from common corn, he planted the pure bred seed—Reid's Yellow Dent—in rows alongside the other corn. Both plots had the same stand and received the same cultivation and care. At husking time the pure bred corn yielded at the rate of seventy-one and a half bushels per acre, while the scrub corn gave a return of fifty-nine bushels, a difference of eleven and a half bushels per acre. Since a bushel of corn will plant seven acres it is quite clear that this amount of seed would produce an increased yield equal to seven times that on one acre, or eighty and a half bushels. If this corn was worth 50 cents a bushel, the bushel of seed was worth in crop returns $40.25 more than the common corn. It would be well for the corn grower to have instances of this in mind when he pays a long price for good seed corn next spring.

THE EVERLASTING RAT PEST.

Considering the enormous loss from the rat pest, placed at $100,000,000 annually in this country alone, every farmer and householder should do all in his power by means of traps, poisons and any other devices to reduce the number of the rodents to a minimum. That the war against them should be unending is indicated from their remarkable prolificacy, the adult female producing an average of ten young ones to the litter and from three to five litters in a season. One of the best methods of slow poisoning is one part of barytes mixed with eight parts of cornmeal and stirred into a stiff dough and portions of it placed where the rats will get hold of it. This has an advantage over strychnine or arsenic in that after getting it the rats have time to leave the buildings in which they happen to be in search of water. Cage and guillotine traps, cats and rat terriers are also effective aids in the work of destruction.

One's real rating as to character is as often indicated by the kind of eggs he turns in at the country grocer's as by the enrollment of his name as a member of the nearby kirk.

In buying pure bred cattle it is well for the purchaser to insist on a guarantee of freedom from tuberculosis and from infection with contagious abortion. There are other ailments he may steer shy of, but these are chief as well as most common.

Strictly used, the word "thoroughbred" refers to a definite breed of horses—running horses—and not to thoroughness or purity of breeding. In the same way the phrase "standard bred" refers to a breed of trotting horses. The word "pure bred" is properly used in referring to any breed of animals or fowls that is full, or pure, blooded.

There are sections in Idaho where the weather is so clear and the air so dry during the season of ripening and following that some growers make a practice of allowing blackberries to remain on the vines and evaporate in the sun. When sufficiently dry the canes are cut, run through a sort of thrasher and the dried fruit cleaned and packed.

The fellows who trusted to luck and left their potatoes undug until Oct. 15 last season had an experience they will not soon forget, as hundreds of thousands of bushels through all the northern states were ruined and rendered unmarketable by the cold snap of that date. With no starch factory or denatured alcohol distillery at hand they proved in many cases a total loss.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars that are squandered annually in wildcat investment schemes and blue sky enterprises could be saved for the investors if before letting loose of their money they would get an honest opinion as to the reliability of such concerns from a home banker. It would mean a few cents tied up in postage, but this would be a mighty cheap way out.

In view of the fatal freeze of Oct. 12 and 13, it will be necessary to set an earlier date than Oct. 15 as the limit within which one should select his seed corn. If Sept. 20 were the time chosen and every corn grower went into his best field and secured the soundest and earliest maturing ears and had them hung up to dry by that time and saw to it that they were properly stored during the winter months, the seed corn problem would be reduced to a minimum through all the northern part of the corn belt.

The housewife who is on her feet so much of the day throughout all months of the year should learn a lesson from her husband, who not only rides when mowing, raking, reaping and plowing, but even takes it easy by rigging a riding gear to follow his harrow. This idea she may put to good account by purchasing a light fifty cent stool, two feet high, and having it handy to sit on when doing work at which she would otherwise have to stand. In the course of a long day a good deal of energy may be saved in this way.

It would make the farmers of those states where the rainfall was very heavy during November and where the country roads were rendered well nigh impassable for weeks gasp if they could see figured out in dollars and cents the actual loss they sustained in the single item of increased expense in hauling their produce to market. In many localities it was impossible to stir at all, while in others but a small jag could be moved, and four horses were often required to do this. It seems strange, with agricultural products representing so large a value, that rural dwellers take so slight an interest in a question that in the aggregate means a loss of millions of dollars to them annually.

As with a child, the time for doing most effective work in shaping the character and type of a tree is at the start. For this reason it is better to purchase fruit trees that are a year old rather than two or three years. The low head, which is so highly prized by most orchardists, is best secured by cutting the young tree back to from eighteen inches to two feet the same season it is set. This induces the growth of sturdy lateral branches and gives the trunk a stocky character that is of great value in succeeding years. Whether the tree should be given the vase shaped open top or the round and more close growing top will depend to a great extent upon the climatic conditions prevailing.

There came to the writer's attention the other day the instance of a creamery patron who thought he would get rich more quickly by mixing melted tallow in the can of cream from which the driver's sample was taken, thereby increasing the test of the cream nearly 100 per cent. This went on until the suspicions of the buttermakers and directors were aroused by the presence of the cold, unmixed tallow left in the strainer at the creamery. One day a two quart sample of the doped cream was turned over to the state pure food inspector, who sent it to a chemist for analysis, when 90 per cent of the fat it contained was found to be plain beef suet, amounting to a pound and four ounces. With this as a starter suit was instituted and a fine of $50 and costs levied. A little later the directors of the creamery compelled the offender to pay back $400, the amount estimated that he had received as a result of the false tests. As it turned out it proved to be high priced tallow, and it is clear that the game was not worth the candle.

The fewer of these thirty cents on the dollar investment schemes a fellow ties his hard earned money up in, in the vain hope of making fabulous returns, the more quarters he will have at the end of the year.

The cotton crop of 1909, while not the largest on record, is likely to prove the most valuable, with lint fetching 13.7 cents per pound on the farm and cotton seed worth about $25 per ton. At those prices the crop will be worth about $850,000,000 to the growers.

The Massachusetts state board of ealth has made some investigations into the somewhat mooted question of the relative keeping quality of drawn and undrawn poultry, and its verdict is that if the entrails are so drawn that none of their contents are spilled inside the body the bird keeps better than in the undrawn state.

The history of Berkshire hogs goes back 125 years, the progenitors of the popular breed being described as large in size and of a sandy or brownish color spotted with black. The present day type is black, with white in face, on feet and end of tail. The first importation of Berkshires into America was made by a New Jersey breeder in 1832.

The first prize in the students' judging contests at the international fat stock show held at Chicago in December went to the team from the state college at Ames, Ia., who had 4940 points to its credit. The Ontario team won second place with 4741 points, the other college teams taking part ranking in the following order: Ohio, 4722; Nebraska, 4661; Missouri, 4622; Kansas, 4603; Texas, 4435. The Iowa team won first on cattle and hogs, Missouri first on horses and Ohio first on sheep.

According to Secretary Wilson's annual report for 1909, the American tea crop consisted of 12,000 pounds and was grown in South Carolina in cooperation with the department at Washington. The experimental work attempted on a small scale at Pierce, Tex., has been abandoned owing to unfavorable climatic conditions. The proposition the department officials are up against in the production of tea is the 15 to 20 cent wage paid to tea pickers in the orient. Unless machinery can be devised to do the work there done by hand the tea growing business will have to be given up.

Azoturia, a disease of the horse family that yearly takes off thousands of valuable individuals, is directly due to overfeeding with nitrogenous foods, like clover and alfalfa, and lack of regular exercise. The illness is brought on by an overloading of the circulatory system with unoxidized nitrogen drawn from the liver, where it accumulates. While there are cures for the disease, it is easily prevented by reducing the nitrogenous ration—the feeding of timothy and clean straw, instead of clover and alfalfa, and feeding a light mixed ration of corn and oats. Another help for the horse which does not have regular work is the run of a paddock, where it will get exercise enough to keep in good condition.

J. G. Imboden, a leading Illinois cattle feeder, in a recent address before the Corn Belt Meat Producers' association advised his hearers as feeders of cattle to buy the common kinds of steers rather than high grades, as they would be able to get them at about their own prices since in the case of the grades the owner had too much to say about the price he received. While not intended as such, there seems to be a very excellent argument here for the cattle raiser to produce the grade and high grade steers rather than the scrub, as the call for them is so strong on the part of buyers that there are never enough to supply the demand. This means that the price for this class of steers will always range high.

Whether part of a preconceived scheme or not, it is observable if one looks into the situation at all that our system of national economy, especially as regards transportation and manufacture, seems to be so adjusted as to give the transportation companies of the country the longest possible hauls on raw and finished products. A few illustrations come readily to mind. Cow hides are shipped largely to New England in the raw (one freight charge) and then shipped back all over the west in enormous quantities (another freight charge). The wool product of the great west crosses the continent to eastern mills largely, and when made into blankets and garments is shipped halfway across the continent to reach its consumers (two transportation charges). Instead of the New England states producing all the butter that they use, the bulk of it is shipped from the Mississippi valley, the freight charge being reduced so low that thousands of the hilly farms of the east have been abandoned because of the western competition, but the transportation company gets the freight. And so the list might be enlarged, including Texas onions and vegetables shipped to New York and Chicago, Pacific coast fruits, etc., those near big markets being knocked out by cheap freight rates granted to those living at a distance, and yet through it all the railroads securing a big slice of the proceeds for getting the product whatever it may be, from producer to consumer. The development, which is certainly an interesting one, is on the increase, but whether best for the largest number of people in the long run remains to be seen.

LINCOLN'S FIRST NOMINATION

Suggestions to Celebrate Its Fiftieth Anniversary in Chicago, Indorsed by Senator Cullom.

Senator Shelby M. Cullom of Illinois, who cordially indorsed a few nights ago the suggestion of a Chicago newspaper that the fiftieth anniversary of the nomination of Abraham Lincoln at Chicago for the presidency be properly observed by a grand national celebration in that city during the middle of next May, said:

"I was present on the memorable occasion, not as a delegate, but among the public admitted, and it was a grand convention. I can see no objection to a great celebration in Chicago on the fiftieth anniversary, and I have no doubt the people of the country will join in making it a great success. Public men cheerfully will co-operate, and I have no dohbt the president will be glad to accept an invitation to be present and deliver an address.

"Such a celebration would do much to awaken patriotism among our people and promote unselfish love of country instead of love of one scheme or ambition as against another. There is occasion for patriotism these days as there was when the Chicago convention was held fifty years ago, and such celebrations as that proposed must be helpful to the whole country.

"The memory of the martyr Lincoln is dear to us all. The day has arrived when our people, undivided, can see him at his true worth and appreciate his greatness. I know his nomination was at the time construed in certain circles as the cause of war, but the error of that view long since has been admitted.

"The convention which it is suggested should be celebrated was note-worthy. It was a quiet but determined struggle within the party. I remember how the delegates and audience were swayed as the fortunes of the leaders changed. The supporters of Seward were wild with joy when during the balloting their candidate appeared in the lead, just as those of Lincoln were when their choice showed to advantage. Actual tears were shed as their candidates receded, but with all of the enthusiasm and ardor the convention proceeded with its work in a most impressive manner.

"To me the most impressive feature of a celebration such as that suggested would be participation of our great men to extol the virtues of Lincoln and reawaken dormant patriotism."

Chicago citizens generally received the suggestion with considerable enthusiasm. Among G. A. R. men the idea of celebrating the anniversary was received with much enthusiasm. It was said that all of the patriotic orders in Chicago would be glad to participate in commemorative exercises. John S. Varley, head of the Union Veterans' union, hailed the proposed celebration as a fitting tribute and said he had no doubt that the G. A. R. and other patriotic organizations would gladly take it up.

"Lincoln was the greatest of modern statesmen," said Mr. Varley, "and any celebration held to commemorate any event in his life cannot help but foster a love for their country in the hearts of all classes of citizens.

"The fiftieth anniversary of the nomination of Lincoln is an event that particularly deserves public notice. The convention really marked a turned point in the history of the country. It was the beginning of that period of suffering and stress that cement forever and with blood the ties that bind together the states that form the Union."

CONCRETE VS. STEEL

One Everlasting—The Other Expensive.

Two County Boards of Road Commissioners had an argument about highway bridges, and the following was the result:

Both counties were running about even in expenses, and with excellent credit and no indebtedness. One county borrowed $1,000 and built a steel highway bridge with a wooden floor. The other borrowed $1,350, and erected a permanent concrete bridge. Twenty-five years later the cost of the first bridge was as follows:

Interest on $1,000 at $60 a year	$1,500
Reflooring every five years, four times	400
Repainting every eight years, two times	100

This gives a total of $2,000, which amounts to $80 per year, and the $1,000 originally borrowed still unpaid, and must now be increased to $2,000, or go without a bridge. For the next twenty-five years the cost per year runs $60 more, by reason of the interest on the additional $1,000, and the amount in debt is $2,000. At the end of fifty years the amount will be paying at the rate of $200 per year, and be in debt $4,000. At the end of one hundred years it will be paying at the rate of $320 a year and be in debt $5,000. It takes no financier to see that the building of temporary steel or wooden bridges will lead to bankruptcy or higher tax rates.

The county that erected the permanent concrete bridge, costing nothing for repairs or repainting, but costing one-third more than the steel bridge in first cost, would have a charge of only $81 for interest and indebtedness, which would never need to be increased for that bridge.

In many places a properly designed concrete bridge will compete in cost with a steel bridge, both of the same loading capacity, and the concrete bridge employs materials and labor from the county, while the greater part of the cost of the steel bridge is expended out of the county, thus the money paid for the concrete bridge is returned to the tax payer, and the amount expended for the steel bridge is a constant drain on the tax payers.

If money can be borrowed at a lower rate on the bond issue, say 4 per cent, the showing is even more favorable for the concrete bridge, and the county can then afford to pay 50 per cent more for concrete than for steel. People in general ought to take more interest in these things, and one of the ways of obtaining information is to visit industrial shows, in this case, the cement show.

The next cement show will be given in Chicago, from February 18th-26th, in the Coliseum. It promises to be the greatest of its kind. There will be more than three hundred exhibitors, and much valuable information will be distributed on concrete, especially on bridges, residences, etc.

This is a valuable opportunity for farmers and highway commissioners to obtain reliable data on any work they are going to do in the coming year, and the displays are interesting and instructive.

Don't Preach About Home Trade

and at the same time send your orders for job printing out of town. Your home printer can do your work just as good, and in nine cases out of ten he can beat the city man's prices, because he pays much less for running expenses. By sending your next printing order to this office you'll be better satisfied all around, and you'll be keeping the money at home.

WHEN YOU WANT printing, you want good printing. That's the kind we do, and at the right prices. Give the home printer the same chance you would ask for the home merchant—trade at home.

OFF THE SAME PATTERN.

I've seen some mighty funny kinds
O' people in my day;
I've seen some men with knowin' minds
And some that's not that way.
I've watched them while they play the game,
And this is what I see:
They all stack up about the same.
They're jest a heap like me!

It's not much matter who they are
Nor where they live nor why,
A-drivin' mule or autocar,
Afoot or on the fly;
The rich, the poor and all the rest,
No matter what they be,
You look inside a feller's vest—
He's jest a heap like me!

That's why I ain't no sort o' cause
For findin' fault with man,
Sence the whole passle of them draws
To jest the selfsame plan.
The men that works, that sighs, that jokes,
And them that does all three,
They're all a pile o' right good folks
And jest a heap like me!

Encyclopedic Guideboards.

In many towns and counties now a white painted stone post gives in clear black letters at every fork in the roads a list of towns hardly less formidable than those on the train bulletins of a railroad terminal. At a glance the traveler may see his way along for fifty miles.

Sometimes the automobile associations are themselves responsible for information disseminating guideboards of different construction, but equally useful. The necessity of providing a new class of travelers with a new sort of facts has been back of the movement for guideboard rehabilitation. The contrast in this respect makes it easy to distinguish the regions of horse drawn vehicles content with a next town direction and those places which have felt the era of the automobile.

A lesson in local geography is carried in every such guideboard. Perhaps this revival of the guideboard is but a return to conditions that prevailed before the days of the railroad.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY, 17, 1910.

THE PLUM tree at Annapolis is being shaken, shooken, shook, and the Garrett county appointments are still in the Governor's green bag!

AND NOW Maryland's debonair ex-Governor, the Hon. Edwin Warfield, has placed himself on record again as opposing the State House grafters which may call for another attack upon his personality by the powers that be and surround the present Chief Executive.

EX-GOVERNOR WARFIELD'S expose of the State House grafting is meeting with the approval of every honest, well-thinking citizen of Maryland. He has the plaudits of the good people even if the curses of the ringsters are heaped upon his head.

"WILL THE Democratic Party Keep Its Pledges or Not?" is a headline in yesterday's Sun paper and refers to the present inactive and wholly incompetent Maryland Legisla ure. We rise to ask, "Has The Democratic Party EVER KEPT ITS PLEDGES TO THE PEOPLE OF MARYLAND?"

BUSINESS POLICY.

Managers of very large enterprises have different questions of business policy to solve which smaller firms are exempt from. When a firm or trust becomes so large or powerful that it dominates the market supply of a commodity, the question of "fixing prices" arises; in other words, it has become master to a large extent of the law of supply and demand, in that one line. Such domination is usually based upon control of the main sources of supply and of the bulk of the machinery of distribution, in addition to the manufacturing features which are the original scope of the business. Given a firm in such commanding position with respect to a commodity which the public needs and must buy in large quantities, be it beef or wheat, steel rails or coal oil, what are the principles which should actuate and determine the fixing of prices? Are they to be fixed at the utmost extent of the public's ability to pay, or at the reasonable limit of the company's ability to furnish?

Our business friends are familiar with the term "good will." It probably existed on earth as a business asset centuries before "the angels sang it in." Certain it is that it is as highly valuable an asset in the balance sheet now as it ever was. Can trusts or monopolies afford to dispense with it? To come down to the concrete facts, can any firm or corporation afford to squeeze its customers to the last limit of their endurance, and thus forfeit their good will? If an extra demand arises which causes a temporary shortage, is a corporation justified in temporarily putting up its prices, although its own manufacturing costs have not increased?

Many modern business men—the "public-be-d——d" type—will answer these questions without hesitation by the simple affirmation "business is business." But business is not business, as they mean it; it is horse sense and common sense and good sense applied to commercial life. The doctor who usually charges a certain sum for a certain service, and who doubles his fee because he is wanted more urgently, is not a sensible man. He makes enemies instead of friends. The shopkeeper who would charge me 10 cents for a 5 cent loaf of bread because I am extra hungry, is unprincipled, and gets no more of my future custom than I can help giving. The monopoly which fixes prices according to the demands of the market and not according to its cost price plus a reasonable profit is working upon equally false and unfortunate ethical and business principles. By so doing it is forfeiting the good will of its customers, it invites competition, it provokes hostile legislation and stringent regulation; in other words, it antagonizes the general public good will, and no business can permanently succeed upon such a foundation. A more secure business, a more permanently profitable business, a more honorable business can be built by cultivating the good will of the public, by a "public-be-pleased" policy and by avoiding exploitation of its necessities. Short-sighted, self-willed, hard fisted, penny-wise-and-pound-foolish some business men are, and they do not see the better way, the more honorable way—and in the end the really more profitable way—which best business sense and intuition sees and acts upon.

A GENERAL FAKE BALLOT.

If the subtle plans of the manipulators of the legislature are carried out, the entire state will have before it a fake ballot. If a definition of a fake ballot were to be asked, it could be very easily given in the words that any ballot that bears superfluous or misleading names or matter is to that extent a fake ballot. If it presents confusing arrangemente of names, lining devices or other methods to mislead, it is a trick ballot. Possibly no state in the Union knows more about this kind of voting than some portions of Maryland. The political schemers are now planning to perpetuate a fake ballot for the state by loading it with constitutional amendments that would completely bewilder a considerable portion of the voters and would cause even the intelligent voter to make errors that would jeopardize his vote.

In every first-class community in the country, with the exception of Maryland, the short-ballot movement is being fostered. The design is to have a ballot of convenient size with few names to vote and no extraneous matter. Here in Maryland the Democratic ring regards as its salvation the fouling of the polls with their malordorous devices intended to make it impossible to secure a straight, clean expression of the public will. The decent citizenship of the state resents the continued plotting of the men whose capacity to enact beneficial legislation when in office is only equal by their incapacity to distinguish between creditable politics and the low grade of machination that is unworthy of men claiming to have regard for the rights, duties and dignities of citizenship.

A half-dozen amendments to the Constitution have already been tinkered or are in process of manufacture, and others are likely to outcrop before the close of the session. The device of multiplying proposals for the consideration of the voter and of making a ballot already the most unwieldy in the country even more preposterous, indicates that the Democrats regard their chances of winning upon their record, unsupported by devious devices, exceedingly slender. The prospect of another suffrage amendment has not been passed over. Even in the last days there may be sprung upon the people the travesty of a constitutional disfranchising amendment. Let it be said again, as has been said in warning time and again by The American, expressing as it does the sentiments common to all circles of society, that the end of the process of insulting the Constitution of the state by the proposal of amendments, made not in the interest of the state, but for the duplicitous purpose of a party, will meet with the repulse from power of the party following such a course.

The people of Maryland have been able to get along very comfortably under the Constitution as it is, with an occasional amendment dictated by necessity. They believe they will be as cared for in the future without an outbreak of amendment that would make the ballot look as if it had a case of black measles. They understand very well that the men who are solicitous about amending the Constitution are the same who are incapable of passing effective legislation for the benefit of the state. They fully appreciate the inconsistency of the position of the constitutional lawyers who flutter about the Democratic loft in proposing changes in the organic law, while at the same time the Democratic leaders are engaged in bringing the political rights of the people into disgrace by any pretext they can hit upon.

At present it appears to be a toss-up what kind of a device will be next hit upon for carrying elections. One hundred thousand registered voters counted out at the last election will have to be accounted for in the reckoning next time, for the people will require the deed of perfidy to be answered for. In that number were many of the same political persuasion as the Democratic wreckers, and the persons have salted wounds that refuse to heal under the salve of unctuous cajolery. If the attempt shall be made to have the intolerable campaign plots still more pernicious, then the issue is not difficult to forecast.

What the Democratic leaders are looking for is a cover from the glare of publicity, something under which the trick work of elections can be done with such an air of candor and frankness, of benignancy and openness as to lead the voters to believe that the campaign has been carried on under high-minded influences. This is a bit difficult, because the people cannot be fooled all the time; in fact, they are never fooled by the devices of the Democrats. So the old blundering way of going into battle with boomerangs will be observed. The days of Democratic blunderbussing are not over. The present trend, as reflected in the counsels of the Democratic leaders and in the manipulations they foolishly believe to have the fine Italian quality, disclose the prospect for a repetition of familiar tactics.—Baltimore American.

In Memoriam.

In loving remembrance of Vera Marie Ferguson, who was called from earth Feb. 13, 1909.

How we miss her bright smiles and the sound of her sweet voice. But it speaks to us yet, as it were, in tones inaudible. How vividly we remember the sweet face and lovable qualities that endeared her to all. She is not forgotten—the brilliant example of her brief life will go on—

Vera has grown more fair,
Vera is happier there,
For Jesus called her to share
His mansion of glory over there.

NOT SUFFICIENTLY TAUGHT

Only Small Percentage of School Children Receive Proper Instruction Concerning Tuberculosis.

Definite instruction concerning the nature and methods of prevention of tuberculosis is being given to less than 6 per cent of the public school children of the United States according to a bulletin issued today by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

Recent investigation has shown that in only nine cities, Washington, D. C., Dallas, Tex., Richmond. Va., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Detroit, Mich., Malden, Mass., Salem, Mass., Saginaw, Mich., and Knoxville, Tenn., are special textbooks being used or lectures being given about tuberculosis. In three states and one territory, Michigan, Massachusetts, North Carolina and Porto Rico, laws have been passed requiring that instruction about the nature and methods of prevention of tuberculosis be given in all public schools. In Tennessee the State Department of Education has requested that such instruction be given and has issued circulars for this purpose. In New Jersey and West Virginia wall-cards giving instruction are hung in every school-room and the attention of all children is called to them. The actual number of children, however, who will this year be taught by their teachers that tuberculosis is a communicable, infectious disease, and that it can be prevented, will not exceed one million. If the state laws requiring such instruction were strictly enforced, at least 2,000,000 children would be reached.

While tuberculosis does not cause as many deaths among school children as it does among workingmen or among infants under five years of age, the National Association gives some figures to show how serious the disease is among this class. Based on the census of 1900 it is estimated that nearly 100,000 children now in school will die of tuberculosis before they are eighteen years of age, or that about 6,400 die annually from this disease. Estimating that on an average each child who dies of tuberculosis has had six years of schooling the aggregate loss to the country in wasted education each year amounts to $1,152,000. According to investigations made in New York, Boston and Stockholm, the percentage of children who are afflicted with tuberculosis is much larger than the death rate would indicate.

The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis declares that there are two ways of checking the ravages of tuberculosis among school children. The first way is to instruct every school child about the dangers of the disease, and to show them how they themselves may prevent tuberculosis in their homes. The second method is to establish open-air schools for all childaen who have tuberculosis or who are suspected cases, segregating them from the healthy children.

BITTINGER.

Miss Missouri Bowman, who is in charge of a district school near Grantsville, drove to this village last Friday evening to spend Saturday and Sunday with old friends, and when near her destination her horse got fast in a snow drift and as he could not get out with the sleigh, Miss Bowman unhitched him from the sleigh and when the animal was freed from the snow drift she mounted and road to Joel Orendorf's, leaving the sleigh sticking in the drift. All day Saturday and Sunday a terrific snow storm piled the snow many feet in the lanes and on Monday morning Miss Bowman found her sleigh hidden from sight and the drifted condition of the roads made it impossible to return to her school.

Deputy Sheriff Shartzer, of Oakland, was in this neighborhood one day last week discharging the duties of his office.

A. J. Oester was employed in making some necessary repairs to Dennis Brenneman's residence last week.

J. B. Harmon was in this village last week soliciting orders for fertilizer.

Samuel Bowser, teacher of the Foxtown public school, is arranging to locate permanently in the far west as soon as his school closes in the spring.

J. T. Lohr made a business trip to Salisbury, Pa., on day last week.

Asa Bittinger purchased a splendid new sleigh last week, and with the great abundance of snow and the number of attractive young ladies in the country there should be much occasion for using the new sleigh.

The lover of winter scenery would find ample satisfaction in looking over Garrett county this winter.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. MARGARET GLOVER.

Mrs. Margaret Glover, wife of Mr. Dennis Glover, of Hutton, died last Friday afternoon at the Maryland University Hospital, Baltimore, where she had undergone three operations of a serious nature within the past three weeks. Mrs. Glover was taken to Baltimore nearly three months ago for treatment. Her physicians and family entertained great hopes for her recovery until the early part of last week when a complication arose and she grew steadily worse until death came. She was the daughter of Mrs. Margaret Connell, of Oakland, and is survived by her husband and several children, as well as by two brothers, Messrs. John Connell, of Hutton, and Richard Connell, of Morgantown, and by three sisters, Mrs. Parley DeBerry, of Terra Alta; Mrs. Tina Taylor, of Century, and Miss Ellen Connell, of Oakland. The funeral of Mrs. Glover occurred Monday from the Presbyterian church at Terra Alta, and was conducted by Rev. John A. McClelland, of Grafton, the interment being made at Terra Alta.

BERNARD GEISSMAN.

Bernard Geissman, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Geissman, of Oakland, died at Sylvan Retreat, Cumberland, last Sunday morning at five o'clock, having been a patient in that institution for about two weeks. He was born February 16th, 1889, and yesterday, the day of his funeral, witnessed his twenty-first anniversary. Prior to his recent illness the deceased was employed in a clerical position in the United States Navy Yard in Washington, D. C., where he was held very high for his gentlemanly bearing and strict attention to his duties. While at work about four weeks ago he was taken violently ill and was immediately brought to his home in Oakland by his father where he was given the best attention by his devoted parents, but his ailment failed to respond to treatment and upon being advised he was taken to Cumberland where it was hoped he would be restored to health. A few days following his removal to that place he seemed to be growing better and hopes were entertained for his ultimate and speedy recovery, but death intervened and he passed peacefully away. His remains were brought to his home here Sunday afternoon and the funeral occurred yesterday morning from St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church in Oakland, the services, solemn and impressive, being conducted by the pastor, Rev. E. Manges, in the presence of a large number of sympathizing relatives and friends. The pastor spoke of the blameless life led by the young man, of his passionate love for his bereaved parents and his fealty for his church and his friends, many of whom were present to bear mute testimony to the high esteem in which he was ever held. The pallbearers were among his companions in life, namely Wallace Brown, Carter Welling, Homer Turney, Mark White, Will Scherr and Arthur Naylor, and the flower bearers were Dr. W. W. Grant and Samuel Lantz. The church choir rendered some beautiful music and Dr. John G. Robinson sang "Lead, Kindly Light." After the services in the church the remains were conveyed to the Oakland cemetery and there consigned to mother earth to await that great day when the Lord shall say, "Arise!"

ELEVEN YEARS AGO

The Weather Was Worse Than the Recent Rough Spell.

Eleven years ago Monday this section of Maryland was in the throes of the worst snow storm and blizzard that Oakland had ever known. The falling and drifting snow, with the thermometer away below zero, had completely tied up traffic on the railway and for three days in succession not a particle of mail was delivered to or dispatched from the local postoffice. Trains were abandoned by the crews and left standing on sidetracks and in several instances passenger trains were snowed in completely so that they could move neither forward or backward until a way was opened by men with shovels.

Several sections of a troop train bearing the Twelfth Regulars, enroute to the Philippines, where the insurrection was just breaking out, were stalled at numerous places between here and Cumberland at which point they laid for several days. The regimental band gave concerts daily in the Academy of Music there at which it was the pleasure of the editor to be present, he having been snowed up at Cumberland also.

Ex-Sheriff Austin Brown was over on the line of the Western Maryland Railroad several days last and this week on business

Mr. G. S. Hamill, Jr., left Oakland yesterday morning for Baltimore from which city he will accompany his family home this week.

Miss Elizabeth West, who spent a week as the guest of Miss Naomi Crawford in Baltimore, has returned to her home in Oakland.

Mrs. Harland L. Jones returned to her home in Oakland last Wednesday from a visit of three weeks to friends in Ohio and West Virginia.

Miss Margaret Browning, of Lake Brown, who spent a week in Oakland as the guest of her sister, Mrs. N. R. Sanner, returned to her home this morning.

Mr. George Loar, of Grafton, and his sister, Miss Lottie Loar, of Oakland, left here Monday morning for Washington, D. C., whence they will go on to Florida and spend a few weeks.

Mr. D. W. Wilson, of near Wilson, was in the city Tuesday morning making some purchases of roofing, paints, etc., with which he intends to improve his home during the spring months.

Ex Cons able Maffett has been confined to his bed for several days past with an attack of the grip and complications. He was quite ill for a day or two but is somewhat improved at present.

Mrs. George Crawford and son Alvan returned to Oakland from a visit of several weeks to friends and relatives in Baltimore, Frederick and points in Frederick county last Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Joseph E. Harned entertained quite a number of ladies and gentlemen at her residence on Second street last Thursday evening, flinch being engaged in until a late hour, followed by refreshments.

Mr. John W. Stanton, of Chicago, Ill., arrived in Oakland yesterday morning, where he will remain for a week or ten days for the benefit of his health and as the guest of his brother Mr. J. M. Stanton.

Among those from Oakland who attended the funeral of Mrs. Dennis Glover at Terra Alta Monday were Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Naylor, Mrs. U. G. Palmer, Miss Julia E. Byrne and Mr. D. Y. Morris.

Mr. Lloyd C. Shaffer, of Carmel, was in Oakland Tuesday, going from here to Baltimore on a special train which was run by the B. & O. for the benefit of West Virginia merchants doing their buying in that city.

Miss Ellen Connell, who was absent from Oakland for several days recently owing to the illness and death of her sister, Mrs. Dennis Glover, has returned, being accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Margaret Connell, and aunt, Mrs. Kirby.

Mrs. Herman Creutzburg entertained a party of twenty ladies at valentine flinch at her residence Monday afternoon. The rooms were tastefully decorated with hearts and other valentine day emblems and was a most delightful affair. Dainty refreshments were served by the hostess to her guests.

Mr. R. A. Smith, of the Hamill Mining Company, Blaine, was in Oakland Monday night and Tuesday morning on business. Mr. Smith reports business good in the Potomac Valley region, the mines and mills running on full time with demands for products in keeping with the supply.

A corps of Baltimore and Ohio railroad engineers are surveying for a pipe line, nine miles long, to follow the railroad from Everett's tunnel in this county to Keyser, for the purpose of furnishing good water for the engines of the company, the water now being used being injurious. It will be a gravity line.

Mr. Charles S. Davis, of J. M. Davis & Sons, returned Saturday evening from Philadelphia, where he had been attending a meeting of the Pennsylvania Hardware Dealers' Association, and left again on Monday for Wheeling to attend a meeting of the West Virginia Association, he being a member of both organizations.

Rev. J. B. Shoup, formerly of Bittinger, who left this county early in the fall for the South, has been at the home of his daughter in North Carolina during the entire winter, his physical condition being such as to prohibit his journey further south to his new home at Veteran, Florida, which point, however, he hopes to reach in a few weeks, as expressed in a letter received here by a friend a short time ago.

Messrs. A. D. Naylor & Co., of Oakland, have a force of men engaged in Petersburg, West Va., installing hot water heating plants in two dwellings owned by State Senator L. J. Forman of West Virginia. Mr. Ernest Townshend is foreman in charge of the work and it will require some days to complete it. Several years ago the local firm of heating contractors installed a plant in Senator Forman's dwelling resulting in such satisfactory service that the two additional plants were contracted for. The material for the work were hauled a distance of forty-two miles overland to Petersburg from Keyser, West Va., at a cost of about $20 per ton, thus making the work very expensive.

Married.

BECKWITH—SANDERS.—At Cumberland on Tuesday, by Rev. J. William McCauley, Mr. Ira Julian Beckwith, of Oakland, and Miss Mary Florence Sanders, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Sanders, of near Oakland. The young people left Oakland Monday afternoon, going from here to Mountain Lake Park, where they took the train for Cumberland and were married. From Cumberland they went to Johnstown, Pa., where they will spend a short time and then return to Oakland and go to housekeeping.

GRAVES—LITTLE.—At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Little, Oak street, Oakland, Tuesday evening by Rev. E. Manges, pastor of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, in the presence of the immediate family of the bride, Mr. Wilmer J. Graves, of Jeannette, Pa., and Miss Christina Little. Following the ceremony a wedding supper was served and the couple left on train No. 12 for Jeannette, where the groom is engaged in business and where their future home will be made. The bride is a most excellent young lady and the couple have the best wishes of many friends for a long and happy wedded life.

LEE—BOWERS—Mr. Charles B. Lee, a prominent ranchman of Shattuck, Oklahoma, was married last Thursday evening to Mrs. Malissa F. Bowers, of Piedmont, Rev L. D. Parry, paster of the First M. E. church, Piedmont, officiating, and the happy couple left on train No. 55 for their future home in Oklahoma. It was quite a romantic affair as both the bride and groom had been married previously and one was a widow and the other a widower. The romance of it was that prior to their previous matrimonial experience when children together in Garrett county had been "sweethearts."

GONDER—WEST—On Thursday evening of last week, at the Lutheran parsonage in Oakland, by Rev. E. Manges, Mr. Thomas A. Gonder and Miss Annie McComas West, two of Oakland's prominent and best known young people, were joined in wedlock in the presence of the minister's family and Mrs. Henry W. McComas, aunt of the bride. The wedding was kept secret by those interested until yesterday morning when it was announced, causing much surprise even among the closest friends of both bride and groom. The bride is the eldest daughter of Mayor and Mrs. Truman West and is a charming young lady. The groom is the second son of Mrs. and the late Justice Andrew B. Gonder and is a most excellent young man. They will make their home in Oakland where Mr. Gonder is about to enter into the drug business. THE REPUBLICAN extends its best wishes.

Workmen are engaged this week repairing and recalcining the wall in the auditorium of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church. Since the building was erected numerous unsightly cracks have appeared in many places in the walls and ceiling. These are being filled under the supervision of Mr. John Ault and Mr. James O. Cleveland and when completed a great improvement in the appearance of the audience room will be readily noted.

Sheriff Andrew Medders, of Kent county, this state, has negotiated for the purchase of two thoroughbred bloodhounds for running down chicken thieves of that community. These bloodhounds are to be presents from the farmers whose crops have been devastated. Capt. J. W. McClay lost 40 fine fowls one night last week, and his neighbor lost 16. In and about Kennedyville the farmers have lost scores of chickens and hams.

Last Sunday morning notwithstanding the extreme cold weather and the accompaning blizzard, about twenty-five members of the local lodge Knights of Pythias attended service in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church where they were addressed by Rev. E. Mangee, the pastor of the church. The preacher based his remarks on the great love existing between David and Jonathan and drew from the lesson that brotherly spirit that links Pythians so closely together.

The directors of the B. & O. have approved President Willard's program of betterments. These betterments include the expenditure of $16,000,000 for new equipment, mostly monster freight engines, and other large sums for new trackage and the elimination of tunnels. The company's chief lack has been in motive power, and it seems now to be engaged in a sincere endeavor to put itself in condition to take all the business that is offered it at fair rates, which is about all we may reasonbly expect from a railroad.

Last Saturday morning Sheriff Andrew Shartzer, accompanied by Attorney J. W. S. Cochrane, of Cumberland, Constables Brown and Callis and Mr. John T. Browning, started from Oakland for Friendsville in a sled drawn by two horses, the parties being interested in the disposal of the Long property at Friendsville which was advertised to be sold Saturday morning at Sheriff's sale. After battling with the snow until the top of Hooppole Ridge was reached further progress was arrested by the breaking of the swingle trees, the disarrangement of the harness and the well-nigh exhaustion of the animals, when the party was compelled to return to Oakland, and the sale of the property has been postponed until March 12th, as will be noticed by advertisement elsewhere in this paper today.

THE CRY NOW IS ON TO PITTSBURG

Western Maryland Seeks the Power to Extend Its Line.

A bill of supreme importance to the State of Maryland was taken to Annapolis Thursday by Mr. George R. Gaither and Mr. Winslaw S. Pierce and put in charge of Mr. Girdwood. It will be engrossed and introduced today. The bill is designed to enable the Western Maryland railroad to finance the extension from Cumberland to Connellsville, where it will connect with the Vanderbilt system and enter Pittsburg.

The bill, in brief, is to authorize the Western Maryland company to sell its unissued stock at the the market price, which is now about $50 a share. It is also authorized by the bill to aid the construction of any railroad within or outside the State if the same when constructed shall either directly or through an intervening line connect with or form a continuous line with the Western Maryland road.

The proposed Pittsburg extension cannot be constructed under the charter of the Western Maryland company. Two new charters will be obtained under general laws—one for a road from Cumberland, or rather from the connection of the George's Creek road, near Cumberland, to Mason and Dixon's line, and another under the Pennsylvania laws to construct from the Maryland line to New Haven, Pa., a town adiacent to Connellsville. The Western Maryland company owns the George's Creek road and uses its tracks through the Narrows to a point several miles northwest of Cumberland.

This proposed construction will make a line from Baltimore to Pittsburg 308 miles in length, considerably shorter than either the Pennsylvania or the B. & O. The right of way has been acquired, preliminary surveys have been made, and it is expected that the work of construction will proceed rapidly. It is also expected that the road will be in running order within two years from the time construction begins. The distance from Cumberland to New Haven is 88 miles, and the estimated cost for a single-track road is $8,000,000. But it is expected that not less than $10,000,000 will be actually spent. All the bridges and tunnels will be made for a double track, and a double track will be laid from Cumberland past Savage mountain.

The authorized capital stock of the Western Maryland company is $60,000,000, of which $10,000,000 is preferred. Of the $50,000,000 common stock some $23,000,000 is outstanding and more than $26,000,000 is in the treasury of the company. It is this latter that is to be sold and the money used to subscribe to the stock of the two companies that are to build the line to Connellsville. Then the stock of those two companies will go into the treasury of the Western Maryland company. Under existing law a sale of the stock for less than par might make the purchasers liable for the debts of the company to the extent of the difference between the amount they pay for it and the face value. To avoid this is one object of the bill.

The construction of this proposed connecting link will be of enormous value to Western Maryland. It will realize the hopes and expectations of the people at the time the road was sold to the Fuller syndicate. It will bring to Baltimore traffic of the Middle West and the Lake region now controlled by the Vanderbilt Western system and perhaps from the Wabash as well. It will require the construction of additional terminals at Baltimore and will greatly enlarge the commerce of the port.

It is the expectation that every member of the city delegation will urge the enactment of this bill and that tney will receive especially the aid of all the delegations from the western counties.

A SOUTHERN LETTER

Something About the Piled up Grandeur of the Scenery of West Virginia

I fell in with an American once in Turkey, end we were admiring the rugged scenery that lines the Bosphorus between the Black Sea and the Sea of Marmora.

"It suggests to me a little the Kanawha River in West Virginia I said to him.

"I have never been in West Virginia," he replied.

"That's funny," I remarked, "for West Virginia is on the border of your state."

"Yes, but it never seemed to me there was much over that way to be interesting."

I looked at the mountains that hedged us in and called to mind again the magnificent mountains of the Virginia country I had referred to and wondered at the man. Southern Europe and Eastern Asia are rich in attractive scenery, and I went on further to the eastward than my companion did, pentrating the Caucausus, that ancient cradle of the human family, and drifting into those other famous mountain ranges of the continent. Yet I found no mountain settings to surpass those of our land.

It seemed singular that a man would pay hundreds of dollars to travel thousands of miles away from home to applaud the grandeur that is in no way of more charm than that which he could find at the expense of a few hours' travel and a five dollar bill. But that is human nature.

It is also nature. I put my old cows into a field that has something fit to eat in it, and after browsing around a bit they try to get over the fence into the dead cotton stubble.

It is a mystery to me, sometimes why people take the trouble to travel at all. They pay their money, take a night train, doze the hours away in a badly ventilated sleeping car, and are happy.

Not long ago a new railroad was opened from middle North Carolina into West Virginia. It traverses some of the grandest scenery on the two continents and is a well built line. It is doubtful if it will ever become a popular line of travel, for it will carry its passengers, as one of them remarked, through the most broken and unsettled part of the United States.

Yet the man who thinks about it as he stands on the top of one of the high ranges of North Carolina mountains and looks out across the face of creation can almost imagine that he sees Jehovah on one of the peaks, bringing to Moses the law which has governed men since the day when intelligence became amenable to law.

Now West Virginia is planning another railroad that comes down this way through the mountains, and I am of the opinion that the road, which will run from the Potomac above Cumberland, threading the valleys between the Alleghenies and the Shenandoah ranges, crossing the summit from the Potomac to the headwaters of the James River, will open a mountain country worth traveling miles to see and penetrate.

The mountains begin in Pennsylvania. They continue through the Virginias and Carolinas to Georgia, by way of Tennessee and Kentucky. West Virginia is all mountains. I never saw any place of the size that has so much of its land piled up in such enormous heaps. Other States have some low lands, some prairies, some coast land, or something to break the continuous skyline of range and inclosed valley, but West Virginia is all mountains.

It is one of the most magnificent spectacles in the world. The canyons and gorges of such streams as the Blackwater, the New, the Kanawha, the Cheat, the Potomac and other rivers are deep and long and forbidding. One of the most impressive experiences I ever knew was at a funeral in the New River gorge, when a number of victims of a mine accident were buried on the top of Echo Mountain. The river runs in a narrow cleft, cut in the solid rock. On one side runs the railroad, part of the way hewed from the rocky walls. On the other side a road crawls along under the precipice.

The homes of the miners hang to the narrow bits of terrace found here and there, and the coal mines punctured the cliffs high above the water, like the nests of kingfishers on the bluffs of the smaller streams.

Just one place for miles a road finds its way out of the gorge to the mountain, and it turns and winds from shelf to shelf of the jutting spurs of the cliff in what seems a perilous manner. It is the only means whereby wagons may enter the gorge or get out, unless they come on a freight car.

There one day they buried forty or fifty victims of a serious accident, and the beholder of that spectacle comprehended the vastness of the forces that inspired creation.

Wagons carried the somber burdens up the cliff sides out of the gorge. A band played a dirge as the procession climbed upward, and the echoes ringing from mountain to mountain were terrible in their solemn and repeated note. I had reached the place on a late night train, and all through the dark hours until the morning the keening and wailing of the survivors filled the valley with sorrow. The unsuppressed grief of these stricken people was pitiful as the funeral dragged its slow length up the mountain side.

But at the top what a change. Back from the gorge a little distance the table-land spread away for miles and the river was completely shut out. Far in the distance the softened summits of neighboring ranges lifted their heads and the bright sunlight, streaming over field and forest, suggested that the Lord God still smiled upon the the earth.

The funeral of so many at one time had something to do with the effectiveness of the scene, for it is impossible to escape some feeling of emotion at the grief of others, even the most distant stranger. But with that was the immensity and the grandeur of the mountain scenery.

One of these days it will be possible to get into the West Virginia mountain from all points, and then the splendor and sublimity of the mountains of the Appalachian system will attract travelers who appreciate the greatest work of creation. and such travelers will not be disappointed.

Unfortunately for the traveler to the South, the time to see the mountains and to be in the mountains is in the summer, the time when travel southward is not at its high tide. Yet the man coming South who delights in mountain scenery will get more than the worth of his money by arranging his journey, even in the winter, that he may come by the Alleghenies and the Shenandoahs, where he can see the playgrounds of the stupenduous forces of Nature, those giants who with volcanic, hydraulic and atmospheric agencies have tossed the hills and valleys about as a boy would a handful of toys. There is no need to go to Europe to see magnificent scenery. It is convenient to all of us a home.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

WHAT GOD REQUIRES OF US

Text, "What Doth Thy God Require of Thee, but to Do Justly, and to Love Mercy, and to Walk Humbly With Thy God?" (Micah vi, 8.)

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 13.—Are the words of our text true? Is it possible that the true religion of the Bible demands nothing more of us than is expressed in this text? What about the Jewish Law? What about its sin-offering, its burnt-offering, its thank-offerings? What about the ten commandments? What about the digest of those commandments approved by our Lord Jesus, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, with all thy being, with all thy strength; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"? What about Church attendance? What about our responsibilities to our families? To the Church? To the poor? What about study of the Bible to know God's will? What about our responsibility for the heathen? What about baptism and the Lord's supper?

Indirectly, dear brethren, all the matters included in our questions and many more are included incidentally in the provisions of our text. Sometimes a whole sermon is preached in a few words. No one will dispute the reasonableness of the Divine requirement as stated in our text. Our Creator could not justly or with self-respect ask less than this of his creatures who would enjoy his favor. The interests of all demand that these principles should be required of every creature permitted the enjoyment of Divine favor to the extent of eternal life. Whoever fails to come up to these conditions would thus evidence his unworthiness of life eternal; his prolonged existence would merely be a prospering of sin and a menace to the happiness and righteousness of others.

But now let us see the scope of this Divine requirement, whose justice we have already acknowledged. We note the natural division of our text into three parts:

(1) Doing justly;
(2) Loving mercy;
(3) Walking humbly.

The requirement of justice in all our dealings with our fellows, commends itself to every rational mind. It includes the whole Law of God. A brief statement of that Law which had our Lord's approval reads, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and all thy mind, all thy being and all thy strength; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two propositions hang all the Law and the Prophets. It is but just that we should recognize our Creator as first; that we should glorify the One who gave us our being and all the blessings that come therewith; that we should be obedient to his righteous requirements that make for our own happiness and that of others. It is also but right that we should recognize the rights of others, as we would have them recognize our rights. The Golden Rule is the barest of justice. Not a hair's breadth less would come within the requirements of our text, Do Justly. Come, then, let us reason together. How many of us do justly in all of life's affairs—in our relationship to our God and to our neighbor?

Begin at home. Let each one criticise his words and his deeds toward his parents; toward his children; toward his brothers; toward his sisters; toward husband; toward wife. Do we in all of our relationships of life treat these who are so near and so dear to us according to the standards of justice, according to the Golden Rule? Do we do toward them as we would have them do toward us? If not, after making a beginning with the Lord, striving to render to him our homage and obedience, let us closely scrutinize every word, every act of the home life and see to what extent these can be improved upon and made more nearly just. The majority of people, we feel sure, will be surprised to know how unjust they have been toward those who are of the very nearest and dearest of fleshly relationships.

Follow the matter up and consider the justice or injustice of your words and deeds in daily life with your neighbors and daily associates. Do you invariably speak to them in the same words and with the same tone and gesture that you would approve if they were in your place and you in theirs? In matters of business do you drive a closer bargain with them than you would think just for them to make with you? Or, on the other hand, do you ask of them higher prices for the services or materials you furnish them than you would consider just and right if you were the purchaser and they the venders? Do you watch your chickens that they do not commit depredations upon your neighbor's garden as carefully as you would wish your neighbor to watch his chickens as respects your garden, if you had one? Do you blow no more tobacco smoke in the face of your neighbor than you would like to have him blow in your face? Are you as careful about wiping your feet when entering his house as you would like him to be when entering your house? Do you treat all men, women, children and animals as kindly, as gently, as properly every way as you think would be just and right if you were in their place and they in yours? Do you speak as kindly of your neighbors as you would have them speak of you? Or do you hold up their imperfections to ridicule, as you would like to have them hold up yours? Do you guard your tongue so that you speak only things you would think proper for your neighbor to speak respecting you, if you changed places?

Simple Justice—Nothing More.

Do you not begin to see, dear friends, that what God requires of us is much beyond what the majority have been rendering? Do you stand appalled and tell me that it would be impossible to live fully up to that standard? I agree with you. And St. Paul agrees, saying, "We cannot do the things which we would." The Scriptures again agree and declare "There is none righteous, no, not one. All have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

What shall we do? Shall we say that because we are unable to live up to our own conceptions and standards of justice we will make no attempt to do so, but abandon those standards entirely? God forbid. We are weak enough and imperfect enough as it is. To ignore our best ideals of justice would be to take off all the brakes and permit the downward tendencies of our depraved natures to go rapidly from bad to worse—to carry us further and further from God and the standards of character which he approves. We can surely be content to do nothing less than our very best to live up to our own ideals and to raise those ideals as nearly as possible to the Divine standard.

What Would Be the Use?

Suppose we do our very best daily to measure up to our highest conceptions of our God-given ideals and standards, would God accept of this and count us worthy of his favor and of eternal life? Surely not. The Law of the Lord is perfect. Justice is Justice. Not the hearer of a law, not the well-wishing, receives the reward, but the doer, the obedient! Here, then, we find ourselves in difficulty. With our hearts, our minds, we approve God's Law and desire to be obedient to him, but find, as St. Paul says, that many things we wish to do we fail to accomplish; and many of the things we do not wish to do we cannot avoid. "We cannot do the things that we would." We approve the excellent demands of God's Law. We disapprove the imperfections of our own flesh. Like St. Paul, we cry out, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from this dead body?"—this body that is imperfect through inherited sin and weaknesses. With our minds we serve God's Law and approve it; but with our bodies we come short. What is our hope? How shall we be delivered? Can we prevail upon God to change the reasonable requirement of our text so that it shall read, What doth God require of me but to will justly and do imperfectly? We cannot hope for such a change in the Divine Law. Are we then hopeless as respects Divine approval and eternal life? (Romans vii, 17-24.)

The Gift of God Is Eternal Life.

In our moment of perplexity we hear God's message "speaking peace through Jesus Christ our Lord." The message of peace is that what we could not do for ourselves in the way of lifting ourselves up to Divine approval God has provided shall be done for us through our Lord Jesus Christ. Our failure to keep the Law marks us as unworthy of eternal life, and worthy of the wages of sin—not eternal torment, but death. God in mercy concluded to offer us eternal life as a gift—because of our not actually meriting it under his legal requirements. Thus we read, "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Romans vi, 23). What we could not obtain legally under the Divine requirements God proffers to us as a gift. But the gift is a conditional one as expressed in the words, "through Jesus Christ our Lord." Only those who accept Jesus Christ as "the Way, the Truth, and the Life" may have God's gift of eternal life. Hence it will be seen that it is wholly a mistake to suppose that the heathen at home or abroad can get eternal life, the gift of God, in ignorance of Christ. All the Scriptures confirm this and declare not only that we cannot save ourselves by obedience to the terms of God's Law, but that "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved"—through faith in his name—through faith in his blood (Acts iv, 12).

But how is this done justly? and, why does God so limit his gift of eternal life?

God's Law represents himself and cannot change. He cannot require less than perfection. To do so would be to fill the Universe to all eternity with depraved and imperfect beings. God has a higher plan than this and declares, "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways" (Isaiah iv, 9). He explains that his ultimate purpose is that there shall be no imperfect creature in all his Universe. All whose hearts are loyal to him and the principles of his government shall be perfected, and all others shall be destroyed in the Second Death. Thus, eventually, every knee shall bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God. Then every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, shall be heard saying, Blessing, and honor and glory and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever (Revelation v, 13).

You Are Bought With a Price.

Possibly God could have arranged some other way of dealing with sin and sinners which would not have required the death of Jesus as the Ransom price, the purchase price, the redemption price for sinners. But the fact that this method was adopted our great Creator assures us that no other method would have been so wise, so just, so beneficial. No other method would have so fully demonstrated God's Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power.

In brief, then, God's arrangement is that all of his human creatures shall have opportunity of full return to harmony with himself, provided they wish to do so, provided their hearts, their wills, are fully responsive to the letter and spirit of his Law—the requirements set forth in our text. God has provided in Jesus for the satisfaction of Divine Justice as respects all of the condemned race who desire to return to his favor.

We agree with all the orthodox creeds of Christendom that only repentance from sin and an endeavor to put it away from our thoughts and words and deeds, combined with faith in the Redeemer's sacrifice and a full consecration of heart and life to do the Father's will—nothing short of this attainment will gain the salvation which God is now holding out to mankind. To such the Apostle explains that the righteousness, the full demands of the Law of God, his full requirement, "is fulfilled in us who are walking not after the flesh, but after the Spirit" (Romans viii, 4). From the moment of our consecration and begetting of the holy Spirit God deals with this class as with sons. He trains them in the School of Christ, disciplining, chastening, proving them, testing the sincerity of their consecration vows and the loyalty of their hearts. To those who prove faithful the great reward promised—glory, honor, immortal joint-heirship with the Lord Jesus Christ in his Millennial Kingdom and its work of blessing all the families of the earth (Galatians iii, 29; Revelation iii, 21).

Our disagreement with all "orthodox creeds" is in respect to what shall be done with the unsaintly—with those who do not present themselves to God and who are not begotten again of the holy Spirit. Our creeds of the dark ages misrepresented the teachings of the Bible in respect to these and told us that they are all to be consigned for hundreds or thousands of years to Purgatory or for all eternity in hell torment. Not such is the teaching of God's Word, but the very reverse, as we have previously shown. The Scriptures do not declare, In thee and in thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be damned; but the reverse of this—that they shall all be blessed. All the sin-blind eyes shall be opened. All the deaf ears of ignorance shall be unstopped. For the blest thousands years of Christ's reign the world's uplifting or resurrection will proceed, while the knowledge of the glory of God shall fill the whole earth. The angels on the plains of Bethlehem did not declare to the shepherds, Fear greatly! for behold, we bring you bad tidings of great misery which shall be unto all people. Their message was the reverse of this: "Fear not; behold we bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people" (Luke ii, 10). God who had a "due time" for calling natural Israel and who has also a "due time" for calling spiritual Israel, has a "due time" for making known the riches of his grace to the non-elect world of mankind. And the "elect" of spiritual Israel and of natural Israel are to be the channels of this Divine grace and mercy, which during the Millennial Age, will flow as a river of salvation, to which mankind will be invited to come and drink freely.

Love Mercy and Walk Humbly.

It may astonish some that God requires even more than Justice, which is his legal standard. In his permission of sin and its wage of death he has shown the sinner his own mercy or love. And it is for the sinner's benefit and for the good of all, that God requires that all who will have the full benefit of his mercy shall be required to cultivate this mercy quality in their own hearts. As the sinner attempts to conform his life to the perfect standard and finds himself unable to keep God's Law and obliged to come for mercy to the Throne of Grace, he is informed that he can have that mercy only upon condition that he will exercise similar mercy toward those who trespass against him, his ideals and interests.

Humility is a quality very necessary to every creature. Pride is a fault which besets not merely the weak and imperfect, but which overcame the great angel of light, Lucifer, and transformed him from a faithful servant of Jehovah into Satan, the Adversary of God. We are glad, therefore, that Divine Wisdom requires humility as one of the conditions of our acceptance with him. This requirement assures us of the security of the Divine Empire against all treason in the future, for none will be admitted to the eternal life conditions either now or in the Millennial Age, except the humble. Let us hearken then to the lesson of our text and conclude with the words of the Apostle, "Humble yourselves therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time" (I Peter v, 6).

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett ounty, Maryland, is situated in a magificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could upport a city or several thousand peoe, where most crops of the temperate ne are produced and where total fails are wholly unknown. In addition he staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the dvantages nature has so prodigally betowed upon this community. A Devil-May-Care Young American in a Land of Romance. Novel Adventures in a Strange Little Kingdom.

A Captivating Story in McCutcheon's Best Vein and a Great Treat for Our Readers

Truxton King, big, handsome, good-natured and young, ranges over the face of the earth looking for romance and adventure and finding none, until at last he comes to the natural home of such things—Graustark. The same old, romantic land of Graustark. There are plots and counterplots, the scurry of hoofs, the clash of swords and the crack of rifles. And things happen with an unexpectedness, a rush and a go which sweep the reader along until, like us, he can say breathlessly: "McCutcheon has done it again."

THE GATE THAT WON JANE.

Story of a Young Inventor Who Made a Success.

By MARY G. BENTLEY.

[Copyright, 1905, by American Press Association.]

Farmer Tillson hadn't a generous hair in his head. He kept every cent he got and never gave out a cent.

Jane was as open hearted as Tillson was close. She was the life of the young farmer people round about, and not one of them but loved her. Her uncle did all he could to impress her with the fact that, having some capital, she should look upon marriage as a sort of partnership in which her partner should furnish an equivalent to her own means.

One day there came to Tillson's farm a young man who asked for work. He was rather intellectual looking than muscular, a fact that did not favorably impress Tillson. But he offered to work for very low wages, and as it was harvest time Tillson employed him.

Now, Jane no sooner saw young Zeke Freeman doing the hardest work there was to be done on the farm, which her uncle put upon the young man, than she pitied him. Pity being akin to love, she loved him. She was bright enough, however, to keep the situation from her uncle, who never suspected it till Freeman one day went to him to ask for Jane's hand.

"No; ye can't have Jane," snarled old Tillson ungraciously. "She's my brother's daughter an' has money of her own, an' you ain't nothin' but a hired man with no prospects. I don't see what Jane was thinkin' on to say ye could ask me. Ye can't have her, an' that's all there is to it."

Zeke opened his mouth as though to protest or to strengthen his case by further argument, but Tillson's face was grim and forbidding, and he knew the old man too well to weaken his chances by causing useless irritation. He turned away.

That afternoon they were near the farmyard gate, Zeke digging post holes and old Tillson patching up a wheelbarrow, when the drummer of an agricultural warehouse appeared. But, instead of going straight to Tillson, he stopped at the gate and began to examine it curiously.

"Queer contrivance that," he said presently. "Good idea, though—grand, good idea. How did you happen to think of it?"

"It's some of my hired man's dillydallyin'," replied Tillson gruffly. "He's forever up to something of that sort. Wastes half his time."

Zeke flushed a little, but did not look up.

"No wasted time about that," declared the drummer emphatically. "It's a valuable idea. There's money in it."

"Money?" questioned Tillson eagerly. Then he saw one of the horses squeezing his body through the open doorway of the cornerib, and he rushed off. He would have sent Zeke, only he preferred him to continue at the post hole digging.

"So it's your idea, is it?" said the drummer as he crossed to Zeke's side. "Going to have it patented, of course."

Zeke laughed. "Patented!" he echoed. "That foolish thing? Why, it's nothing but a lot of stones and two hinges placed so the gate will shut of itself."

"But that's just the sort of thing which usually proves valuable," persisted the drummer. "The simpler the device, if it's useful, the better. You'll make a mistake if you don't protect the idea."

"Then I guess I'll make the mistake," said Zeke carelessly. "Patents cost money, and I haven't any. Besides, if I had I wouldn't risk 50 cents on that foolish thing."

The drummer regarded him thoughtfully. "Look here," he said suddenly, "how would you like to make a trade? I could appropriate the idea for myself if I did business that way, but I don't. Still, I like to make money wherever I see a chance. My house does a good deal in patent articles, and I can generally guess pretty close whether there's money in an idea or not. Now, if you say so, I will put this through at my own expense and keep half the profit. What do you say?"

"You mean use stones like that and all?" asked Zeke skeptically.

"No; it's only the idea I want. We would find some substitute for the stones."

Zeke's indifference began to vanish. "If you really think it's worth anything," he said doubtfully, "I'll be glad to have you fix it up. But I don't want you to lose money." Then, a little wonderingly, "I thought patents were made of pulleys and springs and—and such things and that 'twas geniuses who got 'em up who studied years and years to make 'em all right."

The drummer smiled. "It is that way sometimes," he said, "but not always. I have known inventors to have their ideas come to them in a moment, in a flash of thought. But suppose we fix this thing now."

He opened a notebook and wrote for some seconds, then tore out the leaf and handed it to Zeke.

"It's a sort of agreement for you to put your name to," he said. "Read it first, though. Never sign anything until you know what it is. Later I will have regular papers made out for both of us."

Zeke read the paper and signed his name with the pen which the drummer held ready. Then he resumed his digging. A few moments later Tillson came hurrying back.

"The dratted horse ate a full peck of good corn," he began wrathfully. "No supper 'll be get this night. Now, what is it 'bout that gate bizness? How's there money in it?"

"By getting the invention patented," answered the drummer carelessly, "but Zeke and I have fixed that up. Well, I must be going."

"But, look here!" exclaimed Tillson. "Ye must talk with me 'bout that gate. It's mine! Zeke ain't nothin' to do with it."

"Oh, I don't want the gate," said the drummer coolly. "It's only the idea, and that, I believe, belongs to Zeke. Goodby."

Tillson stared at him as he walked away, the wrath deepening on his face. Suddenly he swung round to Zeke. "What did ye get?" he demanded. "Come, hand it over."

"I didn't receive anything in money," Zeke answered.

"Stop!" roughly. "Don't tell any yarns. Didn't I hear the man say you an' him fixed it up? Now, how much money did he give ye for my gate? Look at me straight."

Zeke did so, with a half smile. "He's to pay for getting out a patent," he replied, "and have half what we make."

"An' ye didn't get any money?"

"Not a cent."

Tillson looked at him sharply, but there was no deceit in the straightforward face. Even he realized the fact. "Then ye're an idiot!" he snarled. "The man was set on the idea; I could see that from the way he spoke. Ye could have got fifty or a hundred dollars jest as easy as nothin'. Mebbe we could have made a trade for a lot of his tools. An' now—huh!—ye'll never hear from him ag'in."

Zeke did not answer, and presently Tillson went toward the barn grumbling. But his words did not disturb Zeke in the least. He scarcely expected to hear from the man again. In spite of what had been said, he could not bring himself to believe that the simple contrivance was of any value. Even when the "regular papers" came, with imposing seals and blank places for him to sign his name, he regarded them more as interesting novelties than as anything that would affect his future.

But one day a letter came which caused his eyes to open wide with amazed delight and which after a half hour of hard thinking carried him into the house after his Sunday clothes. It was nearly dark when he returned from the town. Old Tillson met him at the barn door, his face dark.

"What d'ye leave work for without my say so?" he demanded.

"Business," replied Zeke. "I heard you say t'other day the mortgage had run by and that if you didn't raise the money soon they'd be selling you out. So I've been to a lawyer and had it fixed over in my name, to save you trouble. You can pay me whenever it suits. You see," in answer to the look on Tillson's face, "I got a check for two thousand on the patent and am likely to get as much more every year. I think I'll buy Dickson's big farm that joins ours."

Tillson stood looking at the young man with mouth and eyes wide open. The expression on his face was a study. One would expect to see some shamefacedness there, but there was none. There was not even gratitude. For the moment there was surprise mingled with a feeling of suspicion that Zeke had assumed his debt that he might make something by it. One who always acts from mean motives suspects every one else of doing the same thing. His first words indicated that such was the condition of his mind.

"What interest you goin' to charge me?"

"Never mind about the interest. You can pay whatever rate you please or nothing at all."

"Waal, I suppose you've got to be paid suthin'. What is it you want?"

"Jane."

"Oh, that's the pay you're after!"

The moment the old curmudgeon's interest came to the front he was less concerned about that of his niece.

"You and she can settle that, I suppose. As long as she's satisfied I suppose I'll have to be."

Jane was perfectly satisfied, and before long there was a wedding.

But Zeke didn't buy Dickson's farm. He drifted into the employ of a firm engaged in the development of mechanical contrivances and is now a very rich man.

MEANING OF CENSUS TERMS.

The Bureau's Instructions Concerning a "Dwelling House" and a "Family."

The official definitions of the terms "dwelling house" and "family," with reference to the population schedule to be carried by the enumerators in the Thirteenth United States Census, beginning April 15th next, are explained in the Census Bureau's lengthy printed instructions to the canvassers. It is pointed out that the answers should relate only to conditions existing on April 15th, the "Census Day."

The words "dwelling house" and "family" are, for census purposes, given a much wider application than they have in ordinary speech.

A "dwelling" is defined as a place in which, at the time of the census, one or more persons regularly sleep. It need not be a house in the common meaning of the word, but may be, for example, a room in a factory, store, or office building, a loft over a stable, a canal boat, a tent, or a wigwam. The term also includes a hotel, boarding or lodging house, a tenement or apartment house, an institution or school building, if persons regularly sleep there, as well as the ordinary dwelling house.

A "family," as a census term, may mean a group of individuals who occupy jointly a dwelling place or part of a dwelling place, or an individual living alone in any place of abode. All the occupants and employees of a hotel, if they regularly sleep there, make up a single family, because they occupy one dwelling place, and persons living alone in cabins, huts, or tents; persons occupying a room or rooms in public buildings, stores, warehouses, factories, or stables, and persons sleeping on river boats, canal boats, barges, etc., if they have no other usual place of abode, are regarded as families.

The enumerators are required to enter on the schedule the name of every person whose usual place of abode on April 15, 1910, was with the family or in the dwelling place for which the enumeration is being made. The head of the family is to be entered first; then the wife; next the children, whether sons or daughters, in the order of their ages; and lastly, all other persons living with the family, whether relatives, boarders, lodgers or servants. The head of the family, whether husband or father, widow or unmarried person of either sex, is to be designated by the word "head," and the other members of a family as wife, father, mother, son, daughter, grandson, daughter-in-law, uncle, aunt, niece, boarder, lodger, servant, etc., according to the particular relationship which the person bears to the head of the family.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC

As special counsel for the State Board of Health and Registrar of Vital Statistics for Garrett county, and by order of the State Board of Health, I desire to call the attention of the public in general to the following laws, which the Board of Health has concluded to enforce to the fullest extent in Garrett county:

By the Acts of 1898, Chapter 312, and amended by an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed in 1900, Chapter 431, it is made the duty of every parent, attending physician or nurse in charge to report to the local registrar or sub-registrar, the birth of every child, day and date. It is also made their duty to report every death, day and date, and the cause of death to the same source.

This law also provides that before any body shall be interred or buried, that a permit shall be secured from the local registrar or sub-registrar, and before such a permit shall be granted that the attending physician must give a certificate of the cause of death.

The law also provides that no undertaker or coroner shall bury a body without first having the permit as above.

A heavy penalty is provided against all persons who fail to carry out the provisions of the law to the fullest extent.

The following is a list of the persons who have been appointed sub-registrars, and any one desiring to secure the full text of the law can call on them where they can secure a copy, and all matters coming under the above head you will please report to the sub-registrar in your district. I hope the law will be carried out to the fullest extent, and that it will not be necessary to inflict a punishment.

Lesson VIII.—First Quarter, For Feb. 20, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. vii, 1-12. Memory Verses, 7, 8—Golden Text, Matt. vii, 12—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

When any truth is brought home to us by the Spirit how prone we are to ask: Does any one do it? What about such a one who makes a great profession of having no anxious care? Do you know if they really practice it at home? Do you think that the preacher himself lives that way? So it goes, and instead of seeing Jesus only we are prone to see everybody but Jesus. Hence the admonition of our lesson. "Judge not that ye be not judged," or, as it is elsewhere, "Let us not therefore judge one another any more" (Rom. xiv, 13). Because, as in the context, all believers shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ and every one of us shall give account of himself to God. We are so peculiar that it is generally easier to see the mote in another's eye than the beam that is in our own eye, whereas if we ourselves were right with God we would have only love for all others, and, being very conscious of our own infirmities, we would have only prayerful compassion for those of others. Christ for us in our stead on the cross obtained for us eternal redemption; Christ for us in heaven at the right hand of the Father makes victory over sin our privilege, but because we do not know as we should the power of Christ in us by His Spirit we are more often stumbling blocks than samples of what the life of Christ really is. Yet the one thing we are here for is so to live that the world may know and believe that Jesus lives.

In our last year's studies in the Acts of the Apostles some of us were much impressed by the words "Jesus shewed Himself alive" in connection with those other resurrection words, "Jesus shewed Himself" (Acts i, 3; John xxi, 1, 14). His own testimony was that He came not to condemn, but to save. To one sinner He said, "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more." To another, "Thy sins are forgiven" (John iii, 17; viii, 11; Luke vii, 48). He did condemn the self righteous, fault finding, hypocritical Pharisees, but He never had even a seemingly harsh word for the penitent sinners or for any truly desirous to be His disciples. Such love as His is heavenly; all else is from the pit. In us it is either Christ or self.

The Spirit through Peter speaks of those who knew the way of righteousness, but did not walk therein, though professing to do so, as dogs and swine (II Pet. iii, 21, 22). See also Prov. xxvi, 11, 12. If one cannot speak even to many among the redeemed of the deep things of God (see I Cor. iii, 1, 2; Heb. v, 12, 13), how much less should we think of talking spiritual things to natural people to whom they are only foolishness. Such are spoken of finally as being "without," having no right to the tree of life (Rev. xxii, 14, 15), but if those who are "in Christ" would walk honestly toward them that are without, without Christ and without God (I Thess. iv, 12; Eph. ii, 12), who can tell how many who are now "without" might become "within" by His grace.

This life which will commend Christ to others can only be by the Spirit of God, by a wisdom which is not of this world, but in verse 11, along with Luke xi, 13, we learn that God is more willing to give us His Spirit, the fullness of His Spirit, than parents are to give good things to their children. In Jas. i, 5, 6, we learn that this wisdom is to be had for the asking, but it must be an asking in faith and, according to Jas. iv, 3, with nothing of self seeking, but wholly for the glory of God, that the life of Jesus may be made manifest. The asking, seeking, knocking, with that end in view will surely find an abundant response. We must remember that asking so as to receive means that we are abiding, keeping His commandments and doing the things that are pleasing in His sight (John xv, 7; I John iii, 22). The seeking that finds is explained in Jer. xxix, 13, "Ye shall seek Me and find Me when ye search for Me with all your heart." As to knocking, consider Rev. iii, 20, and Luke xii, 36, and tremble at the possibility of our keeping Him knocking at our door when He so longs to take full possession of us and lavish upon us the wealth of His love. Too many are like the elder brother, unhappy and blaming the father for it, when all the time the father is saying, "All that I have is thine;" "All things are yours."

In reference to the last verse (12), which is also the golden text, note that it is, like all the rest, a message for believers or those who profess to be such that they may prove the reality of their faith. For unsaved people to take this verse and call it their religion is simply a going about to establish their own righteousness without submitting themselves to the righteousness of God (Rom. x, 3). We must be righteous before we can do righteously, but, having believed the love of God to us and received the Lord Jesus Christ as our Saviour, then it becomes us to manifest Christ by loving our neighbor as ourselves (Lev. xix, 18; Gal. vi, 14). No condemnation in Christ is the blood bought standing of every believer, but it is in order that the righteousness of the law may be fulfilled in us.

THE NATIONAL GRANGE

Comments on Important Features of the Annual Meeting.

Proportional Representation Again Defeated—Outline of Resolutions Adopted—Finances of the Grange—Election of Officers to Serve For Two Years.

[Special Correspondence.]

The forty-third annual session of the national grange, held at Des Moines, Ia., last month, measured up well in point of accomplishments with previous meetings of the kind. The resolutions that were adopted were for the most part conceived in the highest interests of the Order, and those which relate to our great national policies, such as the tariff, taxation, transportation and our larger agricultural interests, will find general approval by the state and subordinate granges.

There was a more general discussion of the resolutions when presented than usual. Fewer, it seemed to us, were referred to committees. More called for immediate discussion and action. The discussion on taxation, involving the two prominent issues, "classification" and "uniform rate," occupied nearly all of an afternoon session and came up on a resolution sent up from the Kentucky state grange and not following the report of the committee on taxation, as might have been anticipated. While it is no doubt wise to refer many subjects presented in resolutions to committees appointed for their consideration, who may give considerable time and thought to formulating the grange position in regard to them, we all know that in state grange as well as national these committee reports come in at the close of the session, and in the usual rush to get through and get away adequate discussion is rarely given a committee's report. We believe in discussing many subjects that are presented for the consideration of delegates at our state and national grange meetings when they are presented in the form of resolutions, even though they are afterward referred to committees.

The matter of proportional representation that was expected to divide the state masters more equally than it did proved to be decidedly one sided when the vote was taken. The Michigan plan of giving two additional votes for each 10,000 of membership above the first 10,000 was again presented; also another, known as the federal plan, the essence of which is that each state shall be entitled to representation by one voting member for every 10,000 members in the state and every voting member shall be entitled to an alternate in case of his own absence; that what is known as the representative vote shall be used on all ordinary occasions, the state vote only when demanded, and when it is demanded both representative and state vote must be cast before a measure can be declared carried. This combined vote is to be used at the election of officers and on changes in the constitution. Should a state be represented by only one person that state shall be entitled to one other representative to be elected by the state grange or appointed by the state grange executive committee. Neither plan was adopted. We may add it is doubtful if either ever will be. There were many resolutions of large public interest adopted, and the reports of the committees were exceedingly able and instructive. Postal savings banks and the parcels post system were demanded, ship subsidies strongly opposed; in road improvement the market roads should receive first attention; on the question of taxation the uniform rate system found approval, no property to be exempt; a committee on co-operation, national in scope, was appointed; protection for monopolies or for those who sell in foreign markets for less than is demanded in our own was opposed; indorsement of ex-President Roosevelt's conservation policy was voted; liberal appropriations by congress for the support of agricultural extension departments in agricultural colleges were asked; $5,000 a year for two years was voted for the partial support of the national grange organ. This outlines briefly only a part of the measures approved by the national grange.

The finances of the national grange are in good shape. The total assets were $115,821.29 on Oct. 1, and since that date this amount has been increased about $4,000 by dues from state granges that did not report previous to Oct. 1. The national master reports that no funds of the national grange have been lost through investment or otherwise and that the treasurer's books had been audited every year by the executive committee and the list of securities found intact. These funds are invested in loans upon real estate to the amount of $50,795.29, amply secured; also $45,668.71 is invested in municipal and railroad bonds of unquestioned value. $9,920.54 is deposited in savings banks and the balance in smaller amounts in safe companies. In view of the fact that the management of the financial investments of the national grange had been questioned and criticised, an investigating committee was appointed which, after a careful examination of the condition and security of the funds of the Order, reported that it found all investments to have been wisely made and commended the acumen of the men who secured the investments.

THE NEW MACADAM.

How Road Builders Have Improved on Scotchman's Idea.

IDEAL HIGHWAY NECESSITIES

Careful Grading, Good Drainage, Substantial Foundation and a Wearing Surface Necessary For the Up to Date Macadamized Road.

In a recent speech on the construction and maintenance of macadam roads Austin B. Fletcher, secretary of the Massachusetts highway commission, said:

Macadam's road is a thing of the past. In fact, the road of the kind built by the Scotchman John Loudon Macadam and named in his honor has been obsolete in this country for some time.

Macadam knew nothing of machine broken stone, and he did not dream that a broken stone roadway could be made as smooth as a billiard table by the use of steam road rollers.

In these days when we speak of a macadam road we mean a road with the following characteristics:

A road with easy gradients, usually not exceeding a five foot rise in 100 feet of length.

A road with drainage appliances so perfect that substantially no water reaches the broken stone from below.

A road with a foundation consisting of either the natural soil, if suitable, otherwise of artificially placed gravel or unbroken stone, so that the foundation with the superimposed broken stone will have sufficient strength to distribute over the underlying soil any load to which the road is likely to be subjected.

A road with a wearing surface of two or more layers of broken stone, small in size, those at the bottom usually not more than two and one-half inches in diameter and those at the top generally varying from one and one-quarter inches to one-half inch in diameter, each course or layer carefully spread, uniform in depth and rolled thoroughly with a steam road roller before the next course is placed. By this process, the rolling being done on thin layers, the stones become thoroughly compacted and the void spaces or interstices between the stones are largely eliminated. The final process consists in spreading over the surface of the upper layer of broken stone a thin covering of the screenings which result from the machine breaking of the stones and which contain a considerable proportion of fine dust, then flushing or grouting the screenings into such voids as remain between the broken stone and rolling the road with the steam roller.

BEAUTIFUL STRETCH OF MACADAMIZED ROADWAY.

(From Good Roads Magazine, New York.)

So far as the treatment of macadam roads is concerned, the remedy seems to be in the application of protective coats or coverings of a bituminous nature.

Before any of the bituminous materials are applied it is essential that the road surface be evened up and patched where necessary, rolled and swept clean of all dust. The bituminous materials are then applied hot to the road surface by means of spraying machines or gravity distributers or by hand in quantities varying from one-quarter to three-quarters of a gallon to the square yard and immediately covered evenly with sand, fine gravel or broken stone screenings.

The annual maintenance will be merely the cost of renewing the covering, probably from 4 cents to 5 cents per square yard per annum. By this method no wear whatever will take place on the broken stone, and in a sense that portion of the ordinary macadam road which takes the wear will thereafter be only a foundation for the bituminous wearing coat.

The protective coat referred to would probably be inadequate for traffic, and the introduction of bituminous binders into the voids between the broken stones would be necessary.

A good deal of work of this sort is being done now in an experimental way by mixing the bituminous material with the broken stone before it is placed on the roadway or by grouting the bituminous material into the spaces between and around the broken stone after it has been placed and partially rolled.

The cost of the ordinary macadam road is probably from 20 to 50 cents per square yard, and the roadway will require a protective covering at least as often as once in two years. It would be economical to rely upon the protective covering and to omit the bituminous material from the voids between the stone while the traffic remains as at present

TO LIMIT THE FRANCHISE IN OAKLAND

Proposed Measure Allows Only Taxpaying Class to Vote.

A measure was introduced by request in the House of Delegates by Assemblyman D. E. Bolden on Tuesday which seeks to limit the right of franchise to the taxpayers of Oakland who are assessed with property to the value of two hundred dollars or more and who are qualified to vote for members of the General Assembly.

The text of the measure we publish below, an advance copy having been furnished this paper by Delegate Bolden Monday morning.

The measure in full is as follows:

A BILL

Entitled an Act to repeal and reenact with amendments Section 170 of Article 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, titled "Garrett County," sub-title, "Oakland," as said section was enacted and amended by Chapter 343 of the Acts of 1892, and by Chapter 123 of the Acts of 1896, and by Chapter 25 of the Acts of 1898.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland that Section 170 of Article 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws, title, "Garrett County," sub-title, "Oakland," as said section was enacted and amended by Chapter 343 of the Acts of 1892, and by Chapter 123 of the Acts of 1896, and by Chapter 25 of the Acts of 1898, be and the same are hereby repealed and re-enacted and amended so as to read as follows:

Section 170. And be it further enacted, that all taxpayers of the town of Oakland assessed on the town books for at least two hundred dollars, and who have resided in said town for six months next preceding any municipal election, and who are qualified to vote for members of the General Assembly of Maryland, shall on the second Monday in March, 1910, and on the same day in every second year thereafter elect by ballot one person to be Mayor of said town, and the said voters qualified as aforesaid shall on the second Monday in March, 1910, and on the same day in every year thereafter elect three persons to be members of the Town Council, and the members of the Town Council who have been elected and are now in office shall hold their office until the term for which they have been elected shall have expired and until their successors are elected and qualified.

Section 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

GARRETT COUNTY CIVIL APPOINTMENTS MADE

By Governor Crothers Tuesday and Confirmed by the Senate Same Day.

Tuesday evening Governor Crothers submitted the appointments for Garrett county to the Senate for confirmation, which body, acting upon the Chief Executive's suggestion, immediately confirmed them.

As has been known for some time two lists were submitted to the Governor from Garrett county, one being from the regular committee and the other from those opposing the organization in Garrett county. The former, recommended by the regulars, were appointed to a man, the opponents being given no recognition whatever.

The appointments for the county follow:

Justices of the Peace—District No. 1, J. L. McRobie and Augustus B. Harvey; No. 2, Leon Hardie and Walter W. Griffith; No. 3, Peter Nathan; No. 4, Marcus M. Fazenbaker and Thomas Burke; No. 5, Henry Kahl and William J. Bowman; No. 6, Nathan C. Browning; No. 7, A. S. Teats and Floyd White; No. 8, no appointment; No. 9, Thomas J. Crowe; No. 10, William D. Hoye; No. 11, C. H. Smith; No. 12, no appointment; No. 13, Albert L. Lee; No. 14, James A. Delawder and Edward I. West.

Notaries Public—James P. Treacy, Harland L. Jones, and Miss Alma Scherr, of Oakland; Miss Ella Kildow, Crellin; Mrs. Sue R. Laughlin, Kitzmiller; Patrick J. Garrett, Deer Park; P. T. Garthright, Mt. Lake Park; Samuel Sines, Sines; S. C. Bonig, Grantsville; Edward M. Liston, Selbysport; R. M. Holman, Friendsville.

Supervisors of Elections—William R. Offutt, Oakland, and Thomas J. Johnson, of Johnsons. The Republican member, Mr. Samuel Lawton, of Oakland, was appointed and confirmed two weeks ago.

School Commissioner—Peter H. Yost, of near Grantsville.

The latter appointment as well as that of Mr. Lawton was made upon the recommendation of the Republican County Committee, as required by law and will give general satisfaction. Mr. Yost is especially well qualified for the position and his friends are satisfied that he will make a successful, painstaking public official

TO FIX MARYLAND-WEST VIRGINIA BOUNDARY LINE

Supreme Court Orders New Survey of State Boundary.

The Supreme Court of the United States Monday decided the disputed boundary case between Maryland and West Virginia which has been before the Court since 1891. Justice Day read the decision of the Court. The Court holds in brief that the Deakins line, while not an astronomically correct line, has been for so many years regarded by the people of both states as the boundary line, and the State of Maryland has acquiesced so long in the exercise of jurisdiction over the territory that West Virginia's claim is superior. Accordingly the two states are directed to select three commissioners within the next 40 days who shall relocate the old Deakins line, and make a report to the Supreme Court. Should the two states fail to agree on a commission within the limit set by the Court, the Supreme Court itself will appoint the commissioners.

West Virginia's claim to jurisdiction over the Potomac river is flatly denied, and a previous decision of the Supreme Court is cited, showing that the charter of Maryland given to Lord Baltimore by King Charles I. conveys to him the Potomac river and the soil under it, and the islands therein to high-water mark on the Virginia shore.

The opinion is very lengthy. It points out that the contention of the State of Maryland is rested upon the construction of the charter granted by King Charles I, on June 30, 1632, to Lord Baltimore. A portion of the charter is quoted, and the court points out that there is some difference in the record as to some of the Latin text and the translation, but that for its purposes it is sufficient to consider the record as presented by the State of Maryland. It is to be observed that the purpose of its part of the grant was to locate the northern line of the State of Maryland from Delaware Bay to the true meridian of the first fountain of the River Potomac; then tending downward toward the south to the further part of said river, and following it to where it faces the western and southern coasts as far as to a certain place called Choptank. It is the contention of Maryland that the controversy between the two is narrowed down to the proper location of the true meridian from the first fountain head of the Potomac river, which, being located, would effectually settle the boundary line in dispute.

The court then points out the lines run, respectively, from the Fairfax stone and the Potomac stone. It is insisted for the State of Maryland that the spring at Potomac stone most nearly fulfils the terms of the Lord Baltimore charter. On the other hand, West Virginia contends that the true head of the Potomac river is at the Fairfax stone, and that the boundary should be located by a line from the spring at that point. Such has long been the recognized boundary line between Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland. The distance from the Fairfax meridian is about one and one-fourth miles and the distance to the Pennsylvania line is about 37 miles.

It may be true, says the court, that the meridian line from the Potomac stone more fully answers the calls of the original charter than does the meridian line starting from the Fairfax stone, but it is to be remembered that the grant to Lord Baltimore was made when the region of the country intended to be conveyed was little known, was wild and uninhabited, had never been surveyed or charted and the location of the upper part of the Potomac River was largely a matter of conjecture.

The so-called Potomac stone was neither set nor located until 1897, six years after the beginning of this suit, when it was put in place by the surveyor on the part of Maryland. He designated a monument set by him as the Potomac stone and the so-called Potomac meridian line was run by the same engineer. The court then reviews in great detail the history of the Fairfax stone. Without stoping to mention the cases in which Virginia has recognized the Fairfax monument in creating counties and otherwise, it is to be noted that the Fairfax stone was recognized as a boundary point by the State of Maryland in locating Garrett county, the boundary between which and Preston county, W. Va., it was the purpose of the act of the legislature of Maryland to have settled by the filing of the bill and proceedings in the present case.

The court then comes to the Deakins line and cites the legislative history of Maryland providing for its survey.

"The action of Deakins in adopting the Fairfax stone as a starting-point for his line is an important feature of the controversy," says the court. For that reason the Deakins map is inserted in the opinion. The court holds that the Deakins line is an attempted meridian line north from the Fairfax stone to the Pennsylvania line. The events leading up to the running of the Michler line are next given. It is pointed out that the legislature of Maryland on March 5, 1860, adopted the Michler line, commencing at the Fairfax stone and subsequently the State of Maryland provided for the marking of the Michler line. West Virginia, on the contrary, did not approve of the Michler line, but in 1887 the legislature passed an act conditionally confirming it. The disagreement between Michler line and the Deakins line probably arises, in the opinion of the court, from the fact that Michler ran the true astronomical line and that his line is a due north and south line, where as the Deakins line probably run with a surveyor's compass and with less accuracy than the Michler line.

"It is the contention of the State of Maryland," continue the court, "that Deakins never attempted to run a true north and south line; that he never had any authority from the State of Maryland to do so, and that in the act confirming the lay out of the lots by Deakins it was especially declared by the State of Maryland that it did not show the true western boundary of the state; furthermore, that the attempt which has been made to trace the Deakins line shows that it is not a true north and south line, but a broken line, having offsets in various places.

"The State of Maryland insists that the evidence shows that a number of old grants made prior to the Deakins' survey would extend west of the boundary line as shown either by Deakins or Michler. It is the contention of the State of Maryland that when these grants were made they indicated a line further to the west that either of these lines, and that the ancient grants of large tracts of land showed that fact. But the evidence continued in this record leaves no room for doubt that after the running of the Deakins' line, the people of the region knew and referred to it as the line between the State of Virginia and the State of Maryland."

The court then quotes from what it styles the "frank and able report," filed by Lieutenant Michler with his survey confirming this situation, and interprets his statement as leaving little doubt that there was an old boundary line generally adopted. The court then goes on to quote from the report of the committee of the Maryland Historical Society as proving that the Deakins' line before the passage of the act under which the Michler line was run had long been recognized as the boundary and served as such. Even after the Michler line was run and marked, the testimony shows that the people generally adhere to the old line as the true boundary line. The fact remains that after the Deakins survey in 1788, the people living along the line generally regarded it as the boundary line between the state at bar. In the acts of the legislatures of the two states resulting in the survey and running of the Michler line, it is evident from the language used that the purpose was not to establish a new line but to retrace the old line and the court is strongly inclined to believe that had this been done at that time the controversy would have been settled.

"A perusal of the record satisfies us," continues the court, "that for many years occupation and conveyance of the lands on the Virginia side had been with reference to the Deakins line as the boundary line. The people have generally accepted it and adopted it, and the facts in this connection cannot be ignored."

The court then quotes Mr. Justice Field in the boundary line dispute of Virginia against Tennessee setting forth that it is the principle of the Supreme Court that "long acquiescence in the possession of territory and in the exercise of dominion and sovereignty is conclusive as the nation's title and rightful authority."

The opinion continues:

"An application of these principles cannot permit us to ignore the conduct of the states and the belief of the people concerning the purpose of the boundary line known as the old state or Deakins line, and to which their deeds called as the boundary of the farms, in recognition of which they have established their allegiance to the State of West Virginia, and in accordance to which they have fixed their homes and habitations.

"True it is that after the running of the Deakins line certain steps were taken intended to provide a more effectual legal settlement and delimitation of the boundary. But none of these steps were effectual, or such as to disturb the

MAN WAS ARRESTED ON RAPE CHARGE AND CONFESSED

Albert Timberman, of Near Bayard, Assaults 13-Year Old Girl.

Yesterday afternoon Sheriff Andrew Shartzer arrived in Oakland from Gorman with a prisoner who had committed one of the most heinous crimes that a human can be guilty of, that of rape on a mere child.

The officer's prisoner was Albert Timberman, whose parents reside at Wilson. The culprit has been a rover for a number of years, first working at one place and then another, his last employment being with a saw mill operation near the scene of his crime, which was committed Monday morning shortly before nine o'clock, the victim being Minnie Paugh, a little thirteen-year old school girl on her way to school at Bayard. Timberman caught the child on the road and after he had outraged her made his escape into West Virginia at or near Gorman, some six miles from the scene of his crime and went on toward Mount Storm.

In the meanwhile Sheriff Shartzer had been made acquainted with what had occurred and a telephone message to Deputy Sheriff Kimmell, at Gormania, soon placed that officer on the trail of the escaping man. He was overtaken near Mount Storm by the West Virginia officer about four o'clock yesterday morning and brought back to Gorman where he was delivered to the Maryland officer and immediately brought to Oakland and placed in jail.

On the way from Mount Storm to Gorman Timberman confessed his crime to Sheriff Kimmell, going into the minutest details of the revolting outrage.

Timberman is about nineteen years of age; about five feet six inches tall, squarely built and has a most revolting countenance.

B. & O. WILL LAY A THIRD TRACK

Now Locating Grade from Rodamer to Terra Alta.

The B. & O. R. R. Co. has a large force of its engineering corps at Terra Alta for the purpose of establishing a grade for its third track from Rodamer to Terra Alta, which move was previously recommended by President Willard while making his first inspection tour over the entire system owned, operated and controlled by the B. & O. and its subsidiaries. The proposed new third track which is to be built will parallel the present main line to a point about 300 yards east of Rodamer's tunnel, where the three tracks will vary to the north and run due northwest through a ravine known to hunters and old settlers as "fox cut" and strike the old line at a point near Rodamer tower, doing away with the tunnel altogether.

The third track will be a great benefit to the company in the way of dispatching its eastbound trains over the part of the Allegheny mountains where traffic is the heaviest, and which will be the means of preventing many delays to passenger and freight traffic which occurs daily between Rodamer, the extreme point of the third track between Cheat river and that place and the top of the mountain at Terra Alta.

Teachers Entertains.

Tuesday evening the Oakland teachers entertained the school officials, the senior class and a few other friends at a Washington birthday party at the school house, and proved themselves delightful hostesses, The walls were decorated with drawings of cherry leaves and fruit, and a cherry tree on the platform was the source of much amusement, the guests being blind folded and required to tie the cherries on the tree. Several guessing contests were held. Earl Smith won the prize, consisting of a box of candy, in the geographical contest. The prize in the Shakespeare contest, a Shakespeare Birthday Book was received by Mrs U. G. Palmer. The booby prizes consisting of a cherry and a hatchet were captured by J. E. Harned and C. E. Ellithorpe. Several valuable packages were auctioned off, Prof. Browning acting as auctioneer. The Commercial department was converted into a kitchen and delicious refreshments were served. Hand painted booklets were given to the guests as souvenirs of the occasion.

GARRETT COUNTY SUGGESTED FOR CAMP SITE

Recommendation Sent In to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army.

Suggestions for a camp site for the next encampment of the United States Army to be held either in Maryland or in the neighborhood of the state have been received by Adjutant-General Warfield from the railroad companies to which he applied for advice and recommendations. The suggestions forwarded to the adjutant-general, which he has in his turn sent to the quartermaster-general of the army, mention Mountain Lake Park, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; Singerly, in Cecil county, near both the Baltimore and Ohio and the Pennsylvania Railroads; Westminster, where the state encampment last year was held, and Gettysburg, which is reached by both the Western Maryland Railroad and the Philadelphia and Reading road.

Marriage Licenses.

The following marriage licenses have been issued by Clerk E. Z. Tower since our last report:

P. A. Barnard and Florence Duckworth, both of Bloomington.

Alvin Fike, of Fearer, and Nora Fike, of Selbysport.

Howard Haines, of Swanton and Croula Moreland, of Emorysire, W. Va.

Henry Thompson, of near Cork, W. Va., and Daisy Thomas, of near Auburn, W. Va.

Charles Cunningham and Mary Smith, both of Fairchance, Pa.

Charles Hilpert and Jessie Ryan, both of Salem W. Va.

Curtis Dill, of Reedsville, W. Va. and Jessie Pell, of Austin, W. Va.

Clarence Nuzum and Minnie Lynn, both of Grafton, W. Va.

Henry Baker and Eva Helm, both of Fairmont, W. Va.

Jacob C. Wilson, of Westernport and Maggie Mitter, of Bloomington.

Charles Van Aorten, of Clarksburg, W. Va., and Goldie Nichols, of Monongah, W. Va.

MARYLAND'S FAIR SEX

Statistics Show That Females are in Excess by Ten Thousand.

According to the report of the State Board of Health for the year ended December 31, 1907, which has just been submitted to Governor Crothers, there are 10,000 more females than males in Maryland.

"According to our figures," says the report, the population of Maryland in 1907 was 1,296,754. The estimated colored population was 257,696. In Maryland the female sex exceeds the male by almost 10,000. The estimated figures are: Males, 645,759; females, 656,163. A little less than one-half of the total population is in Baltimore City —555,646. The natural rate of increase, independent of immigration, is about 25 per cent.

The total number of births in the state in that year is given as 18,109, of which 14,775 were white and 3,330 negroes; males, 9,311, females, 8,794. Of these 9,344 were in the counties and 8,761 in Baltimore. Of a total of 20,982 deaths 14,775 were white persons and 3,330 negroes, says the report—11,150 in Baltimore and 9,792 in the counties. In one cass a white child was born to a father 87 years old and mother 33 year old. In another the mother 35 years old and the father 17 years old.

The estimated population of Washington county was: White, 46,075; colored, 6,297; total, 52,372.

According to the figures of the report the father is 4.67 years older than the mother. If the figures for mothers above the age of 45 were corrected, the average difference would be approximately 4 years.

Will Become Resident.

Mr. Ninian U. Bond, of the DuBois & Bond Bros. Company, who have been extensive lumber operators in Garrett county for a number of years, will become a permanent resident of Oakland. Mr. Bond recently purchased from Mr. D. M. Dixon a beautiful building lot at the head of Second street and is now having architects draw plans and preparing specifications for a modern dwelling which he contemplates erecting on the lot he purchased from Mr. Dixon.

THE YOUNG INTERCESSOR.

A Lass Who Faced Washington to Save Her British Lover.

By HOWARD FIELDING.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Thomas Lynde was a patriot in the days of 1776, but fate denied him the pleasure of fighting for his country.

He had been crippled by an accident, so that one of his legs was shorter than the other and had to be made even with a sort of stilt, upon which he trudged about vigorously enough for the purposes of business, but not for those of war.

He was a merchant in New York, and he stayed there, never concealing his sentiments, constantly persecuted, yet managing to live through it all and even to retain his liberty up to the winter of 1782, which was not many months before the final departure of the British power from the city.

So he must have possessed a measure of shrewdness with his obstinacy and a spirit not to be crushed by affliction.

He had a daughter, Marjory, who had inherited her mother's beauty and her father's indomitable courage, perhaps some of his obstinacy as well, for when there came at last a difference of opinion between them she did not yield even to his iron will.

The cause of this difference was a handsome young officer of the guards, a soldier of the king, and therefore in the eyes of Lynde a natural enemy. But he was not a natural enemy in the eyes of Marjory. He was an officer and a gentleman, doing his duty as his conscience commanded and his circumstances permitted.

Marjory was a patriot, but she was a woman, and it seemed reasonable enough to her that Captain Asgill should be a good man, while every other British soldier was an abhorred invader and the minion of a tyrant.

She was not swayed by personal preference for Captain Asgill, she assured her father, but simply by her sense of justice.

It was inconceivable to Lynde that his daughter could love a redcoat. She had seen her mother fade and perish from the mere stress of their intolerable situation, as much a victim of the horrors of war as any soldier slain in battle. Her two brothers had served in the patriot armies, and one had died of sickness and the other of a wound.

But Marjory knew or felt that Captain Asgill was not responsible for these ills, or at least she could not feel that he was, and she did not relinquish his acquaintance despite her father's wish.

Captain Asgill did not visit her, because he knew Lynde's sentiments, which he hoped to overcome, but there were two or three homes in the narrow circle of Marjory's social life where Asgill by the exercise of a lover's ingenuity could see her now and then in the company of others.

Upon a certain evening in April he came hurriedly to her house. Marjory saw him entering by the gate, and she knew by his manner and indeed by his mere presence there that no ordinary errand had brought him.

She met him in the hall, the broad door being open and the full moon shining in upon her, and a pretty girl in the moonlight was the same a hundred years ago or a thousand.

A sudden impulse of tenderness swayed Asgill uncontrollably. He extended both hands and drew Marjory toward him, and at that moment Thomas Lynde stumped out into the hall.

The scene was very brief, and Marjory was banished at the beginning.

The next minute, as it seemed to her, Asgill was gone, and she did not know why he had come or what he had meant to say or do.

"I gave him his walking papers," said Thomas Lynde and added grimly: "Now it remains to be seen what he will do to me. That young rascal has influence, my girl. He would like me out of the way perhaps."

One week later Lynde was arrested and imprisoned by order of the board of royalists, and Marjory was left in terrifying loneliness, utterly helpless, so far as any attempt to rescue her father was concerned, and very scantily informed as to his situation.

Any prisoner was in peril. So much she knew. And this knowledge was presently made doubly sure by the atrocious murder of Captain Joshua Huddy, an American officer who was taken from the military prison in New York by a party of soldiers under the infamous Lippincott and hanged as an act of vengeance for the death of one White, a plundering guerrilla.

Lippincott placarded the body with the line, "Up Goes Huddy For Philip White," words which were soon on every lip and were excellently calculated to haunt the minds of those whose loved ones lay in danger.

Marjory knew of only one man who could advise or help her in this emergency, and that was Captain Asgill, but what had become of him? No word had come to Marjory from him. Those whom she could ask, with any hope of news, had heard that he had left the city, whither and upon what errand they could not say.

The girl's position was utterly wretched. That hand clasp in the moonlight had awakened her heart, but to what end? Would he have declared his love for her? Would he have pledged his faith? Tender thoughts of him would surge up within her, and then—his disappearance, his silence, what could they mean? Her father's prophecy rang in her ears.

It had been speedily fulfilled, and the mere suggestion which her soul repelled that Asgill had had any hand in that calamity was madness in the silence of sleepless nights.

Upon a day in May there came to her a British soldier in tattered garments bearing a letter from Captain Asgill.

Supposing his situation to be already known to her, he had made no effort to prepare her mind. The poor girl read the words of tenderness with which the letter began, and her heart sank. Then in an instant the fatal news flashed through her like a bullet.

Captain Asgill was under sentence of death. The words of love he sent to her were the first and the last.

"I crowd all my facts into these opening lines," he wrote, "because I know not how long a time I have before the secret messenger who will bear this comes to me. When he comes he cannot wait. It will be a tap at the window, and I must cease.

"I came to you that evening to say goodby, being ordered upon a mission of some danger, which in fact led to my capture.

"I had loved you from the first, but did not mean to speak so soon. My heart overmastered me. Would you have listened? I know not and never can know in this world.

"I beg of you to think of me as a man of honor, who would have laid at your feet my name, my hopes, all that was mine to give. My whole life was yours then, when I counted it in years, as now, when only days remain.

"You will have heard of the mischance which has befallen me. You may even have better information than mine, but I am told this—that General Washington demanded Captain Lippincott to be tried as a murderer for the death of Captain Huddy; that Sir Henry Clinton refused the demand; that General Washington thereupon summoned a council of officers, by whom it was decided that a British prisoner of suitable rank should be chosen by lot to expiate the crime of Lippincott, if crime it was.

"The lot fell to me, and I rest, therefore, under sentence of death, the time and place unknown to me as yet.

"My name may be much blown about the country for a little while, and it is better for your father's sake that yours should not be joined with it.

"I have therefore refrained from communicating with you through open means allowed to me, not knowing under whose eyes my words might fall, but heaven's kindness has sent me this secret means, which I seize upon with gratitude."

The concluding portion of the letter dealt with certain perils which he foresaw for herself and her father and pointed out the proper course for the to pursue.

"I have small influence with Sir Henry Clinton," he continued, "but much with Sir Guy Carleton, who will succeed him. In fact, I have acted for some time under private instructions from Sir Guy, an old time friend of my father, Sir Charles Asgill.

"At need, show him these lines. I would send some words to him upon my own account if the time sufficed, but it does not."

The letter closed with many words of love, and Marjory clasped it to her breast and sat for a long time motionless.

Then she arose and went about an odd task, putting a small supply of food into a little satchel, and, with that in her hand, she left the house.

Upon the second day thereafter she had come to that quaint old house with the broad roof and the low eaves at Verplanck's point, upon the Hudson, the headquarters of Washington.

Now, at that time the affair of Captain Asgill was much upon the mind of Washington, and when he was informed that a young woman sought him upon some plea connected with that matter he gave orders that she be brought before him.

He was provided with extremely full and accurate information about Asgill, and no such name as Marjory Lynde appeared upon the record.

If she came to plead for Asgill it was likely that she was a spy of Clinton's and her plea a fraud.

When Marjory was brought into Washington's presence he was impressed by her youthful beauty, but more by a certain rapt and trancelike expression of her face, as though she were suffused with some strong controlling spiritual influence.

When bidden to speak she asked for the life of Captain Asgill simply, directly and with no waste of words.

"And what is he to you?" asked Washington.

"He is to be my husband," she replied.

This ran counter to Washington's information and was precisely the story which would have been put upon the lips of a spy.

The general looked keenly at this blue eyed, slender girl who faced him so calmly.

"The fate of Captain Asgill rests not with me, but with the congress," he said. "Nevertheless my wish might have its weight. What has led you to believe that I would intercede for him?"

"My mother is dead," said Marjory. "My two brothers are dead. My father, stubborn to the last, has suffered hardships and persecutions and the loss of everything, and he is now in prison by the order of the loyalists. He cannot survive it. His strength will not suffice. I shall never see him again. And when I learned that the only other person on earth who loves me and whom I love had been condemned to die by mere chance and for no wrong that he had done the feeling came upon me that this passed beyond the boundaries of God's justice, beyond what he would permit. I feel it surely in my heart." And she laid her clinched hand upon her breast. "It needed only for me to do my part, which I have done. I have come to you."

This appeal, uttered with that peculiar power which comes from complete spiritual conviction, affected Washington powerfully, but he was still in doubt.

"In Captain Asgill's circumstances," said he, "it would be natural to ask leave to communicate with his betrothed. Permission would have been granted, but it has not been asked."

She drew Asgill's letter from her bosom.

"A soldier brought me this," said she. "I beg you to read it."

"A soldier?" he asked, surprised.

"A British soldier. He had been a prisoner."

"My child," said Washington, "you have done me a considerable service."

"I beg you to read the letter," said she again, and Washington read.

"This would touch any human heart," he said. "There is more in it than even you perceive."

He reflected for a moment and then resumed:

"I am about to tell you a secret. The opportunity to send this was not an accident; it was contrived by me. I desired that Captain Asgill should communicate with Carleton; it suited my plans. And, upon the other hand the representations which Captain Asgill could have made were the surest possible means for saving his own life. And this he well knew. 'Some words upon my own behalf,' he writes. My child, they were life to him. But he believed that he had but the one chance to write and only a few minutes for the work, and he preferred to save his honor with you and to serve your interests and those of your father.

"Lift up your hand and pledge me secrecy in the sight of heaven. This man of honor and sentiment shall not die in the place of such a wretch as Lippincott. You have well said that God's justice will not permit it. I give you my promise that if I myself am spared for a sufficient time Captain Asgill shall not die."

"I BEG YOU TO READ THE LETTER."

The rest is history.

Captain Asgill remained under sentence of death, but the popular outcry was unavailing to drive him to the scaffold.

In June, still under sentence, he was admitted to parole and was for some time in Philadelphia, where Marjory was with her father, whose release she had secured—partly, no doubt, through influence exerted in his favor by Washington.

In Philadelphia the lovers met and plighted their vows and won a somewhat grudging consent from Thomas Lynde.

All through the summer Asgill remained in his strange position, practically a free man, yet under the shadow of the gallows. But a powerful hand protected him and guided his affairs, and in the autumn he was freed finally from all restraints, and he and Marjory were married very happily

A NEW ARSENICAL SPRAY.

In view of the fear which is felt by some orchardists as to the effects on their fruit trees resulting from a continued use of arsenate of lead as an insecticide in their spraying operations from an accumulation of arsenic in the soil and because of the fear felt in some other quarters as to the effect on the public health of an extensive spraying of trees and fruit with arsenic lead compounds, keen interest will be felt in the work of two French scientists, Vermorel and Dantony, who, with a view to overcoming the dangers referred to, have conducted extensive experiments the past three years in the use of ferrous arsenate as a substitute for arsenate of lead and with a remarkable degree of success. The solution which they have used is made as follows: Twenty ounces of arsenate of soda are dissolved in five gallons of water, making solution A. Twenty ounces of iron sulphate are also dissolved in five gallons of water, making solution B. Solution B is poured into solution A gradually, with continued stirring. Toward the end of the operation the mixture should be tested with potassium ferrocyanide test paper, and when this turns blue no more of solution B should be poured in, as it is important not to have too great an excess of the iron sulphate. The combination should then be diluted to fifty gallons. Besides ten ounces of ferrous arsenate, it will contain also some sulphate of soda and ferrous hydrate. When in contact with the air the ferrous arsenate turns greenish, while in contact with the air the ferrous hydrate turns to ferric hydrate, which is the best antidote against arsenical poisoning. The general color of the spray is a dirty green and cannot be mistaken for any other product. The experimenters found the spray very adhesive; that when used twice as strong as the above prescription there was no burning of the foliage, while at half strength it had an effect as an insecticide equal to the usual formula of arsenate of lead. Moreover, the foliage of trees sprayed with the ferrous arsenate looked healthier and of a darker green than those treated with other sprays. Besides the advantages mentioned—adhesiveness, insecticide value, freedom from burning, a characteristic color and the presence of an antidote with the poison—would be the cheapness of the product, owing to the low cost of sulphate of iron as compared with acetate of lead.

THE LIME-SULPHUR SPRAY.

Last summer, when it was too late to apply it effectively, the writer had an inquiry from a Pennsylvania reader asking for the formula for making the lime-sulphur spray used in combating the San Jose scale, which had appeared in his orchard. For the benefit of this reader and any others who may have to fight this pest we give below the formula and how to prepare it. This spray should be applied to the trees while the buds are dormant, preferably during the months of February and March. To make fifty gallons of the spray mixture fifteen pounds of lime and fifteen pounds of sulphur are required. Many include fifteen pounds of salt, but recent experiments show that this adds no particular value. To prepare the mixture fresh stone lime should be slaked to a whitewash; then add the sulphur, which has been made into a paste by means of hot water. The mixture should then be stirred thoroughly and boiled for two hours, when enough hot water should be added to bring the whole mixture up to fifty gallons. Best results will be had if the spray is used while hot. To prevent a clogging of the spray nozzle by particles of lime the mixture should be strained through a twenty mesh brass strainer or two thicknesses of gunny sacking before being poured into the spray tank. The liquid should be applied to the trees under high pressure, so as to give a finely divided spray, and all parts of the trunk and limbs should be reached.

PRACTICAL CO-OPERATION.

Two Minnesota Holstein breeders hit upon a very sensible plan when in purchasing sires for their herds they did so with the agreement to exchange sires at the end of two years so as to prevent inbreeding. The plan works well with two breeders and would give just as satisfactory results and cover a much longer period if from four to six breeders were to co-operate in it, each buying a good sire and passing it on to his neighbor at the end of the time mentioned and in turn receiving one from his neighbor. In the older dairy sections of the country this plan is followed to quite an extent and with very satisfactory results, for it permits a sire to remain in a neighborhood long enough to demonstrate beyond question the type and capacity of his get.

Professor Willard of the North Dakota experiment station has lately completed a soil map which should be of practical value to every intelligent farmer and landowner of that state.

Sensible parents will keep the sick cat and dog confined in some place away from the little children who may be in the home. A sick cat often transmits disease, while no one ever knows when a sick dog is going to run amuck.

Thirty inches of snow on a level in most of the north, central and eastern states, accompanied by blockade of railroads, scarcity of fuel and intense cold, suggests the fact that the climate has not changed enough so that we are rid of the "old fashioned winter."

Latest reports show that there are now in operation throughout the country 40,004 rural mail routes, aggregating more than 1,000,000 miles and serving about 20,000,000 patrons. To date the innovation has cost the government $170,000,000. The system lacks about $17,000,000 a year of being self maintaining.

If there is any one condition that a dairy or meat animal should be spared during the winter months it is a wet and nasty place in which to rest at night. Not only does such a condition mean lack of comfort for the animals, but they are likely to produce or aggravate tubercular tendencies and any other ailment that is promoted by dampness and filth.

The apple maggot is a pest which affects this fruit in some sections of Maine, and it is said to be infinitely worse than the larvae of the codling moth, as many of the maggots will infest a single apple and often entirely honeycomb it. One of the worst features in connection with the pest seems to be that it cannot be readily reached by the arsenical sprays which are so effective in holding the codling moth in check.

Often the stand still condition of the house fern or palm is due to the roots having completely occupied all of the available space in the pot. In such case the plant should be removed from the pot, placed in a larger receptacle and new soil added, with such fertilizer as the particular plant may need. Where the plant looks rather tough it is sometimes advisable to cut the leaves or body back rather sharply, thus inducing a rapid growth of new stuff.

It is entirely in place to talk of a conservation of forest and water power resources, but far transcending this is an agitation looking to such handling of the rich soils to be found almost anywhere as will result in a conservation of their fertilizing elements, those factors that really give them worth as soils. Could the loss which we have sustained in this regard be known and the figures representing it be expressed in black and white it would be a total staggering belief.

One of the best features connected with the agricultural short courses which are being conducted by agricultural college instructors at important points in their respective states is not only that it gives practical agricultural instruction condensed and simplified for the benefit of those not used to technical study, but it arouses in many a bright boy and girl a desire to know more about the subjects presented, thus influencing them to take the more extended courses at the state agricultural college. The short course is thus a sort of agricultural entree, whetting the appetite for a good square meal.

Next in importance to having the right kind of soil in proper tilth is the point of securing seed for such soil that is of strong vitality and free from weed seeds and other adulterations. Small grains, especially oats, should be given a thorough cleaning in a fanning mill under a good blast of wind. If the hand mill will not do this work the way it ought to be done one can hire the cleaning done at small cost at the elevator. If there is question about the vitality of seed which seems to be plump and ought to grow it is an easy matter to test it by spreading a representative handful between a couple of sheets of blotting paper and keeping the seed warm and moist for a few days. Should a considerable per cent of the sample not grow it would indicate that a larger per cent would need to be sown to secure the necessary stand.

Wounds that may have been made on the trunks and low branches of fruit trees by the gnawing of rabbits and mice will heal more readily if the spots are covered with grafting wax, which will exclude the air and moisture. This may be made by melting together four parts of rosin, two parts of beeswax and one part of tallow. When melted the mixture should be thoroughly stirred until cold, or it may be poured while warm into a pail or tub of cold water. When it has cooled sufficiently to handle the hands should be greased with tallow and the mass pulled and worked until it becomes quite light in color. It may then be made into balls or sticks of convenient size and is ready for use. It should be warmed slightly to work well. Where the wound to be treated is large very good results may be had by dipping strips of cotton cloth in liquid grafting wax and winding it spirally about the trunk, allowing the edges to overlap so as to make the wrapping as nearly air tight as possible. We have had injured trunks heal completely under such a covering as this.

If the hens should scratch the covering from the strawberry bed during the coming three or four weeks bare spots should be recovered is the late winter and early freezing that plays smash wit plants.

The feed for brood animals of wh ever kind should be flesh and bo building rather than fat forming. O this account the corn should be r duced to a minimum and oats, bra barley, peas, alfalfa and clover s stituted.

It is a compliment to the nativ strength of soil that it will grow eve weeds. It is just as great a comp ment to the soil and a good deal gre er one to the fellow who works it i it produces some more useful crop than weeds.

We saw a team of $400 horses the other day which had been driven to town all a-sweat and were allowed to stand without blanketing. The man who is compelled to buy such a team will concede that this kind of treatment is likely to prove a bit expensive.

There are quite a good many things to take into account in getting ready for the spraying campaign, and for this reason preparations should be made some time before the actual work is begun. Not only should the chemicals be on hand for the various solutions which are to be used, but the spray tank, hose, cutoff, nozzle, etc., should be carefully inspected.

The check habit is a mighty good habit to get into not only because it means that a fellow who uses a check book has money in the bank, but also that when a bill has been paid by check not only the stub, but the canceled check, serve as conclusive evidence that the account for which it was drawn has been paid. More men ought to have money in the bank, and more ought to use check books.

Some observations which have been made by the poultry department of the Maine Agricultural college show that eggs from hens kept in houses with curtain instead of tight board fronts are not only more fertile, but produce a larger per cent of strong chicks. This is attributed to the fact that with the curtain front the houses are better ventilated and result in a more vigorous physical condition on the part of the hens, which accounts for eggs of greater vitality.

Every orchard owner who would attain best results in the management of his trees should spray them at the proper season for the several pests which may affect them, and to do this most effectively he should have in his possession the spraying calendar issued by his state experiment station. This not only tells when to spray and how, but gives the formulas for the spray mixtures which should be used for the several kinds of fruit trees and shrubs and how to prepare them. Such bulletins are suited to the seasonal needs of the states in which they are published.

Not infrequently the cow in the herd that gives the largest flow of milk may be the most unprofitable, due to her large consumption of food and the low per cent of butter fat in her milk. Cows vary from 2.75 to 6 per cent in butter fat showing, and the only accurate way of telling where on the scale they belong is to apply the Babcock or butter fat test. It may be a bit hard to act on the results of the test and dispose of animals that are not paying for their keep previously supposed to be money makers, but it is the only course to follow if a fellow is in the dairy business for the money there is in it rather than for glory and health.

Perhaps no figures that have lately been published give a better idea of the ruthless destruction of our timber resources as a country than the statistics of the cut of white pine and included species for the year 1908. That year the cut was less by 847,787,000 feet than that of the preceding season, or a decrease of 20.2 per cent. In 1908 Minnesota, which for several years past has led in white pine production, produced 448,512,000 feet less than in 1907. Wisconsin ranked second in the cut of white pine, while Michigan, which in years gone by used to lead all states, was outranked by three New England states which were stripped years ago, but are now coming to the front with a second growth of pine.

The Kansas experiment station recently concluded some experiments with a view to determining the cost of egg production. Two pens of fowls were taken, one of White Plymouth Rocks and the other of White Leghorns. Tab was kept on the hens between Feb. 1 and Oct. 1, 1909. The best two hens in its first pen laid 181 and 174 eggs each respectively, the average of the whole pen being 143 eggs per hen. The total cost of feed for this pen was $8.81, receipts from eggs sold $25.56, leaving a profit over cost of feed of $17.75, or about $1.61 per hen for the eight months. While the best hen in the pen of White Leghorns made a record of only 172 eggs, the average of the whole pen was 152 eggs. In the case of the Leghorns the cost of the feed was about a cent less per month, while the net profit on eggs above cost of feed was $1.81 per hen.

WORK OF ENUMERATORS

As Set Forth in the Instructions Now Out.

What the census enumerator are required to learn regarding the place of birth of native-born and foreign-born persons, and other personal facts concerning the latter class, in taking the Thirteenth United States Census, beginning April 15 next, is fully set forth in the printed instructions prepared by the United States Census Bureau to guide them in filling the population schedule. It is pointed out that all the questions relate only to conditions existing on April 15, the "Census Day."

On the subject of place of birth of a native-born person the instructions state that if the person was born in the United States the enumerator is to give the State or Territory (not city or town) in which born. A person born in what is now West Virginia, North Dakota, South Dakota or Oklahoma should be reported as so born, although at the time of birth the particular region may have had a different name.

Relative to conjugal condition, the enumerators are to report whether the person is single, married, widowed or divorced. Married persons are to be asked if they have been married before. If the present marriage is the first, the fact is to be indicated by the sign "M 1;" but if it is the second or subsequent marriage, then the enumerator is to write "M 2," meaning married more than once.

The question calling for the number of years of the present marriage is declared by the Census Bureau to apply only to persons reported as married, and the answer should give the number or years married to the present husband or wife. Thus a woman who may have been married for 10 years to a former husband, but has been married only 3 years to her present husband, should be returned as married 3 years. The number of years entered should be the number of completed years. A person who on April 15, "Census Day," has been married 3 years and 11 months should be returned as married 3 years. For a person married less than 1 year, the entry is to be "0," meaning less than 1 year.

In the case of persons speaking Polish or reporting that they were born in Poland, which is no longer an independent country, the enumerator is to inquire whether the birthplace was in what is now known as German Poland or Russian Poland, and he must write the answer accordingly as Poland (Ger.), Poland (Aust.), or Poland (Russ.)

If the birthplace reported is Canada, the enumerator is required to ask whether the person is of English or French descent and to write Canada (Eng.) or Canada (Fr.) according to the answer.

The question calling for the year of immigration to the United States applies to all foreign-born persons, male or female, of whatever age. It should be answered, therefore, for every person whose birthplace was in a foreign country. The enumerator must enter the year in which the persons came to the United Srates. If he has been in the United States more than once, the year of his first arrival is to be stated.

The inquiry whether naturalized or alien applies only to foreign-born males 21 years of age and over. It does not apply to female, to foreign-born minors, or to any male born in the United States. If the person was born abroad, but has become a full citizen either by taking out second or final papers of naturalization or through the naturaltzation of his parents while he was under the age of 21 years, the enumerator is to write "Na" (for naturalized). If he has declared his intention to become an American citizen and taken out his "first papers," the enumerator is to write "Pa." If he has taken no steps towards becoming an American citizen write "Al" for alien.

The inquiry as to the ability to speak English applies to all persons 10 years of age or over. If English is spoken the enumerator must write "English" in the proper column. If the person enumerated is not able to speak English the enumerator is required, in such cases only to write out the name of the language spoken, as French, German, Italian, etc. If more than one language is spoken by a person who, however, does not speak English, then the enumerator to write the name of that language which is his native language or mother tongue.

BIG MALLET ENGINES FOR THE BALTIMORE & OHIO

Heaviest Locomotives Known Are Included in Big Expenditures for Motive Power.

The B. & O. board of directors at a recent meeting, in addition to the large appropriations made for roadway improvement in the furtherance of President Willard's plan for increased operating efficiency, authorized some three million more expenditure for motive power. This with the thirteen million dollar order for cars and locomotives now being filled makes sixteen millions for new equipment.

An interesting feature of the latest order for motive power is that it includes thirty Mallet engines of the heaviest weight ever built for road use.

The B. & O. was the pioneer company in the introduction of the monster mallet, its first weighing 334,500, then the largest locomotive in the world, being placed on the Sand Patch grade on the Connellsville division. Since then other American railroads have employed the Mallet type for hill work, the Northern Pacific's weighing 350,000 pounds, the Great Northern's 362,000 pounds and the Erie's 410,000 pounds, these being the weights of the engine proper, not including tank.

The B. & O. is now to have no less than thirty of the gigantic weight of 420,000 pounds, the heaviest known, and much the largest order ever placed for such type. They are not to be confined to hill work but are to be operated as road engines over the Allegheny mountains.

In addition to the thirty Mallet locomotives the new order includes 120 consolidation freight type locomotives of 227,000 pounds weight and same general design as the 84 now being delivered.

As to Keeping Secrets.

A Chicago police magistrate, after long years of observation and experience, declares unequivocally that women keep secrets much more surely than men, jokesmiths, philosophers and alleged history to the contrary notwithstanding. He avers that in the smaller things—the relatively unimportant matters—it may be true that woman is the more loose-tongued, that she is naturally somewhat gossipy, and her domestic status, uneventful as it usually is, inclines her to small talk. But when it comes to the things that actually count—the vital, compelling, tremendous things—woman, according to this Chicago official, is so far beyond man that comparisons are all but ridiculous. Moreover, he says that nine out of ten police officers know this to be true, whatever aspect of the question may be held in the other walks of life.

Doubtless it is all as the Chicago man says. It seems likely enough, when contemplated in connection with certain characteristics of woman that are universally admitted. Take the matter of bearing physical pain, for instance. There is scarcely a physician anywhere who will not tell you that the average woman will bear without a murmur pain that would drive men to suicide. Woman shrinks shudderingly from the slightest impending danger, but she faces a real crisis when it is upon her in a way man rarely rises to.—Washington Herald.

TO PITTSBURG IN TWO YEARS

Mr. George R. Gaither Explains Western Maryland's Plans.

A dispatch from Annapolis to the Baltimore Sun, dated Feb. 17, says regarding the extention of Western Maryland Railroad from Cumberland to New Haven, Pa., and the prospects of the bill now pending in the Legislature to authorize the company to finance the extension, as follows:

Favorable report was presented Friday to the House by the Committee on Corporations on a bill to authorized the Western Maryland Railroad to finance the extension of the road from Cumberland to New Haven, Pa. While new stock might be issued at par without further authorization from the Legislature, the plan of issuing it below par, which is authorized in the pending bill, necessitates such sanction.

At a hearing before the committee this morning Mr. George R. Gaither said that probably $15,000,000 will be issued, while the opinion is prevalent that this will bring from $50 a share upward. The new stretch is to be 83 miles long and will be completed, said Mr. Gaither, in about two years.

In days gone by, said Mr. Gaither, the system followed in construction new roads or extensions had been to issue bonds and to give stock as a kind of a bonis, while the Western Maryland was averse to increasing any prior liens and believed that the road should represent money actually invested in stock.

"We want every penny put into the road to be represented by actual property," soid Mr. Gaither. "Further, we have provided for full publicity as to the condition of the property and the intrinsic value of the shares, and shall court and cultivate such publicity. The actual value of a road is now often considered in computing rates, and this value will be accurately determined by reports and records which it is provided, must be furnished to the State."

That the proposed extention will mean much to Allegany and Washington counties in particular, as well as to the State in general, was the opinion expressed by representatives of those sections. Said Mr. Carl, of Allegany:

"So many and so great are the advantages promised to Cumberland by the extension that it is difficult to determine the most prominent. In the first place, it will put Cumberland on another trunk line, while it will also give us additioual competing connection with New York on the one hand and Pittsburg on the other.

"Further than this, it means an investment of $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 in Cumberland and Allegany county in the next two years. The Western Maryland already has shops at Cumberland and a contractor is now at work on the establishment of an extension yard on the West Virginia side, and further expansion and consequent expenditure of money will undoubtedly be necessitated. These are only two or three advantages, without going into the possibility of increased population, greater circulation of money, added prosperity for our tradesman and other business interests, and so on."

Mr. Jacob M. Middlekauff, of Washington county, thus expressed himself:

"Some time will be required to demonstrate the full benefits that will accrue to Washington county from the extension of the Western Maryland and its connection with the New York Central. Competition and consequent improvement in rates will develop and our shippers will benefit proportionately. The new road will bring us into closer communication with the great centers of the country, and will also bring immediate benefits through other channels."

No talk of opposion to the bill has developed in any quarter of the House.

Fire Waste in United States.

"The average annual fire waste of the United States for the five years ending with 1907 was $252,000,000, and the losses for the year 1908, beginning with $24,000,000 in January and steadly increasing, aggregate over $200,000,000. Although there were but seven fires during the year 1908 where the losses were $1,000,000 or more, the aggregate loss equals that of the year of the great Baltimore conflagration. When the business man of large interests faces a restriction of his credit due to the fact that he can no longer obtain sufficient fire insurance to cover his combustible holdings, the fact that we may have been burning up $500 worth of property every minute, day and night, for the past six years, may at last penetrate his consciousness," writes Alfred Stumpe in the March Popular Mechanics, and puts the following questions:

"What if we were to lose a quarter of a billion dollars every year in wheat or cotton or beef? What if such a value in shipping should sink in New York harbor? What if the national treasury should be looted annually of that amount or business failures approximate that figure?"

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY, 24, 1910.

BY THE decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, published on another page of this paper, in the boundary line case between the States of Maryland and West Virginia, the former state has lost none of her territory and the latter will part with a very small portion of her heritage. The question, however, is not how much or how little one state gains from the other but the settlement for all time to come of the disputed lines—the one run by Francis Deakins and the other by Lieut. Michler—by this decision of the Court. Under the decision the Deakins line, originally run under a joint commission of the state of Maryland and the mother state of Virginia, will be the recognized and legal boundary between the commonwealths. This is to be relocated and marked by Commissioners from each of the States to be appointed within the next forty days.

THE KNOCKER.

The knocker is necessary to prod us on. If everybody told us we were all to the mustard, we'd soon begin to believe it and sit down and do nothing. Positively it's the fellow who knocks you hardest who's your best friend. And yet were it not for the high, fierce joy a fellow has in achieving things in spite of the knocker, how much joy would be gone from the effort! The knocker has his value when he is an artist. Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Franklin and Patrick Henry were masters of the noble art of knocking. So, too, was Abraham Lincoln and Grant. They knocked sham from its throne. There is Roosevelt knocking with all his picturesque might. Even Carrie Nation is a knocker from the old house but her knocking has become more dangerous than the laws against which her hatchet is wielded. Never a genius that has helped the world along but has done so by doing some vigorous preliminary knocking.

To be sure there is knocking that is wholly bad—the knocking of malice and envy. The backbiter really does little harm, or the slanderer, either. They are not what hurt in their work. The thing that hurts is the truth, and if the knocker tells things about you that are true then you should proceed to correct the fault. He is your friend in fact, if your enemy in intent. Criticism is knocking, yet but for criticism we should have no advancement. A man must knock if he would waken the sleepers; a man must take knocks that he may be in training for the work he has to do. The knocker, at his best, is the man who sends the world along. Let each man, therefore, knock away, and if he doesn't knock in the right way we may be sure that the thing knocked will come back at him some day and knock him out. Be kind—be blowed! Therefore let the knocking proceed, and "damned be he who first cries, 'Hold, enough!' "

Among the many laudatory letters which every newspaper receives, there is always a modicum of knocking epistles. Our experience probably is no different to that of other contemporaries. It is the knockers that brings life and energy to newspaper men. From time to time we receive letters from people who want their subscriptions cancelled, and suddenly. Such letters never bother us because it is by this means that we know we have said something. In every instance where one man is offended, there are others greatly please. And so while the newspaper man at times, is showing people out through one door, there is another door through which others are constantly coming in. And for all that go out, ten come in. And often the gentleman who stalks off with a clatter of brogans, one month, comes sneaking back softly to the mourners' bench a few months' later.

We do not wish to lose any subscribers, but we honestly cannot say that we are sorry to lose the man who, liking ten articles, cancels because he dislikes one. The man who will tolerate no ideas except his own is not in the line of growth and for such there is little hope. Of course, you are not expected to accept all we write—but mark this, if we make you think for yourself, that is all there is about it—it has done you good.

TERRIBLE FATE OF LITTLE BOY

Whole Community Was Shocked by the Fatality.

BLOOMINGTON, Md., Feb. 21—The whole community was terribly shocked late on Saturday afternoon when the news reached town that little Raymond Harris, not quite eight years of age, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Harris, of this place, while crossing the B. & O. bridge, had been struck by fast express train No. 14, due here at 15 minutes past 5 o'clock, and hurled over the bridge to the river below, a distance of about fifty feet. The little child fell in the water at the river's edge and was picked up by his father who witnessed the accident and was about twenty feet from his boy when he was struck. Mr. Harris was returning from work and was accompanied by his son, who had spent the afternoon with his father, who is employed as car shifter at the Hampshire dump. When about midway of the bridge a fast freight was noticed approaching the east end and at the same time the express train hove in sight at the west end. It is supposed the little fellow saw and realized his danger for he started to run ahead of his father and was in the act of stepping off the track at the west end of the bridge when struck. He was carried to the home of his parents a short distance from the scene of the accident where an examination of his injuries revealed a badly fractured skull. Later on he was taken to the hospital at Keyser, where he died three hours after the accident never having regained consciousness. His body was brought home Sunday afternoon on No. 3 over the W. M. railroad. The father lay down between the tracks and escaped injury.

Mrs. Paugh, a widow living with her family at Hampshire, who was stricken with typhoid fever a few days ago, was sent to the Hoffman Hospital for treatment Thursday morning. Her son, Charles, the only support of the family, is recovering from a prolonged and very severe attack of the same disease and is unable to leave his room.

All doubts of the temperance people as to the views held by Senator Speicher, of this county, on legislation pertaining to the liquor question were dispelled on Thursday, when he voted with three other senators against the repeal of the local option laws of Washington county.

Mr. Howard Barnard, son of Mr. Henry Barnard, a well known farmer of this district, and Miss Florence Duckworth, of Empire, boarded the morning accommodation train for Oakland last Thursday and while at the county seat sought the aid of two very important personages in matrimonial affairs, the county clerk and a minister. The happy pair returned the same evening and received an old fashioned welcome at the home of the bride's parents.

Mr. John Rowe, formerly of this place, now a prominent business man of Grafton, while on a visit to his father-in-law, Mr. Andrew Mullen, of Piedmont, during the past week, visited our town on Saturdry to renew old associations.

An outbreak of scarlet fever has occurred at Barnum. Four or five cases have been reported and in order to prevent a further spread of the disease the public school at that place was closed last week.

Mr. Alvey Chaney, of Beryl, a fireman on the Western Maryland railroad, was taken off his engine at Dobbin, W. Va., suffering from an attack of appendicitis and sent home on No. 2 Friday morning. The same evening he was taken to the Western Maryland hospital at Cumberland for treatment.

Mr. John Miller, a well known business man of Luke, was in town Saturday looking after the interests of his branch store in this place.

Postmaster Jacob Stump has been appointed by the State Board of Health sub-registrar for this district.

On Friday morning a large force of men were at work at the west end of the yard at this place, putting down a skeleton track for a steam shovel to be used in excavating and widening the cut at the north side of B. & O. bridge where the W. M. R. R. runs under the B. & O. It is said the old shops will be torn down to make room for additional tracks and a new roundhouse, machine shop, tool house and other necessary buildings erected on the site of the field now known as the base ball park. The home of the mayor of "Tootsie town," an old landmark and the oldest house in Franklin, will be moved and converted into a depot at this point. Mr. "Tootsie" Flynn, who with his family has occupied the old mansion uninterruptedly for the past 30 years, says that while he hates very much to vacate the old home he is not a knocker to stand in the way of the march of improvement. He has not yet decided where he will move.

Saturday was pay day at the mines of the Marstellar Coal Co.

Mr. Wm. Randall, manager of the Buxton & Landstreet stores at Beryl accompanied by his two sons, was in town on Sunday.

Mr. Wm. Wildman and daughter Nellie, Messrs. Freeland Tibbetts, John Rowland, Harry Hartley and Robert Tibbetts, all of Kitzmiller, were guests of relatives and friends on Sunday.

MUCH WORK AHEAD FOR THE LEGISLATURE

Action Awaiting Bills After the Pie Is Passed.

All of the Governor's appointments must be in by today. The Constitution gives him 50 days in which to make his selections, and the time limit expires on February 24. The Senate, however, need not act on any until prepared to do so. As a rule, the Committee on Executive Nominations delays a report until near the close of the session and then confirms in bulk. A senator may at any time call on the committee to produce the civil list for his county, and his request is always complied with, but he prefers to have them held back so that in event of a strong kick he may find it conducive to his political health to suggest a change. This explains why these lists slumber so long in the committee, which rarely meets, makes no investigation and simply obeys orders. Senators, as a rule, get what they want, that is to say, in the way of minor appointments, for if these do not suit senatorial courtesy would enable the objectors to have them rejected.

It was to prevent the Governor from dealing with the view to gaining votes for his pet measures that all legislation has been tied up, and no bill of importance been reported back to either house. After today the appointments will all have been made, and then the decks will be cleared for action. During the five weeks following the sessions will be longer and more frequent. A large number of important measures, all of which may be expected to provoke extended debate, are to be disposed of, and unless these are shoved through during the closing hours they will die on the files.

Owing to the many business propositions demanding consideration, little is heard of the proposed political legislation. Even the constitutional amendments are lost sight of for the time being, while absolutely no interest whatever is manifested in the Primary Election Bill. All talk about pressure being brought to bear on legislators to pass a direct primary law is rot There is no sentiment, no demand and not the slightest indication that it is desired in the counties. The people know that with such a general election law as now disgraces the Maryland statutes, with the frauds that are practiced by the administration officials and tolerated by the Executive himself, no expression of opinion is obtainable and until the system is changed from top to bottom all talk of improving the primary law is buncombe.

Chairman Hanna, of the Republican Committee, exposed the insincerity of the Governor, who, while crying aloud for a primary election law which would enable the people to make their own selections, nullified the result of an election in Howard county by recognizing a defeated and a very small minority when he appointed the supervisor of election. The governing body of the Republican party has no official knowledge of the existence of the self-appointed committee which sent in the names and which owes its existence to the Democratic machine in the county. Without Democratic aid it would have no standing whatever for it was thrown out by the state convention and refused admission by the State Central Committee. When, therefore, the Governor, knowing these facts, refused to recognize the accredited committee of the county, he did not comply with the law, and Chairman Hanna's contention that he does not practice what he preaches is sustained by the facts.

The Republicans want a fair primary law and will readily vote any bill whether it be the Governor's, Blair Lee's or Murray Vandiver's, provided they are given a square deal. When, therefore, this bill is considered, or rather, if it ever comes out of committee, the Republicans will offer a rider repealing the Wilson ballot law. If this is accepted they will vote for the bill, if refused they will vote against it.

The Attorney General has not been paying much attention to his election contrivances of late. His time is taken up with explanation of the public utilities measure he drafted and which is exciting more opposition as the drastic provisions are exposed. There are not a dozen members in the House nor half a dozen senators who would accept the bill in the form in which it has been presented, and if it ever gets through it will be so changed that its author will not recognize his handiwork.

The equal suffrage movement is attracting far more attention than either of these measures and is gaining strength daily. Members of the legislature were so impressed by the arguments advanced by its advocates at the meeting in Annapolis last week that if a vote had been taken then and there the bill would have received more votes than the Constitution demands to make it a law. Only those politicians who fear the influence of woman when exerted in behalf of decent government are outspoken in their opposition. It is the concensus of their opinion at Annapolis that if the legislature fails to act at this session the movement will become an issue in thcampe next aign, and one of the two parties, if not both, be obliged to accept it.

Oyster culture is another of the great questions demanding attention. The opposition to this is certain if the tide water counties is as pronounced as ever, but the preponderance of sentiment is in favor of continuing the system, and the attempt to repeal the law will prove abortive. Unless the apponent of the Shellfish Commission should succeed in forming a combination by log rolling or other measures, the amendments proposed by the Commission will be adopted.

What the fate of the state-wide local option bill will be is problemetical. The advocate of the measure claims a majority in the House, while its opponents are equally confident of an adverse majority. As a matter of fact neither side is sure of its ground. The vote in the Senate in the Washington county repeal bill is not indicative of the attitude of that body on the state bill, as two of the senators subsequently explained they voted for it because it was a local measure. The House committee is expected to report the bill next week.

The one sure thing is the Pure Food Bill. This measure will undoubtedly pass, the influences back of it being too strong to be resisted.

Senator Price brought in his reassessments bill. This applies to the counties only and is regarded by its author as one of the most important propositions before the legislature. There has not been a general reassessment outside of Baltimore city in years and, as much of the property has increased in value, a revaluation would result in increasing the state revenues. Baltimore city alone pays its fair proportion of taxes. In some sections of the state property owners pay more than their possessions justify, while in others the wealthier classes escape altogether. The county people themselves have concluded that the time for equalization has arrived and they are heartily in favor of a reassessment. Baltimore would benefit in the way of a lower tax rates, as the assessable basis would be increased. The Price bill is a voluminous affair covering, as it does, 67 sheets of Senate bill paper.

In view of the increased demands made upon the state, the proposed reassessment is timely. The financial committees of the General Assembly are not a little concerned over the outlook. Failure to dispose of the road bonds may again necessitate their being taken over by the state and this, together with other needs, will tax the necessary resources to the limit. There is a strong disposition to aid all the deserving institutions not directly controlled by the state and a determination to provide adequately for those wholly under state management. Fearful of the Governor's slashing powers, the committees do not intend to give him the last say.

It is announced that the hearings will end on March 10 and that then the joint committees on Finance and Ways and Means will prepare the omnibus and general appropriation bills and at the same time fix the levy. The purpose is to pass these in time to have them returned before adjournment so that if deemed advisable the items eliminated can be restored, notwithstanding the gubernatorial veto.

Orphans' Court Proceedings.

Tuesday the semi-monthly session of the Orphans' Court was held with all members of the Court present, when the following business was transacted:

George J. Pool was appointed guardian of his minor daughter Mandeline.

First account of William Winterburg, administrator of Laura E. Winterburg, late of Garrett county, deceased, was ratified.

First account of James W. White, administrator of the estate of Joseph M. Crim, late of Garrett county, deceased, was ratified.

Breakfast Menu.

Anyone who has observed the menu literature of the past year or two has noticed how slim the breakfasts are. The old idea of a fat and sturdy breakfast has disappeared. Notice this one, taken from the domestic department of a great daily: "Baked apples, vermicelli toast, coffee"—that's all. Here is another: "Barley with bananas, buttered toast, fish fluff, coffee." This is a little more pretentious than the first, since it introduces that fish business, which is no doubt a souffle, wherein the fish flesh is evolved, with the help of beaten whites of eggs, into a light and airy condition.

But this very item shows the tendency toward light breakfasts. A little fruit, toast or cereal, a cup of coffee—that is the typical breakfast. Everything else is disappearing. Even the reliable old egg, under the discouraging high prices, is being relegated as a superfluity. And as to the breakfast bacon, that is passe in the dietary of the future. Will that meager menu be sufficient to sustain one in the toils of the morning until the time of the noon sustenance arrives? Just try it and see.

SHIRT WAIST FACTORY WILL COME TO OAKLAND

Details Are Now Being Arranged and the Machinery Will Arrive Shortly.

A letter received by one of the business men of Oakland from the promoters of the shirt waist factory to be established here, gives positive assurance that the matter has taken definite shape and that the factory will be in operation early this spring, the necessary machinery having been selected and will be shipped from the manufacturers within a short time.

The company will be incorporated with sufficient capital to caary on the business on a scale in keeping with the demand for the product. The large room on the third floor of the First National Bank building, now occupied by the Knights of Pythias lodge, will be utilized by the factory for at least one year and then if circumstances warrant the company will erect its own building. The Knights will use the room recently vacated by the Bar Association as a lodge room.

Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Hostetler and three children, of near Trenton, North Dakota, who have been in the Accident section of Garrett county since December last visiting relatives and friends, took their departure for their western home this morning on train No. 7, being accompanied by Miss Maggie Beeghley, sister of Mrs. Hostetler. Since his arrival in Maryland Mr. Hostetler has disposed of his property in North Dakota and as soon as he arrives in the west he will move to Western Idaho to engage in fruit culture and the raising of alfalfa on irrigated land. Mr. Hostetler's homestead of 160 acres in Dakota was public land when he settled on it seven years ago since which time he has improved and farmed it pretty thoroughly. His wheat crop last year amounted to about 5,000 bushels.

Farmers in the sugar producing section of Garrett county are making extensive preparations for gathering the sugar water and reducing it to sugar and syrup. In many of the camps hundreds of vessels have been prepared and are ready as soon as weather conditions merit their setting. The winter has been an ideal one to make an exceptionally heavy flow of water and now if the warm days and cool nights follow, a tremendous crop is anticipated by the producers. In some instances buyers have been around through sections of the county optioning the sugar and syrup at a good price.

As will be noticed by referring to our advertising columns, Clerk John C. Dunham, clerk to the Mayor and Town Council, gives notice of the municipal election to be held on Monday, the 14th day of March, when one person for Mayor and three persons for members of the Council are to be elected. The polls will be held in the First National Bank building between the hours of eight o'clock a. m. and six o'clock p. m. Municipal affairs in Oakland have reached a climax and the time is here when none but level headed business men who have the best interests of the community uppermost in mind should be considered for the offices to be filled at the coming election.

Rev. J. Ed. Kildow, superintendent of the West Virginia Home for Orphans at Elkins, W. Va., was in Oakland last week for a day or two. The Home, Mr. Kildow said, is growing and is relieving the distress of many children of tender years who are gathered up from all sections of the Mountain State and cared for until such time as good homes can be found for them with respectable people who will agree to look after their welfare. At present a number of boys ranging in years from four to ten, are at the Home and these will be placed with any family in this or any other county who will agree to the terms prescribed by the trustees of the orphanage. A letter to Mr. Kildow, Elkins, West Va., from anyone desiring to adopt any of the children will bring an immediate answer.

NEWSPAPERS MOST EFFECTIVE MEANS

The Opinion of an Expert That Is Worth While Considering Carefully.

John Sparrow, well-known in advertising circles, believes that newspaper advertising is the highest and most effective form of publicity and that the advertising columns of a newspaper create public spirit and sustain confidence just as effectively as do the editorial columns, says Newspaperdom. All newspapers' advertisements, whether large or small, in Mr. Sparrow's opinion, make for opticism and enterprise.

"My reason," he said, recently, "for valuing the newspaper advertisement more highly than other forms of publicity, is not because it is unquestionably the least expensive method of reaching the customer, all things considered, but because it is the most natural, and, therefore, the most effective.

And newspaper advertisements are read. They are live news, as much so as the 'stories' which sprinkle the other columns. For real human interest the 'want' page easily leads all others, and the display ads, by their contrast with solid matter, are restful to the eye, as it is also attractive. Just fancy a newspaper without a line of display in it. But that would be impossible—it wouldn't be a newspaper; for no matter how much good reading it carried it would fail to reflect the life of the town.

"While everybody admits that women read the advertisements in the papers—almost religiously as it were—occasionally some skepticism as to the men is expressed. This is an erroneous idea. I firmly believe that men are approached more easily through the newspaper ad than by booklet or circular, unless that is exceptionally well written. Man is aggressive and combative by nature, and dislikes to have things thrust upon him. But you can 'toll him on' all right, as his wife will tell you. The newspaper ad doesn't chase him down or rub him the wrong way. It stands and invites him when he is in the mood to be invited.

"I do not mean to decry any of the other schemes of publicity. They are all effective in proportion to the cleverness of their get up but their relation to newspaper advertising is the same which the artillery and cavalry hold to the infantry of an army. The infantry is depended upon to do the hard fighting. It is a good idea to think of advertising in military terms for advertising is campaigning or it is nothing.

"The 'enemy' is the composite public mind, and the grand point of attack is its memory, which is uncertain and elusive. An impression may be made, but it will not hold unless hammered in. The minute you cease to hammer the public begins to forget. The newspaper, published every day, is the logical arm of assault. It may be good tactics to shell the woods occasionally and to keep the cavalry scouting, but 'the works' will have to be carried, after all, by those bristling bayonets, the pointed lines in the daily papers.

"The value of newspaper advertising is not confined to the benefits received by the advertisers. Economically, it is much more important than that. The advertising columns of a newspaper create public spirit and sustain confidence just as effectively as the editorial columns do, though in a different manner. The page make the town boom up. They feed our civic pride; they give us a touch of the metropolitan feeling. And all the ads, whether large or small, make for optimism and enterprise. 'Things can't be bad,' says the reader to himself, 'when merchants are using so much printers' ink'."

Can Be His Own Ancestors.

The first who was king was a fortunate soldier; who serves his country well has no need of ancestors.—Voltaire.

FOR THE CHILDREN

A Good Balancing Trick.

Everybody has seen the jugglers in a circus spinning plates and even dishes on a pointed stick. For the most part the plates they use are made of wood or metal, and their equilibrium is due to centrifugal force, which will fail just as soon as the rotation is too weak to overcome the force of gravity.

But here is a way to balance a china plate on the point of a needle and even to cause it steadily to spin upon this delicate support.

Cut a couple of corks down the middle, through the long axes, and in the extremity of the four halves thus obtained insert as many forks, inclined to the smooth sides of the corks you have just cut at a little less than a right angle. Place these four corks round the rim of the plate at equal distances from one another and see that the teeth of the forks are in contact with the rim to prevent their swaying like so many pendulums.

The little system we have now constructed is capable of being balanced, even firmly, so to speak, upon the point of a needle, whose eye end is buried in the cork of an upright bottle. With a little care to prevent the plate slipping, you may even cause it safely to rotate at a fair rate of speed, which, when once set in motion, will continue for a long while, because the friction at the point of contact is almost nothing.—"Magical Experiments."

Buff Says "Baff."

This is a game in which no one is allowed to smile and laugh. All the players except one sit in a row or half circle. One goes out of the room and returns with a stick or poker in his hand and a grave and solemn face. He is supposed to have just returned from a visit to Buff.

The first player asks him, "Where do you come from?"

"From Buff."

The next asks, "Did he say anything to you?"

To which the reply is:

Buff said "Baff"
And gave me this staff,
Telling me neither to smile nor to laugh.
Buff says "Baff" to you all, his men,
And I say "Baff" to you again.
And he neither laughs nor smiles
In spite of all your cunning wiles,
But carries his face with a very good grace
And passes his staff to the very next place.

If he can repeat all this without laughing he delivers his staff to some one else and takes his seat, but if he laughs or even smiles he pays a forfeit before giving it up.

Why the Squirrels Are Red.

Once, it is said, there was a squirrel that did not like its home, and he used to scold and find fault with everything. Its papa squirrel had long gray whiskers and was so wise, besides which he would shake his whiskers quickly. He said to the squirrel: "My dear, as you do not like your home there are three sensible things any one of which you could do—leave it or change it or suit yourself to it. Any one of these would help you in your troubles."

But the little squirrel said: "Oh, I do not want to do any of those. I would rather sit on the branch of a tree and scold."

"Well," said the papa squirrel, "if you must do that, whenever you want to scold just go out on a branch and scold away at some one you do not know."

The little squirrel blushed so much that he became a red squirrel, and you will notice that to this day red squirrels do just that thing.—Farm Press.

A Dancing Egg.

To execute this little experiment you need a hard boiled egg and a smooth china plate. To be sure that the experiment is going to be successful keep the egg in a perpendicular position while it is being boiled.

Place the plate upside down on the table to be able to catch it quickly with your hand. Place the egg in the center of the plate and, putting the thumb of the left hand and the index finger of the right hand on both ends of the egg, give it a sudden twirl, causing it to turn around in quick motion. The egg will gradually stand on one end. Then you pick up the plate, and all you have to do is to keep the egg in motion, which is not difficult.

A Riddle.

What is the color of the wind and the moon?

Answer.—The moon rose, and the wind blew (blue).

The Lion Tamer's Little Boy.

The lion tamer's little boy,
He knows no fear at all,
Chasing the king of beasts with joy
As kittens chase a ball.

He knows the tricks of daddy's trade.
He scares the tiger lean
Or makes the elephant afraid,
And that is rather mean.

And often when the show is done,
When animals should rest,
The lion tamer's little son
Will act as if possessed.

He tries them out with silly stunts
Until it seems a sin.
But while the timid beasts he hunts
His daddy happens in

And says: "Now, I'll give you a chance
To do the selfsame thing
That you have asked of them. Now dance
And leap and twist and swing!

"Five minutes, now, I'll cage you fast.
Your teasing tricks must cease.
These beasts of mine shall have at last
A little rest and peace."

And when he's locked in by papa
The animals grow gay
And could they speak would say: "Ha, ha.
It's now our turn to play."

—St. Nicholas.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

A MENTAL MISHAP.

A TRAIN of thought is not equipped
With whistle and with brakes,
Which may be why such violent
And sudden stops it makes.
With no attachment to the wheels
Its airy flight to check,
And that is why you often hear
About it in a wreck.

When the conductor of the train
Sits in his easy chair
It runs along without mishap
And takes him anywhere,
But if his wife should motion him
To go and fix the grate
The mishap to that train of thought
Is sad to contemplate.

When all conditions are in tune
And level is the track,
Oh, how that train securely glides
To Halifax and back!
But when a bill collector calls
And there is cash to pay
At once the engine sideways jumps
And spoils the right of way.

A pleasant line on which to ride—
The passengers are gay.
No ticket puncher comes along
And says, "Get off or pay."
But, oh, it is a risky trip,
Although the hurt is slight,
For there may be a dozen wrecks
In just a single night!

The Little Lady.

"Ethel wouldn't you like to have a little baby brother left at your house?"

"Baby brother?"

"Yes."

"Indeed, no."

"Why not?"

"Because babies are too common for anything. It's just like our washerwoman."

Making It Plain.

"You write to your girl friends on a typewriter?"

"I do."

"Isn't that bad form?"

"I don't know about that, but it is safest. I write such a miserable hand that when they can't make out a sentence they take it for a proposal."

Probably.

"You never can tell what a woman will say."

"That may be, but there is another kick."

"What is it?"

"You never can tell what she won't say."

Pure Contrariety.

"He has the blues."

"Blues?"

"Yes."

"Wonder why."

"The only girl told him he was green."

Longing.

I wouldn't hanker for a land
Where it was always spring.
But I could stand a country where
They had that sort of thing
Occasionally.

He Knew.

"You seem to be in a brown study, Miss Flora."

"Tain't Brown," cheeped her little brother. "It's Jones."

Hot Stuff.

"She gave me a piece of her mind."

"What did you do with it?"

"Put it out on the snow bank to cool off."

Bird, Sure Enough.

"I have been invited to take a ride in a flying machine."

"What a lark!"

Hard to Keep Up.

To claim that you have found the pole
May take but little wit.
But, oh, it calls for skillful lies
To get away with it!

Impossible.

"Don't make a fool of yourself."

"I won't."

"Don't be too certain."

"But I can't. I haven't the material."

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Of course we all know that some one else frequently gets our due, but that we ever get some one's else—never!

If you are bound to succeed it isn't at all because you failed yesterday, but in spite of it.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

THE TWO SALVATIONS

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii, 16).

"Christ also loved the Church and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it by the washing of water by the word; that he might present it to himself a glorious Church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish" (Ephesians v, 25-27).

Tampa, Fla., Feb. 20.—Pastor C. T Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle preached twice here today in our largest auditorium to the "Bible Students' Convention." The large audience seemed deeply interested. He said:—

Some apply the first text only and think of the Divine Program as being merely an endeavor to rescue mankind from sin and death to righteousness and eternal life in the present time. Such as hold this view are much confused, because it must be acknowledged that comparatively little has been done, or is now being done, for man's uplift. After six thousand years it is still true that "The whole world lieth in the Wicked One;" "Darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the heathen." In order to have any confidence at all in this theory those who hold it are obliged to greatly lower their standards. They are forced to hope that God will admit millions of unfit people, crude, rude, ignorant and wicked to eternal life and happiness, or perchance provide for them Purgatorial experiences, to make them fit, righteous and acceptable for life eternal. As a whole, Christian people are greatly bewildered. The tendency of their bewilderment is toward doubt, skepticism, atheism.

The other view briefly stated is that God never intended the salvation of the world, but merely the salvation of the Church, elect according to the foreknowledge of God through sanctification of the Spirit and belief in the Truth. Those who hold this theory have great confusion also, because it seems incomprehensible that God would make no provision for "thousands of millions" of Adam's race, but arrange for them to be born in sin, shapen in iniquity, and to go down to the tomb (or worse) without a clear knowledge of God and his purposes and will respecting them.

As we have already frequently set forth, both of the described theories are erroneous. The Scriptures set forth two salvations, entirely separate and distinct. They are different as respects time, in that the one "salvation began to be spoken by our Lord" at his First Advent, and began to be applicable to his Church at Pentecost, and will wholly cease at his Second Coming in the end of this Age. The other salvation neither applied before our Lord's First Advent nor during this Gospel Age, but will apply to all mankind, except the Church, during the Millennium—the thousand years of the reign of Christ and the Church, specially designed for the blessing of the world and its uplifting out of sin and death conditions.

These two salvations are distinctly different as to kind, as well as respects their plan of operation. The salvation of the Church during this Gospel Age—since Pentecost—means not only a deliverance from sin and death conditions to eternal life, but provides that the eternal life will be on the heavenly or spiritual plane and not on the earthly or human plane of existence. Thus the Apostle declares that our "inheritance is incorruptible and undefiled and fadeth not away and is reserved in heaven for us, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation" (I Peter i, 4, 5). Our Lord also told that in the resurrection we shall be like unto the angels. The Apostle also declares that ultimately we shall be partakers of the divine nature and like our Lord and Redeemer.

Hence, all who participate in this salvation of this Gospel Age are Scripturally spoken of as New Creatures in Christ Jesus, whose "citizenship is in heaven." These are assured that at the Lord's Second Coming they will constitute the First Resurrection class. They are guaranteed that only the blessed and holy will have part therein, and that all participating in that First Resurrection will be Royal Priests unto God and unto Christ, and reign with him a thousand years (Revelation xx, 6). They are assured that the transformation of mind which they now experience through the begetting of the holy Spirit will, in their resurrection, result in a complete transformation, providing them with spirit bodies. Thus it is written of their resurrection, "It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory; It is sown an animal body; it is raised a spiritual body" (I Corinthians xv, 42-44). Of these who will share in the Church's salvation the Apostle says, "We shall not all sleep, but must all be changed," because "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God" (I Corinthians xv, 50, 51).

The world's salvation which will follow will be wholly different from this. It will not include a change of nature from earthly to spirit nature. It will mean a rescue from sin and death to the earthly perfection of the original man, in the image and likeness of his Creator, and surrounded by every necessary blessing for his comfort. Human perfection and the Eden home were lost through disobedience to God. The Divine arrangement is that the merit of our Lord's obedience unto death, when ultimately applied for mankind, shall fully cancel the death sentence upon him. More and better than this, God has promised that the same Sin-Offering shall seal a New Covenant between himself and mankind. The blessings of that New Covenant arrangement will then immediately begin. The great Redeemer will thenceforth be the great Mediator of that New Covenant. The whole world of mankind will be fully under his supervision and government for their blessing, their correction in righteousness, their uplifting out of sin and death conditions—back, back, back, to all that was lost in Eden. All of this was the original design of the Great Creator. All of this will be outworked through the Great Redeemer. All of this was secured or sureticd by his death, finished at Calvary (Hebrews vii, 22).

St. Peter, pointing down to that glorious time of the world's blessing, calls it "times of refreshing and times of restitution." He tells us that all the holy prophets described the blessings of those restitution times—the thousand years, the Millennium (Acts iii, 19-21). When once we get the eyes of our understanding opened, we find the Apostle's words thoroughly corroborated by the Divine records, which describe the wonderful blessings that are to come when the earth shall yield her increase. Then Paradise Lost shall be Paradise Regained. Then God will make his earthly footstool glorious. Then the blessing of the Lord shall make rich and he will add no sorrow therewith. Then streams shall break forth in the desert and the wilderness and solitary places shall be glad. But most glorious will be the change in humanity. The Lord promises to turn to the people a "pure message"—instead of the contradiction of creeds of heathenism and Churchianity. He promises that Satan shall be bound for that thousand years, that he may deceive the nations no more. He promises that then all the "blinded eyes shall be opened and all the deaf ears shall be unstopped" (Isaiah xxxv, 5; II Corinthians iv, 4).

Two Salvations—One Savior.

Both of these salvations, according to the Bible, result from the death of Jesus our Redeemer, who died in obedience to the Divine will, "Died, the Just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God" (I Peter iii, 18). The Scriptures clearly show not only the two salvations, but also two parts of the Redeemer's work, distinctly separating his work for the Church from his work for the world. In his death there was a Divine general provision for the sins of the whole world and a special provision for the sins of the Church. The two thoughts are frequently brought out in the Scriptures. One text distinctly declares, "He is the propitiation [satisfaction] for our sins [the Church's sins], and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." His death constituted the satisfaction price. The Redeemer applied that merit for the Church's sins, "for us," long ago, eighteen centuries before we were born. Only when we became believers and entered into a Covenant of sacrifice did we obtain our share in the merit of that great sacrifice. The world has not yet received its share of that promised blessing, but the operation of the Divine Plan is sure and will bring it to them "in due time," as St. Paul declares (I Timothy ii, 6).

The drawing and calling of the Church has not been along the lines of human perfection, for all are sinners and none righteous or perfect. And many of those drawn of the Lord were by nature much more fallen and depraved than some who give no evidence of the work of grace in their hearts. The Lord's calling and drawing seem to be along the lines of justice, love of righteousness, faith, humility and obedience. These qualities will all belong to the perfect man. But all have lost them in varying degrees. Such as respond to the Lord's call now are accepted as being in the right heart attitude which, if they had perfect bodies, would constitute them perfect men. In other words, they have qualities of heart which, if brought to a knowledge of the Truth, would prove some of them to be pure in heart and such as the Lord would desire should have eternal life and all of his favors. But more are called and drawn by God's providences and the preaching of his message than he designs to save in the present salvation. He is choosing a very select class for a very special purpose and therefore makes the terms and conditions of their salvation extremely difficult. As a consequence we read, "Many are called, but few chosen"—under this "high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Terms of Salvation Differ.

Of course, these different salvations imply different terms or conditions. God's requirement of Adam, that he might continue to live forever and everlastingly enjoy Divine favor, his Eden Home, etc., was obedience to reasonable, just requirements. It was his violation of the Divine Law that brought upon him the sentence of death—"Dying thou shalt die"—with all that this has implied to him and his posterity of mental, moral and physical decline, weakness, death. The requirement of God for the world of mankind during the Millennial Age will similarly be—obedience to God's just, reasonable regulations, laws. Whoever then will render obedience may with proportionate rapidity go up on the highway of holiness toward perfection at its end. Whoever refuses obedience to the extent of his ability will fail to make progress and ultimately die the Second Death, from which there will be no redemption and no resurrection.

Such obedience as will be required of mankind in the great Mediator's Kingdom will include their co-operation in the resistance of their own fallen weaknesses. It will include the exercise of patience and kindness towards their fellow-creatures, fellow sufferers. The Divine Law of love to God with all the heart, mind, soul strength and for the neighbor as for one's self they must learn fully. As they will realize their own blemishes and strive to overcome them and ask not the Father, but the Mediator for forgiveness, they will be obliged to follow the Divine rule of exercising towards others similar mercy and forgiveness to that which they desire for themselves. But they will not be required to enter into the covenant of self-sacrifice, self-denial, etc. All the blessings of God on the earthly plane will be for them fully and freely to use and enjoy, in harmony with the Divine regulation.

The conditions governing the salvation of the Church are wholly different from those which will appertain to the world. The Church is called out of the world under a Divine invitation to suffer with Christ in the present life and during this Gospel Age and then to reign with Christ during the Millennial Age, participating in his Mediatorial Kingdom for the blessing, uplifting, salvation of the world. It is not in vain, therefore, that our Lord and the apostles, in setting forth the call of the Church during this Age, specified particularly and frequently the necessity for all who would share in this salvation to participate with the Redeemer in his sacrificing, in "his death," and consequently participate in "his resurrection" and in his reign of glory. Hark to the words, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life;" "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my Throne;" "And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple" (Luke xiv, 27). Let us remember our Lord's words to the disciples James and John, respecting a place in his Millennial Throne. He intimated that the getting to the Throne at all, in any place, would imply great humility and self-sacrifice. He asked the disciples, "Are ye able (willing) to drink of the cup that I shall drink of and to be baptized with the baptism (into death) that I am baptized with?" (Mark x, 38.) Hearken again: This cup of which he tells us we must drink, if we would sit in his Throne, is his communion cup. It is offered, not to the world, but to his consecrated followers. It is not another cup, but "My Cup." The invitation was, "This is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins. Drink ye all of it" (Matthew xxvi, 28, 27). It must all be drunk before the many, the world, can get their share of the intended blessing through the New Covenant, which this blood seals. And only the disciples of Christ, only those who desire to walk in his steps, are invited to drink of that cup. All of them are so invited and they will drink all of it. None of it will be left for the world during the Millennial Age to drink. It is a special privilege to drink of this cup. With the drinking of it goes the special blessing of the special salvation of this Gospel Age. Except we eat of his flesh (appropriate the merit of his sacrifice), and unless we drink his blood (join in sacrifice with him), we have no life in us—inherent life, immortality.

So far as our hearts and minds are concerned at the time of our consecration they must be fully given up to the Lord ere he will accept them. We could be no more fully consecrated if we had absolutely perfect bodies and were absolutely free from all the entailment of Adam's condemnation. But God's requirement is that no sacrifice may come upon his altar, except such as is without spot or blemish. Hence he could not accept our offering, our consecration, even though it were as completely and fully made as was our dear Redeemer's. Hence his first provision was that the righteousness of Christ should be imputed to us on account of our faith and obedience, in order to permit us to offer sacrifices holy and acceptable to God (Malachi iii, 3; Romans xii, 1).

This view of our participation in the Redeemer's merit separately and apart from the world's participation in it—by faith and imputation of merit and not actually—the Bible declares to be a "mystery," which not many are able to discern—only the spiritually-minded—only the spirit-begotten. Those who can see and hear and understand the terms and conditions of this great salvation of this Gospel Age are specially blessed—"Blessed are your eyes, for they see, and your ears, for they hear" (Matthew xiii, 16). To see, to hear, to understand, that glory, honor, immortality, eternal life on the spirit plane, are the rewards of a few years of self-denial and self-sacrifice, is to hear of a pearl of great price, of which few know. And to know of that pearl and not to be willing to sell all that we have to obtain it would demonstrate to the Father our unworthiness of life on this high plane. We exhort so many as see and hear and appreciate, in the words of the Apostle, "Let us make our calling and election sure" by a full and hearty compliance with the gracious high calling of which we have learned and which our hearts have accepted (II Peter i, 10).

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett ounty, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand peo-ple, where most crops of the temperate one are produced and where total fail-es are wholly unknown. In addition the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, e, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, y, etc., this section is a great apple untry, and many varieties of fruits, rries and vegetables grow with little tention.

Yet, these are by no means all the dvantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,-000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

BAD ROADS COSTLY.

Responsible For Hunger and Illiteracy In the United States.

GREAT HANDICAP TO FARMERS

They Suffer Heavy Losses Getting Their Products to Market Over Ill Kept Roads—Land Values Advance With Improved Roadways.

Two hundred and fifty million dollars a year are wasted on bad roads in the United States. Added to loss on haul, the storage and extra food rates make the total expense $1,000,000,000 a year. This means a tax of $12.50 on every man, woman and child in the country. Corners in the grain markets are frequently the direct result of bad roads. In four bad road states 375,000 people out of 7,000,000 cannot read or write. In four good road states out of 6,000,000 population there are 20,000 illiterates. Do good roads concern you? If you are one of the 30,000,000 people who live on farms in the United States it is a fairly safe guess that you know something about bad roads, even if you do not know and have never chanced to cross the 7 per cent of improved roads of the total 2,000,000 miles of highway in the United States.

America's country roads are so notoriously bad that it costs more to haul a ton of wheat from farm to market than to ship that ton from New York to Liverpool. America's country roads are so bad that it costs the American farmer 23 cents to haul a ton when it costs the English or the Belgian or the French or the German farmer only from 7 to 9 cents for the same haul. You, Mr. Town Man, and you, Mr. Farmer, pay for the unnecessary waste of those bad roads, the town man by extra cost of what he eats, the farmer by lessened profits on what he sells. The same reason explains why the town man pays $1.25 in spring for potatoes which cost from 50 to 75 cents in the autumn.

The interstate commerce report shows that the railroads yearly haul 265,000,000 tons of farm produce and that the average haul from farm to market for the whole country is nine and a fraction miles. Put the cost of hauling at a round $2 a ton for the nine miles and you have the cost of hauling farm produce at a round half billion dollars a year. Half that cost is waste, solely owing to bad roads.

The charge to haul wheat from New York to Liverpool, 3,100 miles, is 3.5 cents per bushel. The charge to haul a bushel of wheat from farm to market, 9.4 miles, is 5.11 cents. The storage on wheat at water fronts is 9 cents a bushel a year.

The results of bad roads are yearly tolls of $12.50 against every person who eats farm produce. That yearly waste could build 200,000 miles of A1 macadam roads every year, basing the cost at the very highest average of $5,000 a mile.

The beauty of the relentless scheme of things is that when we mend our ways—in this case mend our roads—nature not only loses, but the deficit, but she puts a plus to the account where there used to be a minus. Supposing of the 2,000,000 miles of roads in the United States all were improved instead of only 7 per cent, what would be the result to farmer and consumer? First of all, the big deficit of waste on haul, on storage, on cornered prices, wiped out! The minus goes off the national slate and the plus comes on.

The good road moves the remotest farm right next to the market. A farm twenty miles from the market on an all the year round good road is nearer market than a farm seven miles away on a bad road. Truck farmers in New Jersey and Long Island can haul their produce to market, thirty miles, cheaper than they can ship by railroad, and that produce nets, according to well known averages, as follows:

Fruit, $80 per acre; flowers, $2,000 per acre; corn, $8 per acre; wheat, $7 per acre; oats, $7 per acre; vegetables, $42 per acre.

Out in the Dakotas and Minnesota and Manitoba farmers haul their product thirty and forty miles, but they can haul it only when the roads are dry in the early fall, and at that season the price is lowest. The farmer along the good road can command the best price by hauling only when the price is best, and he can also raise the produce that gives biggest net returns. If you would learn why a whole family can live, and live well, off an acre in Holland and Belgium and France when a family fails to live well off 160 acres in often in America.

With good roads Dakota farmers who under present conditions drive gumbo mud during spring could market their crops when prices ruled the highest. Instead of selling their wheat at 70 and 80 cents in the fall they could sell it at $1 during the winter and in the spring. An additional price of even 25 cents a bushel would mean $15,000,000 more in the pockets of the Minnesota farmers, a similar amount to the farmers of the Dakotas and to the wheat farmers of the Pacific coast.

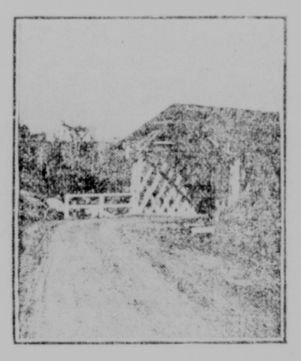
New York farmers do not raise vegetables in quantities because until recently roads did not permit them to market such a perishable product in quantities. This holds good in New England. The same condition exists in the cow country and the grain country. Potatoes and onions your Dakota farmer can market in quantities. Therefore he raises them, but because bad roads cut him off from the market half the year he does not raise the more perishable vegetables. Vegetables he buys from California at fancy prices, another tax for bad roads. In fact, owing to bad roads, there have been seasons when New Yorkers were paying $1 a bushel for their potatoes and western farmers were glad to sell them at 15 cents for pig feed and starch.

With access to market and best ruling prices, net returns increase and farm lands jump in value. It is an actual fact wherever good roads have gone land has increased in value from $2 to $9 an acre. In Jackson county, Ala., a bond issue of $250,000 built 125 miles of macadam road. The selling price of land was from $6 to $15 before the road was built. On the completion land values went up from $15 to $25.

The effect of good roads on school attendance needs no proof. In the five states having the best roads the average attendance is 77 per cent of enrollment. In the five states having the fewest good roads the attendance averages only 59 per cent.

With these figures on schools it is not surprising to find that ignorance and bad roads go together. In the four bad roads states, with a total population of 7,000,000, are 375,000 men and women, white and native born, who can neither read nor write. In four good roads states, with a population of 6,000,000, are only 20,000 illiterates.

The movement for good roads is so recent that it need not be retailed here. When colonists first came to America the roads followed buffalo trails and Indian wilderness paths. As farms became fenced roads ran along between boundaries without regard to the shortest distance or grade, and these were kept in order (or disorder) by statute labor—farmers turning out for a day once a year for a road picnic, filling in holes that ought to have been filled in months previously, tinkering and trifling away time with no special director. The results were what might have been expected. Men do not employ blacksmiths as doctors, and why should farmers be supposed to possess the technical knowledge of an engineer? During various wars two or three good roads were hacked through the wilderness across country, from New York up to Boston along the old post road, from the



THE SAME ROAD IMPROVED.

Cumberland mountains west to St. Louis, from Virginia up through Pennsylvania to Pittsburg and when emigration began to roll westward from St. Louis to Oregon. With these exceptions the highways of the United States were a system of pig track trails.

Then came the great railroad building era down to 1880, when public roads were forgotten in the expectation that railroads would supplant them, but as population grew the necessity for roads to link farm with market became daily more insistent.—Agnes C. Laut in Collier's.

Good Substitute For Macadam.

One example of the road bureau's work will show its usefulness. Roads for the state of sticky gumbo soil have been almost a hopeless problem. There is a whole belt of such states along the south, and there is another belt along the Missouri where wheels sink hub deep and horses flounder to death in a mire more treacherous than quicksand. The road bureau discovered from many practical tests that by burning gumbo soil a roadbed compact as macadam could be obtained at half the cost of macadam or at practically only the cost of labor and of fuel to do the burning. There is no longer any excuse for lethargy in road building through the gumbo states.

South to Build Highways.

Eight hundred miles of improved roads are to be undertaken by the Southern Appalachian Good Roads association. Of these 300 miles are to be in North Carolina. Poor roads are said to cost that state $10,000,000 a year. An enormous number of tourists go to the southern Appalachian region, but because of the poorness of the highways in general they see but a small portion of it. The great system of roadways now proposed is planned to make that wonderful region one of the most attractive in all the world.

TO FIX MARYLAND-WEST VIRGINIA BOUNDARY LINE

continued possession of the people claiming rights up to the boundary line. When the proceedings were taken to run the line of 1859 the legislative acts passed by the two states showed the purpose to recognize and distinctly mark and locate the old line, not make a new one.

"The effect to be given to such facts as long-continued possession, 'gradually ripening into that condition which is in conformity with international order depends upon the merit of the individual cases as they arise. In this case we think a right in its nature prescriptive has arisen practically undisturbed for many years, not to be overthrown without doing violence to principles of established right and justice equally binding upon states and individuals.

"It may be true that an attempt to relocate the Deakins line will show that its a somewhat irregular and not a uniform astronomical north and south line; but surveyors appointed by the states represented in this controversy were able to locate a number of points along the line and the northern limit thereof is fixed by a mound, and was located by the Commissioners who fixed the boundary between West Virginia and Pennsylvania by a monument which was erected at that point, and we think from the evidence in this record that it can be located with little difficulty by competent commissioners.

"We think, for the reasons, which we have undertaken to state, that the decree in this case should provide for the appointment of commissioners whose duty it shall be to run and permanently mark the old line, beginning at a point north of the river where the north line from the Fairfax stone crosses the same.

"As to the contention made by West Virginia in her cross bill that she is entitled to the Potomac River to the north bank thereof, the court dismisses that claim with a reference to the opinion delivered by Justice Shiras in the case of Morris vs the United States. In this case, among other the things, there was a controversy between the heirs of James H. Marshall and the heirs of John Marshall as to the ownership of the bed of the Potomac River from shore to shore, including therein certain reclaimed lands. Justice Shiras pointed out in his opinion that "the charter granted to Lord Baltimore by Charles I, of the territory known as the Province of Marvland embraced the Potomac River and the soil under it and the islands therein to high-water mark on the southern or Virginia shore."

"This decision," the court holds, "fully disposes of and denies this claim of the State of West Virginia in her cross-bill.

"Upon the whole case, the conclusions at which we have arrived, we believe, meet the facts disclosed in this record, are warranted by the applicable principles of law and equity, and will least disturb rights and titles long regarded as settled and fixed by the people most to be affected. If this decision can possibly have a tendency to disturb titles derived from one state or the other by grants long acquiesced in, giving the force and right of prescription to the ownership in which they are held, it will no doubt be the pleasure as it will be the manifest duty of the law-making bodies of the two states to confirm such private rights upon principles of justice and right applicable to the situation.

"A decree should be entered settling the right of the states to the western boundary and fixing the same as we have hereinbefore indicated to be run and established along the old state line as known and recognized after the Deakins survey; and commissioners should be appointed to locate said line as near as may be.

"The cross-bill of the State of West Virginia should be dismissed insofar as it asks for a degree fixing the north bank of the Potmac River as her boundary.

"Counsel for the respective states are given 40 days from the entry hereof to agree upon three commissioners and to present to the court for its approval a decree drawn according to the directions herein given. In default of such agreement and decree this court will appoint commissioners, and itself draw the decree in conformity herewith, costs to be equally divided between the states."

AN ANCIENT CONTROVERSY.

Maryland-Virginia Boundary Dispute Dates From Colonial Days.

The question at issue was the settlement of the boundary line between Garrett county, in Maryland, and Preston county in West Virginia. The disputed territory lies wholly in Preston county. Had Maryland won her case the decision would have restored her a portion of the eastern side of Preston county, a strip of territory about one and one-quarter miles in width and about 36 miles long.

The controversy dates from colonial days, but the present suit was brought by the State of Maryland under an act of the Maryland legislature of 1890, in which the Attorney General was directed to take steps "as speedily as possible" to settle the controversy. During the long lapse of years since the action was ordered an endless array of testimony has been taken and more than 10 years ago the western boundary line of the state was surveyed. H. M. Clabaugh, at that time Attorney General of Maryland, now a justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, requested that Maryland Geological Survey to take charge of the work of surveying the western boundary line.

The purpose of the survey was the verification of the Michler meridian line, which started at the Fairfax Stone and which was run in 1859 and 1860 in accordance with a joint resolution passed by the legislatures of Maryland and of Virginia and the determination and tracing of a new meridian line, starting at the Potomac Stone, according to Mr. Brown, marked the westerly course of the North Branch of the Potomac River which in the last analysis was the point at issue, according to the Maryland contention, while the Fairfax Stone was the foundation of West Virginia's clrim. The historic Fairfax Stone was the result of a long dispute between the colony of Virginia and Thomas Lord Fairfax, Baron of Cameron. In 1733 commissioners were appointed to make a survey of both the Potomac and Rappahannock, between which rivers lay the disputed territory.

In 1746 the line from the head of the Rappahannock to the head of the North branch of the Potomac, as fixed by these commissioners, was located and the Fairfax Stone was set up at the point determined upon by them, as the head of the North branch of the Potomac. All this was done, however, without the knowledge of Lord Baltimore. Indeed, Lord Baltimore was dead before the news of the erection of the Fairfax Stone reached England. His successor in 1753 immediately protested against the fixing by the Fairfax Stone of the boundary lines in Virginia, because he, himself, claimed, under the charter from Charles I., jurisdiction to the head of the South branch of the Potomac River, which extends much farther to the west than the North branch. Subsequently the governor of Maryland appointed commissioners, whose report proved that the first fountain of the South branch of the Potomac River was the farthest to the west, and that a meridian drawn north from that source would be many miles west of a meridian drawn from the head of the North branch.

Rev. J. Ed. Kildow, [Superin]tendent of the West Virginia E[piscopal] Orphan Children, was in Loch [Lynn] last Friday and left a six year old girl at the home of Mrs. Emma Lish to be raised as her own. The child has got a good home and will be well trained.

Business has been dull here for some days on account of the snow drifts which the farmers had been driving over for weeks becoming so soft as to allow horses to break through, making it very dangerous to pass over them. Some of the drifts are six feet deep.

We have been impressed with the improvement in horses in this neighborhood within the last few years. Many very fine draught horses are to be seen on our streets daily. Probably the best span in the neighborhood is owned by Mr. Richard Ream, who has refused five hundred dollars for them.

Mr. Fred. Gortner, who one year ago purchased the Meese farm and now resides there with his family, has made many valuable improvements and in a few years will have one of the most valuable farms in the county.

Messrs. G. B. M. and Willey Friend, who own adjoining farms near here, have taken advantage of the fine sledding this winter and hauled to their farms three thousand bushels of lime stone which they will burn and apply on their farms.

Mr. Simon Baker, who owns a large and very valuable farm near [Here], has fattened a number of beef [cattle] for local butchers this winter.

The eleven-month old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Echard has been quite ill for the past two weeks, but is thought to be improving now.

MERRILL.

Monday morning about ten o'clock considerable excitement was caused by fire in the Red Hill school near Merrill. The teacher, Miss Opal, and scholars had just started the day's studies when the fire broke out. Mr. Clarence Stephen, one of our young men, who happened to be passing the school, noticed the fire and with great presence of mind succeeded in extinguishing the blaze before much damage was done. Miss Opal and pupils were very much frightened and they together with the residents whose children attend the school feel very thankful to Mr. Stephens for his timely assistance. For had he not arrived at an opportune moment the school would in all likelihood have been destroyed.

Mr. John Warnick, who was thrown from a horse some time ago and severely injured about the face, has so far improved as to have the stitches taken out.

Maryland's Fast Disappearing Timber Supply.

There are 2,000,000 acres of woodland in the State from which was cut in 1908 nearly $5,000,000 worth of material. The principal cut was lumber amounting to 225,000,000 board feet, but included also immense quantities of piling, mine props, cordwood, poles, railroad ties, pulpwood, lath and shingles. This took more than three times the growth of the forests for that year and points to but one thing, that we are using our forests much faster than they are growing—a condition that cannot long continue for we will soon use up all our capital. We use six times as much wood per capita as Germany, nine times as much as France, and sixteen times as much as Great Britain. The same follies that these countries practiced toward their forests before forest preservation became a public necessity we are practicing now and like them we are destined to suffer similar calamities, unless we can be taught to profit by their experiences. One thing is certain, that when our own supplies are exhausted we cannot depend upon other countries to come to our rescue for none of them have timber to spare. We face the problem of a serious shortage in the near future. Its intensity and duration will depend upon the attitude we now take in regard to this forest question.

continued possession of the people claiming rights up to the boundary line. When the proceedings were taken to run the line of 1859 the legislative acts passed by the two states showed the purpose to recognize and distinctly mark and locate the old line, not make a new one.

"The effect to be given to such facts as long-continued possession, 'gradually ripening into that condition which is in conformity with international order depends upon the merit of the individual cases as they arise. In this case we think a right in its nature prescriptive has arisen practically undisturbed for many years, not to be overthrown without doing violence to principles of established right and justice equally binding upon states and individuals.

"It may be true that an attempt to relocate the Deakins line will show that its a somewhat irregular and not a uniform astronomical north and south line; but surveyors appointed by the states represented in this controversy were able to locate a number of points along the line and the northern limit thereof is fixed by a mound, and was located by the Commissioners who fixed the boundary between West Virginia and Pennsylvania by a monument which was erected at that point, and we think from the evidence in this record that it can be located with little difficulty by competent commissioners.

"We think, for the reasons, which we have undertaken to state, that the decree in this case should provide for the appointment of commissioners whose duty it shall be to run and permanently mark the old line, beginning at a point north of the river where the north line from the Fairfax stone crosses the same.

"As to the contention made by West Virginia in her cross bill that she is entitled to the Potomac River to the north bank thereof, the court dismisses that claim with a reference to the opinion delivered by Justice Shiras in the case of Morris vs the United States. In this case, among other the things, there was a controversy between the heirs of James H. Marshall and the heirs of John Marshall as to the ownership of the bed of the Potomac River from shore to shore, including therein certain reclaimed lands. Justice Shiras pointed out in his opinion that "the charter granted to Lord Baltimore by Charles I, of the territory known as the Province of Maryland embraced the Potomac River and the soil under it and the islands therein to high-water mark on the southern or Virginia shore."

"This decision," the court holds, "fully disposes of and denies this claim of the State of West Virginia in her cross-bill.

"Upon the whole case, the conclusions at which we have arrived, we believe, meet the facts disclosed in this record, are warranted by the applicable principles of law and equity, and will least disturb rights and titles long regarded as settled and fixed by the people most to be affected. If this decision can possibly have a tendency to disturb titles derived from one state or the other by grants long acquiesced in, giving the force and right of prescription to the ownership in which they are held, it will no doubt be the pleasure as it will be the manifest duty of the law-making bodies of the two states to confirm such private rights upon principles of justice and right applicable to the situation.

"A decree should be entered settling the right of the states to the western boundary and fixing the same as we have hereinbefore indicated to be run and established along the old state line as known and recognized after the Deakins survey; and commissioners should be appointed to locate said line as near as may be.

"The cross-bill of the State of West Virginia should be dismissed insofar as it asks for a degree fixing the north bank of the Potmac River as her boundary.

"Counsel for the respective states are given 40 days from the entry hereof to agree upon three commissioners and to present to the court for its approval a decree drawn according to the directions herein given. In default of such agreement and decree this court will appoint commissioners, and itself draw the decree in conformity herewith, costs to be equally divided between the states."

AN ANCIENT CONTROVERSY.

Maryland-Virginia Boundary Dispute Dates From Colonial Days.

The question at issue was the settlement of the boundary line between Garrett county, in Maryland, and Preston county in West Virginia. The disputed territory lies wholly in Preston county. Had Maryland won her case the decision would have restored her a portion of the eastern side of Preston county, a strip of territory about one and one-quarter miles in width and about 36 miles long.

The controversy dates from colonial days, but the present suit was brought by the State of Maryland under an act of the Maryland legislature of 1890, in which the Attorney General was directed to take steps "as speedily as possible" to settle the controversy. During the long lapse of years since the action was ordered an endless array of testimony has been taken and more than 10 years ago the western boundary line of the state was surveyed. H. M. Clabaugh, at that time Attorney General of Maryland, now a justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, requested that Maryland Geological Survey to take charge of the work of surveying the western boundary line.

The purpose of the survey was the verification of the Michler meridian line, which started at the Fairfax Stone and which was run in 1859 and 1860 in accordance with a joint resolution passed by the legislatures of Maryland and of Virginia and the determination and tracing of a new meridian line, starting at the Potomac Stone, according to Mr. Brown, marked the westerly course of the North Branch of the Potomac River which in the last analysis was the point at issue, according to the Maryland contention, while the Fairfax Stone was the foundation of West Virginia's clrim. The historic Fairfax Stone was the result of a long dispute between the colony of Virginia and Thomas Lord Fairfax, Baron of Cameron. In 1733 commissioners were appointed to make a survey of both the Potomac and Rappahannock, between which rivers lay the disputed territory.

In 1746 the line from the head of the Rappahannock to the head of the North branch of the Potomac, as fixed by these commissioners, was located and the Fairfax Stone was set up at the point determined upon by them, as the head of the North branch of the Potomac. All this was done, however, without the knowledge of Lord Baltimore. Indeed, Lord Baltimore was dead before the news of the erection of the Fairfax Stone reached England. His successor in 1753 immediately protested against the fixing by the Fairfax Stone of the boundary lines in Virginia, because he, himself, claimed, under the charter from Charles I., jurisdiction to the head of the South branch of the Potomac River, which extends much farther to the west than the North branch. Subsequently the governor of Maryland appointed commissioners, whose report proved that the first fountain of the South branch of the Potomac River was the farthest to the west, and that a meridian drawn north from that source would be many miles west of a meridian drawn from the head of the North branch.

Timothy & Clover.

We are now taking orders for timothy and clover seed. See samples and prices.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. Harrison Arnold has sold his stock of merchandise to Messrs. Samuel Welch and Joseph Callis who will continue the business at the old stand.

Mr. Upton Cuppett is again in the field taking orders for fertilizers. Mr. Cuppett is a practical farmer, knows what the soil in this section needs and is a safe man to deal with.

This is becoming quite a shipping point on the B. and O. R. R. Messrs. Cuppett, Leighton & Co. will have shipped during this month by the end of this week over twenty cars of lumber, ties and props. There are also other large shippers from this station.

The oyster supper for the bene[fit] of the Ladies' Aid of the M. E. [Church] Tuesday evening netted the so[ciety] over ten dollars and the near fo[rty] participants spent a pleasant ev[ening]. Mr. A. T. White says he alway[s has] a good time where there are plen[ty of] eatins."

Rev. J. Ed. Kildow, [Superi]ntendent of the West Virginia [Home] for Orphan Children, was in Loch [Lynn] last Friday and left a six year old girl at the home of Mrs. Emma Lish to be raised as her own. The child has got a good home and will be well trained.

Business has been dull here for some days on account of the snow drifts which the farmers had been driving over for weeks becoming so soft as to allow horses to break through, making it very dangerous to pass over them. Some of the drifts are six feet deep.

We have been impressed with the improvement in horses in this neighborhood within the last few years. Many very fine draught horses are to be seen on our streets daily. Probably the best span in the neighborhood is owned by Mr. Richard Ream, who has refused five hundred dollars for them.

Mr. Fred. Gortner, who one year ago purchased the Meese farm and now resides there with his family, has made many valuable improvements and in a few years will have one of the most valuable farms in the county.

Messrs. G. B. M. and Willey Friend, who own adjoining farms near here, have taken advantage of the fine sledding this winter and hauled to their farms three thousand bushels of lime stone which they will burn and apply on their farms.

Mr. Simon Baker, who owns a large and very valuable farm near here, has fattened a number of beef cattle for local butchers this winter.

The eleven-month old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Echard has been quite ill for the past two weeks, but is thought to be improving now.

Mrs. Long, who has been ill so long, is not improving.

Mr. Winchell has been on the sick list for some days.

Inquiries for cottages for the summer are beginging to come in.

Orders are coming to the planing mill and the outlook for spring and summer work is encouraging.

FLATWOODS.

Mr. Francis McGettigan was a guest at John Holtschneider's Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. Luther Keller is suffering from a severe attack of the grip.

An engine belonging to M. J. Miller Sons, which was used to operate a chop mill, went wild and did about two hundred dollars damage to the plant.

Among the guests at Ben Keller's Sunday were John H. Fresh and family, J. Mahlon Speicher and family, Philip Bowman and wife, John Bowman, and Nellie and Wm. Fox.

Mr. Urias Hook, of Meyersdale, Pa., is visiting Mr. Fred Bowser.

Mr. Frank Callis, agent for Hooker Wyman Co., is in the vicinity of Friendsville this week selling nursery stock.

Mr. Wesley Callis was calling on Miss Beeghly last Sunday evening.

A very pleasant surprise party was given at the home of Conrad Fraty on last Sunday evening.

M. L. Fresh made a business trip to Eglon, W. Va., one day last week.

MERRILL.

Monday morning about ten o'clock considerable excitement was caused by fire in the Red Hill school near Merrill. The teacher, Miss Opal, and scholars had just started the day's studies when the fire broke out. Mr. Clarence Stephen, one of our young men, who happened to be passing the school, noticed the fire and with great presence of mind succeeded in extinguishing the blaze before much damage was done. Miss Opal and pupils were very much frightened and they together with the residents whose children attend the school feel very thankful to Mr. Stephens for his timely assistance. For had he not arrived at an opportune moment the school would in all likelihood have been destroyed.

Mr. John Warnick, who was thrown from a horse some time ago and severely injured about the face, has so far improved as to have the stitches taken out.

Mr. Alex Broadwater visited friends in Salisbury Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. L. G. Porter, of Dallas, Texas, left for home Tuesday after visiting relatives here. Miss Bertha Broadwater accompanied him.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McIntyre, of Stoyer, Md., are visiting Mr. McIntyre's parents at this place.

Mr. Lewis Broadwater and Miss Katie Mowbray visited at New Germany last Sunday.

Columbus, Victor and Everett Broadwater jointly celebrated their birthdays on Monday evening at the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Broadwater. A pleasant evening was spent by those present.

STOYER.

Rev. E. P. Idleman preached a very interesting sermon here at the home of Mr. John T. Steyer Friday evening last.

Mr. Frank Vansickle, of Bayard, was calling on relatives here last week.

Miss Emma Steyer is very ill at this writing.

Col. Thomas, of Pittsburg, Pa., and son, Mr. J. Thomas, of New York were here on business last week.

Miss Mabel Neville was visiting at the home of J. T. Steyer last week.

Messrs. Ernest Hillea[r] and James Wilson, of near Gorma[n] were calling on their best girls [on] W. T. Steyer's Sunday evening.

Mrs. Clifton W[ilson] was in town one day last week.

Mr. and Mrs. [John] Kirby and Mr. and Mrs. Oscar [Wo]lf, of Kitzmiller were calling on friends here the first of the week.

Mr. [and] Mrs. W. G. Riley were in town [call]ing on friends Monday.

Mr. [Tho]mas Melvin and little son John has returned home after spending a few days with his mother at Piedmont, W. Va.

Mrs. James W. White was in town last week.

Mr. Daniel Wilson, of near Kitzmiller, was in town last week.

Mr. Albert Steyer was visiting relatives here Sunday.

Mr. J. Riley, of Elkins, W. Va., was a business caller in town.

Mr. M. B. McHenry, of Piedmont, W. Va., was in town the first of the week on business. He still has quite a lot of lumber to be shipped from this place.

Mr. George Harvey, of Kirtz Chapel, was visiting friends here last week.

Mrs. Layman DeBerry, of Wildell, W. Va., is visiting friends here.

Mr. Chas. Kidd was seen on our streets Tuesday last with two of our charming young ladies.

LAKE FORD.

The young people of this section have been making good use of the fine sleighing snow. The farmers have been doing a large amount of hauling also.

A number of young people were pleasant visitors at the home of Mr. M. H. Frankhouser Sunday. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Artie Wolfe, Miss Bertha Teets, Messrs. Laurence Collins, Ray Ringer and Jesse H. Wolfe.

Mr. E. H. Wolfe is slowly recovering from a very severe attack of typhoic fever. He is under the care of Dr. A. B. Rinehart, of Terra Alta, and Miss Blanch Durbin, of Cameron, W. Va.

We are glad to learn that Miss Blanch Chance has recovered sufficiently to return to her school at this place.

A number of our young people were pleasant callers at the home of Mr. W. S. Collins last Sundav.

Mr. Ora Teets returned home last Saturday evening.

The stork has paid a visit to Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Collins and left them a little daughter.

Some of our people attended church at Cranesville last Sunday morning and listened to a very interesting sermon delivered by Rev. Albert Engle.

Mr. Clayton Wolfe was home over Sunday. He has been doing carpenter work near Confluence, Pa., for the B. & O. R. R. Co.

BITTINGER.

Mrs. Perry H. Broadwater is seriously ill at her home.

Henry Platter, of Jennings, passed through here last Monday.

Charles Stark, of Chaffee, W. Va., spent last Saturday and Sunday with his parents at this place.

Jacob Brenneman made a business trip to Salisbury, Pa., on Monday of this week.

The Elias Lohr family moved from their old home near here to Springs, Pa., this week.

Robert Reckner and sister, Miss Estella, of North Glade, spent the first days of this week with friends in this neighborhood.

The Board of Council for the various Lutheran congregations in this charge, held a joint council meeting here on last Sunday afternoon.

John Shartzer, of Oakland, came here last week with the intention of conducting an aution, but on account of the inclemenc of the weather he could hold no action.

Mrs. Funk Mellinger, of Beckman, spent a few hours in this place last week.

If the weather continues open sugar making ill soon be in progress and the air about Bittinger will smell sweet again.

FRO ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

Mr. Silas C. Beachy has started up his sawmill with Mr. O. S. Lewis as sawyer. Mr. Lewis is a very competent man and quite a hustler.

C. C. Beachy is gathering up staves barrels preparatory to making sugar.

John W. Mason and brother, of Oakland, were over at Beulah, W. Va., on a timber proposition last week.

Mr. Bittinger has been doing quite a good business this winter with his coal mine and chopper.

Mr. A. B. Mason passed through this village last Tuesday enroute to Mr. Daniel Baker's and had great difficulty returning home Wednesday accompanied by Mrs. Mason, as the roads were almost impassable.

Mr. Henry Bender, of Cherry Tree Meadows, has procured employment with Mr. Silas C. Beachy.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Baker, of Accident, are visiting Mrs. Baker's parents.

Jennings Bros. badly wrecked their snow plow last Thursday in a snow drift near Mr. C. C. Beachy's.

Mr. A. R. Bernard, of Swanton, has recently purchased the sawmill from Mason Bros. which has been for sale for some time.

Mason Bros. contemplate starting up their sawmill as soon as the rough winter weather is over. With the equipment they now have installed it will not take very long to complete their sawing.

The Rotoscilo is revolutionizing the world. Ask J. M. Davis & Sons all about it.

Maryland's Fast Disappearing Timber Supply.

There are 2,000,000 acres of woodland in the State from which was cut in 1908 nearly $5,000,000 worth of material. The principal cut was lumber amounting to 225,000,000 board feet, but included also immense quantities of piling, mine props, cordwood, poles, railroad ties, pulpwood, lath and shingles. This took more than three times the growth of the forests for that year and points to but one thing, that we are using our forests much faster than they are growing—a condition that cannot long continue for we will soon use up all our capital. We use six times as much wood per capita as Germany, nine times as much as France, and sixteen times as much as Great Britain. The same follies that these countries practiced toward their forests before forest preservation became a public necessity we are practicing now and like them we are destined to suffer similar calamities, unless we can be taught to profit by their experiences. One thing is certain, that when our own supplies are exhausted we cannot depend upon other countries to come to our rescue for none of them have timber to spare. We face the problem of a serious shortage in the near future. Its intensity and duration will depend upon the attitude we now take in regard to this forest question.

MANY FARMS HAVE BEEN ABANDONED

Vast Areas Deserted for New Field of Activity.

The idea prevails in some quarters that, with the approaching end of free land in the West, the era of abandoned farms will be forever past in the United States. Nothing could be more erroneous. There never were more abandoned farms in the history of the United States than there are today.

There never was a period in the history of the world—not excepting times of war and famine—when such uniformly high prices ruled for farm products, when the world demand was so uniformly greater than the world supply; and there never has been a period—as far as the United States is concerned—when there were so many abandoned farms, when there existed such a uniform deterioration in farm values, such a uniform and persistent movement away from the land to the town in the sections of the country known as the abandoned farm areas.

Take the United States as a whole—on the first of January, 1910, according special returns gathered by the Conservation Commission, there 16,000 square miles of abandoned farms, chiefly in New England, New York, the Southeast and the Middle Central States, at present 10,000,000 acres of abandoned farms—an area the same as all that part of the Canadian Northwest that is cultivated, 15 times the size of Rhode Island, four times the size of Connecticut, twice the size of Massachusetts, twice the size of New Jersey. Averaging up all the farms of the United States, the size per farm is 146 acres; so that there are enough abandoned farms to set up 70,000 farmers. Doesn't look very much as if the abandoned farms were decreasing, does it, though one hears general rumors to that effect constantly?

Take the abandoned farm areas by sections—in New York State between 1880 and 1900 more than 14,000 farms were abandoned; more than 400,000 people left the country for the city; 20 agricultural districts showed a decrease in the population. If New York land were worked to its full capacity it would support a population equal to France, between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000 people. As matters stand, the population is over 7,000,000; but 5,000,000 of these are city people, who draw their sustance from other States. Practically, only a little over 2,000,000 are drawing their support directly from the soil.

The same story could be told of all New England with the exception of parts of Maine and Massachusetts. The funny man's description of "crops of moss from New York, summer boarders for New Hampshire, summer swell for Massachusetts and commuters from New Jersey," is, of course, an exaggeration; but it is an exaggeration that has a lot of truth in it.

COL. THEO. ROOSEVELT'S AFRICAN BIG HUNT OVER

Expedition Has Now Sailed for Khartoum—500 Specimens Secured.

From Gondokoro, Soudan, on the Upper Nile, Colonel Roosevelt and others of his immediate party sailed Monday on the steamer Dal for Khartoum, where they expect to arrive on March 15. With their departure the African scientific expedition under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institute of Washington and led by the former president of the United States was, for all practical purposes, brought to a close. Colonel Roosevelt considers that the killing of the giant elands in his recent excursion along the upper reaches of the Nile was a fitting end of a marvelously successful trip. The results generally from the standpoint of the hunter and the scientist have exceeded all expectations.

Colonel Roosevelt and his son Kermit have killed some 500 specimens of large mammals. The bag includes the following:

Seventeen lions, 11 elephants, 10 buffaloes, 10 black rhinoceroses, 9 white rhinoceroses, 9 hippopottami, 9 giraffes, 3 leopards, 7 chetahs, 3 giant elands, 3 sables, 1 sitatunga and 2 bongos.

All these were killed in the interest of science and the specimens will be disposed of accordingly, the greater number going to the Smithsomian Institute. Mr. Roosevelt will retain not more than six trophies for himself.

From the point of importance the most highly prized game may be rated as follows:

First, the giant elands, the first complete speciman of which family are now being taken from the country; second, the white rhinoceroses; third, the bongos, the first to be stalked and killed by a white man, fourth, the sitatunga, a specie of antelope.

The naturalists secured a remarkable collection, comprising many thousands of birds and other mammals. The results in this line have been most gratifying, and science will be enriched by several new and smaller mammals of Africa. The game taken and the collections made constitute a world's record for a similar period of hunting and scientific research in Africa, and the American museums will receive the greatest collections of African fauna in existence. All agree that too much praise cannot be accorded R. J. Cuninghame, the Englishman whose management of the expedition was as nearly perfect as could be conceived.

Colonel Roosevelt will now devote his time to writing, including the preparation of the addresses which he is to deliver in Europe. He will do no more hunting unless during the trip down the Nile chance throws in his way an opportunity to secure some rare specimens.

Life Is a Funny Proposition.

Man comes into this world without his consent and leaves it against his will. During his stay on earth his time is spent in one continuous round of contraries and misunderstandings by the balance of his species. In his infancy he is an angel; in his boyhood he is a devil; in his manhood he is everything from a 'izard up; in his duties he is a fool; if he raises a family he is a chump; if he raises a small check he is a thief, and then the law raises the devil with him; if he is a poor man he is a poor manager and has no sense; if he rich he i dishonest, but considered smart; if he is in politics he is a grafter and a crook; if he is out of politics you can't please him, as he is an undesirable citizen; if he goes to church he is a hypocrite; if he stays away from church he is a sinner and is damned; if he donates to foreign missions he does it for show; if he doesn't he is stingy. When he first comes into the world everybody wants to kiss him; before he goes out they all want to kick him. If he dies young there was a great future before him; if he lives to a ripe old age he is simply in the way and living to save funeral expenses. Life is a funny road, but we all like to travel it just the same.

Lost in the Rockies.

Through a letter to her father, T. E. Shillingburg, superintendent of Jno. G. Hoffman & Sons Co., tannery at Gormania, it was learned that his daughter, Miss Inez, who is spending a season in the Rockies, while hunting got lost and in wandering about in the mountain fastnesses had some thrilling experiences. Finally she came to an Indian hut and by signs made known her sad plight and a friendly squaw guided her to Red Rock.

MORE LEGISLATIVE BILLS THAN CAN BE PASSED

Many Important Measures Awaiting Consideration.

In commenting upon the multiplicity of bills now awaiting action, an Eastern Shore senator who is one of the most conservative legislators in the General Assembly remarked that if all were to be disposed of an extra session would be unavoidable.

"We have five weeks of the session remaining," said he, "and allowing only one day for each of those regarded as important—and at least two, if not three, will require more deliberate consideration—we won't be able to get through with one-half. The rules of the Senate permit unlimited debate when the discussion is not continued for purposes of delay, and as many of the bills are of vital importance—and I refer to those of a nonpolitical character—I assume that there will be no desire to curtail the talk by attributing such a motive to any senator. It might therefore be wise to give the right of way to measures in which the public is primarily interested, like the pure food, the oyster, the reassessment, the banking, the appropriation and other such bills, and to sidetrack the stock jobbing and political jobs, which will only consume time and mean nothing in the end. The legislation of a local nature which requires only the approval of the representatives of the constituencies affected will, in my judgment, not suffer, as these will be threshed out in committee and meet with no opposition when taken up.

"There is no crying demand for a large number of the general bills, a majority of which might be characterized as hobbies of individuals or schemes of opposing corporations who are trying to get the better of their opponents, and no tears would be shed over their failure; but these serve to block needed legislation and must therefore be taken into consideration. The great danger lies in the haste that usually characterizes the work during the closing days and which results in the enactment of laws that have not received the necessary consideration."

This statement summarizes the situation at Annapolis. It is based on experience and conditions as they actually exist. Nor has the flood of bills ceased to pour in. They will continue to come until the time limit for their introduction has expired, and as the committees will be unable to deal with all of them as they should, it is apprehended that some fearful and wonderful laws will appear on the statutes if the Governor permits them to pass.

In a degree the Governor himself is responsible for the chaotic condition in the House which is reflected to a lesser extent in the Senate. The assignments to important committees were not carefully considered, the same men being placed on too many of them. Take as example the House Committees on Judiciary and Corporations, who have referred to them more important bills than go to all others with the possible exception of the Ways and Means. Five of the eleven members on either committee serve on both and as the time for meetings is usually fixed at the same hour, it is impossible to secure a full attendance. Indeed it is difficult for either to secure a quorum and almost impossible to get as many together as are needed after the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Girdwood, chairman of the House Committee on Judiciary, publicly acknowledged during the past week that he is unable to collect a quorum in the afternoon. If there have been any committee meetings at night the announcement will cause some surprise, for, as a rule, the legislative halls and rooms are deserted after dark by all save a few chairmen who are trying to go it alone and belated members and employes who collect in groups and tell funny stories. No session of the Senate has lasted two hours and only once did a House session consume three hours. Just two bills of importance have come from committee. The White Slave Bill passed the House and is now in the Senate Judiciary. The pure food measure escaped into the House and is now on the files. This week the State-Wide Local Option Bill will come out of the House Committee on Temperance with two reports—majority and minority.

If in this mass of stuff the numerous political bills, most of which are designed to give the machine a stronger grip on the state, should be lost the failure of the others would occasion less regret. Unfortunately, it is just this class of legislation the Democratic machine always gives the right of way to and gains through.

A sample measure of the many now awaiting consideration was introduced last week by Senator Gorman. The purpose is apparent enough. It removes the only bipartisan feature in the duties assigned to the supervisors of elections Under the existing law the Republican member has the right to veto an objectionable selection for judge or clerk. If the man is a crook or otherwise unfit to serve he may be asked that some other be named. The Democratic supervisors have the same right when the Republican names an undesirable person

It is now proposed to vest in the majority of the board the right to name arbitrarily any Democratic judge and clerk regardless of Republican protest, while the minority member is obliged to submit three names from which list the majority must name one. This would enable the Democrats to place in the window men who would obey the orders of the local boss and promote trickery and fraud.

Just what will be done with the proposed disfranchising amendment is problematical. If the leaders were sure of their ground they would not hesitate to put through another, but they fear the effect on the ticket at the next general election. The crushing defeat sustained last fall indicates to them the temper of the people, and they will move slow before courting another disaster.

The Republicans are keeping a close watch on every move of their opponents, while they are in a hopeless minority they do not propose to submit without protest to the imposition of unfair and unjust legislation. What they intend to do is to adhere to their platform pledges. They will vote for such measures as are in line with the promises if given an opportunity. They favor a public utilities commission provided the bill is operative and nonpartisan, but they will never support the monstrosity that has been presented to the legislature. This is not only regarded as unconstitutional, but it would give the Governor the power to establish a political machine. What the Republicans wants and advocate is a commission that can be depended upon to treat every corporation alike and a law that will not permit a discrimination.

Many of the Democrats say they favor the same kind of a bill. That under consideration is so defective in all of its material provisions that if it ever comes before the General Assembly it will be perforated with amendments, and if it should ever pass the author will not recognize in the act evidence of his own handiwork.

So far as the so-called state primary bill is concerned, it hasn't the ghost of a chance of passing. It is regarded by leading Democrats and Republicons as the work of a theorist and, therefore, wholly impractical. The crudeness of the measure was demonstrated when it was pointed out that it repealed the Wilson Law and the Primary Election Law of Baltimore City. No one takes the thing seriously. Senator Lee, who is one of the strongest advocates of direct voting, has taken the trouble to prepare a measure which he believes to be practical, but while this is an improvement on that in committee, it does not meet the approval of the leaders.

If the Governor's health permits—and he is slowly recovering from the severe strain of the past two weeks—he will begin signing bills this week. A number of local and other measures, none of any importance, are awaiting his approval. Like all executives who preceded him, and who entered upon the second half of their terms after the appointments had been made, he no longer wields the same influence exercised before the plums were distributed. He still has warm friends in both branches, but is not in position to enforce his demands.

The legislature will now proceed to do as it pleases with the Governor's recommendations.

In today's issue of THE REPUBLICAN we begin the publication of George Barr McCutcheon's serial story, "Truxton King." This story was first published in book form and had a tremendous sale a year or two ago, more than half a million copies of the work having been printed and sold. The story is one that appeals to all classes and all ages. In it the reader meets with the young, the middle aged and those more advanced in life. Every line is entertaining and our readers will miss a great treat unless they read the opening chapters and continue reading the story as it will appear in these columns from week to week until completed.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. REBECCA L. WARNICK.

Mrs. Rebecca L. Warnick of Kitzmiller, Md., died February 16, 1910, aged 49 years, 11 months and 26 days. The body was interred in the Nethken Hill cemetery and the funeral sermon was preached at Nethken Hill church by Rev. Sutton, of Kitzmiller, assisted by Rev. J. F. F. Gray. Her husband, Columbus Warnick, was killed in No. 6 mine about fourteen years ago. She leaves four children, one married. They are Mrs. Stella Hamilton of Wheeling, Clarence, Lervellen and Viva Warnick. She lived at Elk Garden a number of years and the community sympathizes with the family in the loss of their mother.

JACOB GNAGEY.

Jacob Gnagey, a prominent and most excellent citizen, died at his home, four miles south of Grantsville, February 22, 1910. He had just passed his eighty-fifth year. He came from Somerset county, Pennsylvania, and settled in old Allegany in his early life. He was a carpenter by trade, but in later years he added farming to his trade, which he made his chief occupation for the rest of his long and useful life. He owned a beautiful farm as his home, where he died in peace and honor. At a suitable period of his life he married Sarah Beachy, a daughter of John Beachy, in his life time a prominent man in the county. She survives and is a lovable woman in every way. She and her deceased husband were the parents of five living children: Rebecca Miller, Annie Warnick, Minerva Warnick, G. J. and C. J. Gnagey. She is a woman in the best meaning of the term, devoted to her spouse for more than fifty years, motherly, wifely, kindly and neighborly, with kind words and acts for all—enmity and ill will for none. Jacob Gnagey was an excellent citizen in every way. He was honest, reliable and obedient to the law, never violating it; friendly and kind-hearted by nature, of pleasant manners and ever ready to do friendly and neighborly acts for the worthy; always amiable and pleasant, never contentious. He was a worshipper in the Amish church. He will be greatly missed in his community but not forgotten.

At the closing of this poor tribute the sad news came that the worthy wife had followed, on February 24th, in a death no doubt hastened by grief. She was aged seventy-five years. So let this be a tribute to the lamented pair. The sorrow will be doubled, and even more. An old friend,

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Last Wednesday evening the service in the M. E. church was in charge of Miss Annie DeBerry, president of the Junior Epworth League. The children read in concert the 23rd Psalm, the Beatitudes, the Lord's Prayer and gave recitations declamations and songs, filling the full hour to the edification and delight of a large audience. After the exercises lemonade and cake were served to the entire audience. The proficiency of the children in the knowledge of the Bible was a surprise to all.

The regular monthly business meeting and social, of the Epworth League was held Tuesday evening at the residence of Mr. Edward Chance. Over twenty members were present besides a number of Juniors. After the business meeting a "needle threading social" was participated in by all present and a jolly good time was had, after which light refreshments were served under the direction of Miss Abbie Chance.

Mr. Willis Echard, of Buckhannon, W. Va., is in the Park visiting relatives and friends.

Mr. Gay W. Heyden, of the Hotel Creedmore, Grafton, W. Va., was with his parents here Sunday.

Preaching in the M. E. Church Sunday at 11.00 a. m. and 7.30 p. m.

An interesting bible study is being held in Loch Lynn every Monday evening. The class will meet at the home of Mr. C. J. Rathbun next Monday evening.

Ex-Judge T. H. Cuppett spent a few days last week at his old home near Friendsville.

Mrs. Daniel Sweitzer contemplates buying a home here or in Loch Lynn.

A Story of Graustark

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Truxton King, a millionaire's son, sets out in search of adventure. Where better could he look for stirring events than in faroff Graustark, where the age of chivalry yet survives in all its romantic opportunity; where rules Prince Robin, the most precocious boy monarch in the realm of fiction; where the reds of Europe plot his murder in mysterious underground retreats; where gallant Truxton King and brave "Uncle Jack" fight valiantly for the preservation of the prince and the love of beautiful princesses; where American pluck and manhood are pitted against foreign intriguers, and where honesty and courage are mightier than the sword? Read of Prince Robin, son of an American princess; of Olga Platanova, the girl with the dread mission; of Marlanx, the Iron Count; of John Tullis, the American bulwark of a foreign throne; of lovely Lorraine and of daredevil Truxton King, and then you will understand why an American lad is Prince of Graustark and an American author prince of story tellers.

CHAPTER I.

TRUXTON KING.

HE was a tall, rawboned, rangy young fellow with a face so tanned by wind and sun you had the impression that his skin would feel like leather if you could affect the impertinence to test it by the sense of touch. His clothes fitted him loosely and yet were graciously devoid of the bagginess which characterizes the appearance of extremely young men whose frames are not fully set and whose joints are still parading through the last stages of college development.

This tall young man in the panama hat and gray flannels was Truxton King, embryo globe trotter and searcher after the treasures of romance. Somewhere up near Central park, in one of the fashionable cross streets, was the home of his father and his father's father before him—a home which Truxton had not seen in two years or more. It is worthy of passing notice, and that is all, that his father was a manufacturer; more than that, he was something of a power in the financial world. His mother was not strictly a social queen in the great metropolis, but she was what we might safely call one of the first "ladies in waiting," which is quite good enough for the wife of a manufacturer, especially when one records that her husband was a manufacturer of steel. It is also a matter of no little consequence that Truxton's mother was more or less averse to the steel business as a heritage for her son. Be it understood here and now that she intended Truxton for the diplomatic service.

But neither Truxton's father, who wanted him to be a manufacturing Croesus, nor Truxton's mother, who expected him to become a social Solomon, appears to have taken the young man's private inclinations into consideration.

Young Mr. King believed in romance. He grew up with an ever increasing bump of imagination, contiguous to which, strange to relate, there was a properly developed bump of industry and application; hence it is not surprising that he was willing to go far afield in search of the things that seemed more or less worth while to a young gentleman who had suffered the ill fortune to be born in the nineteenth century instead of the seventeenth.

We come upon him at last—luckily for us we were not actually following him—after two years of wonderful but rather disillusioning adventure in mid Asia and all Africa. He had seen the ...ongo and the Euphrates, the Ganges ...nd the Nile, the Yangtsekiang and ...he Yenisei; he had climbed mountains in Abyssinia, in Siam, in Tibet and Afghanistan; he had shot big game in more than one jungle and had been shot at by small brown men in more than one forest, to say nothing of the little encounters he had had in most unoccidental towns and cities.

For twenty days he had traveled by caravan across the Persian uplands, through Herat and Meshhed and Bokhara, striking off with his guide alone toward the sea of Aral and the eastern shores of the Caspian, thence through the Ural foothills to the old Roman highway that led down into the sweet green valleys of a land he had thought of as nothing more than the creation of a harebrained fictionist.

Somewhere out in the shimmering east he had learned, to his honest amazement, that there was such a land as Graustark. At first he would not believe, but the English bank in Meshhed assured him that he would come to it if he traveled long enough and far enough into the north and west and if he were not afraid of the hardships that most men abhor. The dying spirit of romance flamed up in his heart. His blood grew quick again and eager. He would not go home until he had sought out this land of fair women and sweet tradition. And so he traversed the wild and dangerous Tartar roads for days and days, like the knights of Scheherazade in the times of old, and came at last to the gates of Edelweiss.

Not until he sat down to a rare dinner in the historic Hotel Regengetz was he able to realize that he was truly in that fabled, mythical land of Graustark, a quaint, grim little principality in the most secret pocket of the earth's great mantle. This was the land of his dreams, the land of his fancy. He had not even dared to hope that it actually existed.

And now it becomes my deplorable duty to divulge the fact that Truxton King, after two full days and nights in the city of Edelweiss, was quite ready to pass on to other fields, completely disillusioned in his own mind and not a little disgusted with himself for having gone to the trouble to visit the place.

Where were the beautiful women he had read about and dreamed of ever since he left Teheran? On his soul, he had not seen half a dozen women in Edelweiss who were more than passably fair to look upon. True, he had to admit, the people he had seen were of the lower and middle classes—the shopkeepers and the shopgirls, the hucksters and the fruit venders. What he wanted to know was this: What had become of the royalty and the nobility of Graustark? Where were the princes, the dukes and the barons, to say nothing of the feminine concomitants to these excellent gentlemen?

One dingy little shop in the square interested him. It was directly opposite the Royal cafe, with American bar attached, and the contents of its grimy little windows presented a peculiarly fascinating interest to him. They were packed with weapons and firearms of ancient design. Once he ventured inside the little shop. Finding no attendant, he put aside his suddenly formed impulse to purchase a mighty broadsword.

On several occasions he had seen a grim, sharp featured old man in the doorway of the shop, but it was not until after he had missed the Thursday train that he made up his mind to accost him and to have the broadsword at any price. With this object in view, he inserted his tall frame into the narrow doorway, calling out lustily for attention.

"What is it?" demanded a sharp, angry voice at his elbow. He found himself looking into the wizened, parchment-like face of the little old man.

"That bread— Say, you speak English, don't you?"

"Certainly," snapped the old man. "Why shouldn't I? I can't afford an interpreter. You'll find plenty of English used here in Edelweiss since the Americans and British came. They won't learn our language, so we must learn theirs."

"What's the price of that old sword you have in the window?"

"Three hundred gavvos."

"What's that in dollars?"

"Four hundred and twenty. It is genuine, sir, and 300 years old. Old Prince Boris carried it. It's most rare."

"I'll give you a hundred dollars for it, Mr.—er"—he looked at the sign on the open door—"Mr. Spantz."

"I don't want your money. Good day."

Truxton King felt his chin in perplexity. "It's too much. I can't afford it," he said, disappointment in his eyes.

"I have modern blades of my own make, sir, much cheaper and quite as good," ventured the excellent Mr. Spantz.

"You make 'em?" in surprise.

The old man straightened his bent figure with sudden pride. "I am armorer to the crown, sir. My blades are used by the nobility—not by the army, I am happy to say."

"I say, Herr Spantz, or monsieur, I'd like to have a good long chat with you. What do you say to a mug of that excellent beer over in the cafe garden? Business seems to be a little dull. Can't you—er—lock up?"

Spantz looked at him keenly.

"May I ask what brings you to Edelweiss?" he asked abruptly.

"I don't mind telling you, Mr. Spantz, that I'm here because I'm somewhat of a fool. False hopes led me astray. I came here looking for romance—for adventure."

"I see," cackled Spantz, his eyes twinkling with mirth. "You thought you could capture wild and beautiful princesses here just as you pleased, eh? Let me tell you, young man, only one American—only one foreigner, in fact—has accomplished that miracle. Mr. Lorry came here ten years ago and won the fairest flower Graustark ever produced—the beautiful Yetive—but he was the only one."

"No. I'm not looking ... princesses. I've seen hundreds of 'em in all parts of the world."

"You should see Prince Robin," went on the armorer.

"I've heard of nothing but him, my good Mr. Spantz. He's seven years old, and he looks like his mother, and he's got a jeweled sword and all that sort of thing. I daresay he's a nice little chap. Got American blood in him, you see."

The old man retired to the rear of the shop and called out to some one upstairs. A woman's voice answered.

"My niece will keep shop, sir, while I am out," Spantz explained.

They paused near the door until the old man's niece appeared at the back of the shop. King's glance became more or less in the nature of a stare of amazement.

A young woman of the most astounding beauty, attired in the black and red of the Graustark middle classes, was slowly approaching from the shadowy recesses at the end of the shop. His heart enjoyed a lively thump. Truxton King, you may be sure, did not precede the old man into the street. He deliberately removed his hat and waited most politely for age to go before youth, in the meantime blandly gazing upon the face of this amazing niece.

Across the square, at one of the tables, the old man, over his huge mug of beer, became properly grateful. He was willing to repay King for his little attention by giving him a careful history of Graustark, past, present and future.

The old man was rambling on. "The young prince has lived most of his life in Washington and London and Paris, sir. He's only seven, sir. Of course you remember the dreadful accident that made him an orphan and put him on the throne with the three 'wise men of the east' as regents or governors—the train wreck near Brussels, sir. His mother, the glorious Princess Yetive, was killed and his father, Mr. Lorry, died the next day from his injuries. That, sir, was a most appalling blow to the people of Graustark. There never will be another pair like them, sir. God alone preserved the little prince. The collision was from the rear, a broken rail throwing a locomotive into the princess' coach. This providential escape of the young prince preserved the unbroken line of the present royal family."

"I say, Mr. Spantz, I don't believe I've told you that your niece is a most remarkably beau"—

"As I was saying, sir," interrupted Spantz so pointedly that Truxton flushed, "the little prince is the idol of all the people. Under the present regency he is obliged to reside in the principality until his fifteenth year, after which he may be permitted to travel abroad."

Spantz was eying him narrowly. "You do not appear interested in our royal family," he ventured coldly.

Truxton hastened to assure him that he was keenly interested. "Especially so now that I appreciate that the little prince is the last of his race."

"There are three regents, sir, in charge of the affairs of state—Count Halfont, the Duke of Perse and Baron Jasto Dangloss, who is minister of police. Count Halfont is a granduncle of the prince by marriage. The Duke of Perse is the father of the unhappy Countess Ingomede, the young and beautiful wife of the exiled Iron Count Marlanx. No doubt you've heard of him."

"I remember that he was banished from the principality."

"Quite true, sir. He was banished in 1901 and now resides on his estates in Austria. Three years ago in Budapest he was married to Ingomede, the daughter of the duke. Count Marlanx has great influence at the Austrian court. The Duke of Perse realized this when he compelled his daughter to accept him as her husband. The fair Ingomede is less than twenty-five years of age. The Iron Count is fully sixty-five."

"HE WAS BANISHED IN 1901."

"I'd like to see if she's really beautiful. I've seen but one pretty woman in this whole blamed town, your niece, Herr Spantz. I've looked 'em over pretty carefully too. She is exceedingly attract—"

"You will not find the beautiful women of Edelweiss in the streets, sir," snapped Spantz.

"Don't they ever go out shopping?"

"Hardly. The merchants, if you will but notice, carry their wares to the houses of the noble and the rich. But tomorrow the garrison at the fortress marches in review before the prince. If you should happen to be on the avenue near the castle gate at 12 o'clock you will see the beauty and chivalry of Graustark. The soldiers are not the only ones who are on parade." There was an unmistakable sneer in his tone.

"You don't care much for society, I'd say," observed Truxton, with a smile.

Spantz's eyes flamed for an instant and then subtly resumed their most ingratiating twinkle. "We cannot all be peacocks," he said quietly. "You will also see that the man who rides beside the prince's carriage wheel is an American, while Graustark nobles take less exalted places."

"An American, eh?"

"Yes. Have you not heard of John Tullis, the prince's friend? He, your countryman, is the real power behind our throne. On his deathbed the prince's father placed his son in this

A SLY, IMPULSIVE SMILE PLAYED ABOUT HER RED LIPS.

American's charge and begged him to stand by him through thick and thin until the lad is able to take care of himself. As if there were not loyal men in Graustark who might have done as much for their prince!"

King looked interested. "I see. The people, no doubt, resent this espionage. Is that it?"

Spantz gave him a withering look, as much as to say that he was a fool to ask such a question in a place so public. Without replying, he got to his feet.

"I must return. I have been away too long."

The American sank back in his chair. Suddenly he became conscious of a disquieting feeling that some one was looking at him intently from behind. He turned in his chair and found himself meeting the gaze of a ferocious looking, military appearing little man at a table near by. His waiter appeared at his elbow with the change.

"Who the devil is that old man at the table there?" demanded young Mr. King loudly.

The waiter assumed a look of extreme insolence. "That is Baron Dangloss, minister of police. Anything more, sir?"

"Yes. What's he looking so hard at me for? Does he think I'm a pickpocket?"

"You know as much as I, sir," was all that the waiter said in reply. King pocketed the coin he had intended for the fellow and deliberately left the place. As he sauntered across the little square his gaze suddenly shifted to a second story window above the gunshop.

The interesting young woman had cautiously pushed open one of the shutters and was peering down upon a trio of red coated guardsmen. Almost at the same instant her quick, eager gaze fell upon the tall American, now quite close to the horsemen. He saw her dark eyes expand as if with surprise. The next instant he caught his breath and almost stopped in his tracks.

A shy, impulsive smile played about her red lips for a second, lighting up the delicate face with a radiance that amazed him. Then the shutter was closed gently, quickly. He felt his ears burn as he abruptly turned away.

In the meantime Baron Dangloss was watching him covertly from the edge of the cafe garden across the square.

CHAPTER II.

A MEETING OF THE CABINET.

AT this time the principality of Graustark was in a most prosperous condition. Its affairs were under the control of an able ministry, headed by the venerable Count Halfont. The Duke of Perse, for years a resident of St. Petersburg and a financier of high standing, had returned to Edelweiss soon after the distressing death of the late Princess Yetive and her American husband, and to him was intrusted the treasury portfolio.

The financing of the great railroad project by which Edelweiss was to be connected with the Siberian line in the north fell to his lot at a time when no one else could have saved the little government from heavy losses or even bankruptcy.

The opening of this narrative finds the ministry preparing to float a new 5,000,000 gavvo issue of bonds for construction and equipment purposes. Agents of the government were ready to depart for London and Paris to take up the matter with the great banking houses. St. Petersburg and Berlin were not to be given the opportunity to gobble up these extremely fine securities. This seemingly extraordinary exclusion of Russian and German bidders was the result of vigorous objections raised by an utter outsider, the American, John Tullis, long time friend and companion of Grenfall Lorry, consort to the late princess.

Tullis was a strange man in many particulars. He was under forty years of age, but even at that rather immature time of life he had come to be recognized as a shrewd, successful financial power in his home city, New York. At the very zenith of his power he suddenly and with quixotic disregard for consequences gave up his own business and came to Graustark for residence, following a promise made to Grenfall Lorry when the latter lay dying in a little inn near Brussels.

They had been lifelong friends. Tullis jestingly called himself the little prince's "morganatic godfather." For two years he had been a constant resident of Graustark.

His wide awake, resourceful brain, attuned by nature to the difficulties of administration, lent itself capably to the solving of many knotty financial puzzles; the ministry was never loath to call on him for advice and seldom disposed to disregard it. An outsider, he never offered a suggestion or plan unasked. To this single qualification he owed much of the popularity and esteem in which he was held by the classes and the masses. Socially he was a great favorite. He enjoyed the freedom of the most exclusive homes in Edelweiss.

There was but one man connected with the government to whom the popularity and influence of John Tullis proved distasteful. That man was the Duke of Perse. On more than one occasion the cabinet had chosen to be guided by the sagacity of John Tullis in preference to following the lines laid down by the astute minister of finance. The decision to offer the new bond issue in London and Paris was due to the earnest, forceful argument of John Tullis—outside the cabinet chamber, to be sure. This was but one instance in which the plan of the treasurer was overridden. He resented the plain though delicate influence of the former Wall street man. Tullis had made it plain to the ministry that Graustark could not afford to place itself in debt to the Russians, into whose hands sooner or later the destinies of the railroad might be expected to fall. The wise men of Graustark saw his point without force of argument and voted down in the parliament the duke's proposition to place the loan in St. Petersburg and Berlin. For this particular act of trespass upon the duke's official preserves he won the hatred of the worthy treasurer and his no inconsiderable following among the deputies.

But John Tullis was not in Edelweiss for the purpose of meddling with state affairs. He was there because he elected to stand mentor to the son of his lifelong friend, even though that son was a prince of the blood and controlled by the will of three regents chosen by his own subjects.

To say that the tiny prince loved his big, broad shouldered, ruddy cheeked, adoring mentor would be putting it too gently; he idolized him. Tullis was father, mother and big brother to the little fellow in knickers.

One woman in Graustark was the source of never ending and constantly increasing interest to this stalwart companion to the prince. That woman was, alas, the wife of another man. Moreover, she was the daughter of the Duke of Perse.

The young and witty Countess of Marlanx came often to Edelweiss. She was a favorite at the castle, notwithstanding the unhealthy record of her ancient and discredited husband, the Iron Count. Tullis had not seen the count, but he had heard such tales of him that he could not but pity this glorious young creature who called him husband.

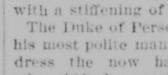
At present we are permitted to attend a meeting of the cabinet, which sits occasionally in solemn collectiveness just off the throne room within the tapestried walls of a dark little antechamber known to the outside world as the "room of wrangles." The question under discussion relates to the loan of 5,000,000 gavvos, before mentioned. At the head of the long table, perched upon an augmentary pile of lawbooks, surmounted by a little red cushion, sits the prince, almost lost in the huge old walnut chair of his forefathers.

The prince was a sturdy, curly haired lad, with big brown eyes and a lamentably noticeable scratch on his nose, acquired in less stately but more profitable pursuits. (It seems that he had peeled his nose while sliding to second base in a certain American game that he was teaching the juvenile aristocracy how to play.)

About the table sat the three regents and the other men high in the administration of affairs, among them General Braze of the army, Baron Pultz of the mines, Rosion of agriculture. The Duke of Perse was discussing the great loan question. The prince was watching his gaunt, saturnine face with more than usual interest.

"Of course it is not too late to rescind the order promulgated at our last sitting. There are five bankers in St. Petersburg who will finance the loan without delay. We need not delay the interminable length of time necessary to secure the attention and co-operation of bankers in France and England. It is all nonsense to say that Russia has sinister motives in the matter. We need the money before the winter opens. Why should ... England? Why France?"

For some unaccountable ... struck the table violently ... and directed his glare upon ... lished ... explosiv... caught ... by surp... gasped ... lips fell ... Then it m... occurred ... that the ... could be a... by no on... the pers... whom it w... plainly addr... He lifted his ... and piped ... shrilly and ... a fervor ... startled even ... intense Perse...



"BECAUSE UNCLE JACK SAID WE SHOULD."

"Because U... Jack said ... should, tha... why."

It goes without saying that the innocent rejoinder opened the way to acrid discussion of John Tullis, that gentleman's ears burned in response to the sarcastic comments of the Duke of Perse and Baron Pultz they probably tingled pleasantly as the result of the stout defense put up by Halfont, Dangloss and others.

The duke's impassioned plea was of no avail. His confreres saw the wisdom of keeping Russia's greedy hand out of the country's affairs—at least for the present—and reiterated their decision to seek the loans in England and France. The question, therefore, would not be taken to parliament for reconsideration. The duke sat down, pale in defeat; his heart was more bitter than ever against the shrewd American who had induced all these men to see through his eyes.

At this juncture the prince, gathering from the manner of his ministers that the question was settled to his liking, leaned forward and announced to his uncle, the premier:

"I'm tired, Uncle Caspar. How much longer is it?"

Count Halfont coughed. "Ahem! Just a few minutes, your highness. Pray be patient—er—my little man."

Prince Bobby flushed. He always knew that he was being patronized when any one addressed him as "my little man."

"I have an engagement," he said, with a stiffening of his back.

The Duke of Perse smiled grimly. In his most polite manner he arose to address the now harassed princeling, who shifted uneasily on the pile of lawbooks.

"May your most humble subject presume to inquire into the nature of your highness' engagement?"

"You may, your grace," said the prince.

The duke waited. A smile crept into the eyes of the others. "Well, what is the engagement?"

"I had a date to ride with Uncle Jack at 11 and to review the troops."

Count Halfont interposed good humoredly: "There is nothing more to come before us today, your grace, so I fancy we may as well close the meeting. To my mind it is rather a silly custom which compels us to keep the prince with us—er—after the opening of the session. Of course, your highness, we don't mean to say that you are not interested in our grave deliberations."

THE GRANGE IN NEW YORK.

Over Ninety Thousand Members Enrolled—Influential in Legislation.

The influence of the grange in New York state was never greater. Ten new halls have been dedicated this year, one costing over $15,000. The grange is demanding cleaner fairs, and the fair associations are recognizing the influence of the grange. A grange hall has been erected as part of one of the new buildings at the state fair grounds. Addresses are given here on one day of the fair.

As to co-operation, there is no state organization for that purpose, but fully half a million dollars is reported in co-operative trade for the past year. Patrons' fire relief associations carry $100,000,000 insurance at a saving of two-thirds the cost of the old line companies. The grange is recognized as an important factor in legislation, particularly in road legislation. The grange has been influential in securing the passage of laws dividing the burden of construction of highways so that the poorer inland towns are relieved largely of the cost of the same. The low assessed value towns receive more aid from the state than towns of a higher assessed value. About 2,000 miles of macadam highways have been constructed, and the state is to construct about 3,500 miles of state roads. There are altogether about 16,500 miles of improved roads in the state. It costs about $7,000,000 a year to maintain the roads. An amendment to the state oleo law was enacted at the last session of the legislature whereby oleo must be sold in unbroken packages of not to exceed five pounds, properly marked, wrapped and sealed. Before this law was passed fully 90 per cent of oleo sold was sold as butter.

The grange has created a new interest in agricultural education, and the college of agriculture at Cornell is crowded to its fullest capacity. The agricultural college, experiment station and the department of agriculture are all working harmoniously together with the grange as the four great factors in building up the agriculture of the state.

There are now over 90,000 members in the grange of the Empire State.

...CE FOR THE SOUTH POLE

...etween England and Amer-...at Is Expected to Arouse the ...ting Blood of the world.

...y James A. Edgerton.

...south pole may as well ...n and be discovered. The ...cans and English are after ...l when both branches of the ...o-Saxon race start out to do ...ng there is nothing more to ... As Captain Robert F. Scott, ...eader of the prospective Brit... expedition, expressed it, he ... stay two years if he does not ...cover the Pole in one, will stay ...ee years if he does not discover ... in two, and added, "In fact, ... shall jolly well stop there till ...e thing is done."

As for the American expedition ...s commanding spirit will be Robert E. Peary, even thought he is not to accompany it in person. It is Peary who plans it, Peary who turned over to it the $10,000 given him in New York, Peary who donates to it the use of the Roosevelt and Peary's companions in the discovery of the north pole who will man the expedition. Since Peary tried for the other end of the world for twenty-three years, it is unnecessary to say that the exploring party organized by him and animated by his spirit will also "jolly well stop there till the thing is done."

There have been few finer examples than that furnished by Commander Peary in this entire affair. His correspondence with Captain Scott to determine if an American expedition would be acceptable to the British, who through the Shackleton and other explorations had established a prior claim in the antarctic field, revealed the instincts of the sportsman and an honorable regard for the feelings of others. Peary's donation of his $10,000 gift and of the Roosevelt had a dramatic touch and exhibited unselfishness. This same unselfishness was displayed by his voluntary relinquishment of the honor of leading the expedition.

Those of us who criticised Mr. Peary for his attacks on Dr. Cook should now be the more ready to render tribute to the true discoverer of the north pole. While personally not for long deceived by the Cook claims, I, like the majority of other newspaper men who wrote on the subject, regarded Peary's strictures on his rival as ungenerous and in bad taste. Subsequent events have to some extent justified him, or at least have shown his provocation. When one has worked twenty-three years for a certain thing and at last has attained it only to have some purveyor of fiction beat him to the cable office and claim the laurels—well, who wouldn't yell "stop thief?"

The last heard of Dr. Cook he was in South America, but he was not looking for the south pole. He has doubtless had enough of the polar proposition to last him the rest of his natural life. The doctor seems to be yearning for obscurity. Why not let him have it?

It is now Peary's turn. The House of Representatives may not be willing to make him a rear admiral, but why should that disturb him? There are platoons of rear admirals, but only one pole discoverer. Who knows the names of six of our estimable rear admirals? Yet who in the circle of the nations has not heard of Peary? Some of these holders of toy titles and gilt shoulder straps get an inflated notion of such things. In the big world of real men and women what do they count for? What have they to do with the ages? So long as history lasts Peary's fame will last. What could a rear admiral's title add to him?

Captain Robert A. Bartlett, who commanded the Roosevelt on its trip to the arctic and went nearer the north pole than any white man except Peary, has already resigned a good job to take his old station in his trip to the other end of the world. Before he had sent in his resignation his possible connection with the antarctic expedition was discussed with Commander Peary.

"Will Bartlett go?" somebody asked.

Peary paused in open mouthed astonishment. "Will Bartlett go?" he repeated musingly, as if to make sure that he had heard aright. "Bartlett will go. Nothing but a ball and chain and the bars of a state or federal prison could possibly keep Bartlett from going."

Some of the pictures of Captain Bartlett look almost human, but there are others that have a positively terrifying aspect. I recall one in particular in which he has a pipe in his mouth that would cause a stampede of polar bears. If he looked like that at his Eskimo dog team it is no wonder that the Peary party made quick time to the pole. The dogs would cover thirty or forty miles a day merely to get away.

The English-American race to the south pole will be a sporting event that will stir the world's blood. The two expeditions will start at opposite sides of the pole at practically the same time. Captain Scott will traverse the route already covered by Lieutenant Shackleton. The Peary party will go in from Weddell sea over a course uncharted and unknown. The English expedition will have motors, Siberian ponies and dogs. The Americans will depend on dogs alone. While the rivalry is to be entirely friendly, it will nevertheless be keen and should arouse the sporting blood of the two nations as not even the yacht races, the Derbies, the tennis and polo matches and other international contests have done.

It is not at all impossible that the betting fraternity will get into the game and big stakes be placed on the event. Commander Peary suggests that one exploring party might get to the pole only twenty-four hours ahead of the other, which would be a closer race than that to the cable lines when Dr. Cook broke out of the north only a week ahead of himself. There will be no Cook finish to this affair, however. The example of the Brooklyn explorer will prevent others from claiming to have discovered any pole whatsoever without sworn affidavits, diagrams and proofs that would convince the now skeptical University of Copenhagen. It will be impossible, however, for the discoverer of the south pole to "bring on his Eskimos," for the reason that no human beings live on the antarctic continent.

The probability is that the south pole is on a plateau 10,000 feet in elevation and that both exploring parties will have an all land routes. Shackleton found land all the way in his journey and when he reached his farthest south at 111 miles from the goal said that powerful fieldglasses revealed a continuing plateau as far as he could see. His elevation was then about 10,000 feet. Because of the altitude and for the reason that there is no sea water to modify the temperature the area surrounding the south pole is colder than that encountered by arctic explorers. Mountains and glaciers also make going in the antarctic difficult. For all that, the discovery of the south pole should be less difficult than was that of the northern end of the world. There are no open leads and no drifting ice floes, two of the obstacles that have defeated so many arctic explorers in their efforts to reach the north pole.

The route to be followed by the American party leading in from Weddell sea is also thought to be over the land, though next to nothing is actually known concerning it. A coast line has been discovered, and this is supposed to be the shore of the antarctic continent. It may, however, be only a shell, with open sea beyond it. Again, it may lead to high and practically inaccessible mountain ranges. This uncertainty as to what the Americans may encounter would put the odds in favor of the British, since they will follow for most of the distance the course already traversed by Lieutenant Shackleton, just as Shackelton in turn kept close to the track made by Captain Scott in his first expedition of 1901-4.

The Englishmen will go in from New Zealand and the Americans from Punta Arenas, on the southern extremity of South America. The start in each case will be made next summer. The seasons are in the southern hemisphere the exact reverse of ours, Christmas occurring in midsummer there and the 4th of July in midwinter. It is designed to go into winter quarters in 1911 and make the actual polar dashes during the spring and summer 1911-12. If successful the expeditions will then start home early in 1912. It is barely possible that news may be heard of one or both ventures before either reaches a cable station, as the British intend to take wireless apparatus and to establish wireless stations at their two bases, which will be approximately 500 miles apart. It is not impossible that these wireless stations could be utilized for communication with the outside world, although the distance will be very great.

Captain Robert Falson Scott, the leader of the British expedition was born in 1868 and has been in the navy since 1882. He served in various ships, becoming successively lieutenant, commander and captain, which last rank he has held since 1904. His first anarctic expedition started in from Port Lyttleton, New Zealand, which will be the base of the new venture. Near the eightieth parallel a high ice barrier was found, but a long shift was made, a pass discovered, and an approach was pushed toward the pole, which stopped a few hundred miles short of the record made by Lieutenant Shackleton last year. It is not without interest that Shackleton gained his first anarctic experience as a member of this first Scott expedition. It is hardly probable that he will accompany the next one, as he is now busy writing a book, but either next summer or later may lead an expedition of his own. He will shortly visit America, where he is to be signally honored.

Lieutenant Shackleton's account of the list days of his journey is thrilling, and as it describes conditions which will be met by the two expeditions now forming I subjoin a few extracts.

"The blizzard had done its work, however, and we recognized that we had just about reached our limit. We got up at 2 a. m. and at 4 a. m. were away for a final march south, taking with us nothing but food, instruments and the queen's flag, with a bamboo rod for a staff.

Half running, half walking, we made that last march, and at 9 a. m. in latitude 88 degrees 23 minutes we hoisted the union jack, we could do no more, for to go farther meant abandoning all hope of getting back to our depots.

The pole, though only ninety-seven geographical miles away (111 statute miles), was impossible for us to attain. Before us stretched the same white plain over which we had traveled for many days. Our powerful Goertz glasses showed no signs of land, and we could safely assume that the geographical south pole was situated on this immense plateau, between 10,000 and 11,000 feet above sea level and certainly the coldest and one of the most stormy parts of the world. We took a photograph of the party, with the queen's flag blowing out in the wind that cut us to the bone, took possession of the plateau on behalf of his majesty and immediately began the march back to our camp, our faces once more turned north."

The leader of the American expedition will probably not be announced for some time. The most likely men for the post are Borup and McMillan, both of whom accompanied Peary in his north pole dash. Whoever is in command, Robert E. Peary will be the actual head. Under his guidance and inspiration we have a right to hope that, despite the handicaps against the Americans, they will win the race and that the first flag raised at the south pole, as at the north, will be the stars and scripes.

CHEERLESS HOMES.

The "young man of today" is so often viewed with alarm and regarded with solicitude that moral homilies about him have lost their force. Somebody is always saving him in a new way until he grows rather tired of being saved.

Here, however, is a bit of true gospel that will appeal to him—and it may likewise appeal to his parents. "The homeless home," says a Cleveland minister, "is the greatest danger to the young man of today. An unsympathetic home has more peril in it than the saloon, the gambling den or the street. The home should be a home in the truest sense of the word, and not a mere place to eat and sleep."

The danger is negative, of course, but it drives the young man to positive evils. He wants comfort and sympathy, and if he doesn't get them where he lives he will go elsewhere. The home is a place to live in. Comfortable chairs and couches, fireplaces that are used and furnaces that work, plenty of lights wherever lights are needed, warm rugs and walls tastefully tinted and hung with good pictures, good meals and adequate provision for casual lunches, music, sunlight and a general atmosphere of cheerfulness, sympathy and tolerance; these are the things that make a home real to the much discussed young man. What though he does muss things up and leave footprints on the floor and on odor of tobacco in the parlor? There are things more desirable than perfect order and model housekeeping.

MARYLAND AND THE INCOME TAX AMENDMENT.

Senator Gorman's opposition to the income tax, expressed in his speech at Annapolis last night, is in direct opposition to the promises of his party as expressed in its national platform. We believe it is also in conflict with the views of the rank and file of the Democrats of the country.

The reasons for giving the National Government the right to impose the tax have been repeatedly summarized. Senator Brown, of Nebraska, in a speech in the Senate recently, thus reiterated them:

First, because it restores to the Government the right to exercise a power possessed and exercised at various times for more than a hundred years.

Second, because it confers a power now enjoyed by every other sovereign nation in the world.

Third, because in times of peace it may become necessary to the general welfare.

Fourth, because in a national emergency it may become necessary to the life of the nation.

Mr. Gorman's idea that the State can levy an income tax and his belief that "few men of wealth will try to evade it"—if he is speaking seriously—are difficult to reconcile with assumption of knowledge that justifies one in debating the proposition. Imposition of an income tax by a State is not a new thing. We believe one has been in existence in Virginia since 1843, being perfectly harmless all the time. North Carolina has had an income tax in one form or another since 1849. We have no recent report of the amount collected, but in 1902 it amounted to $18.27. Possibly since that time the yield has been nothing. South Carolina has fared a little better, as with herculean effort it succeeded in 1907 in gathering in $36,000—a pitiful sum in comparison with the general property tax.

It will thus be seen that effort on the part of the States to levy an income tax has been a total failure. The best opinion is that the tax cannot be collected by the State. Attempts to do so will either fail, as they have done heretofore, or they will drive capital from the State which imposes the tax to one that doesn't.

It is a question of time when the people will demand that an income tax be levied in the only way it can be levied—by the National Government; that this proper means of making the rich pay their fair share of the tax necessary to support the government be resorted to. In these days when the tension between classes is growing tighter and tighter, he is a friend neither to State nor to nation who stands in the way of the effort to equalize the burden which now falls all too heavily upon the shoulders of the poor. —Baltimore News.

JUDGMENT REVERSED. CAUSE REMANDED.

Mr. Morgart Again Wins in the Court of Appeals.

The case of William A. Morgart vs. Thomas F. Smouse, being No. 36 on the docket on the Court of Appeals, was on Friday decided by Judge Bruke, reversing the judgment in the court below and remanding the case. This is the second time the case has been heard before the Court of Appeals, Mr. Morgart winning each time.

This suit as originally tried was before Judges Henderson and Keedy, sitting as a law court. Mr. Smouse sued to recover thirty thousend dollars from Mr. Morgart, alleging that they were partners in the sale of some valuable coal and timber land in Garrett county, and further alleging that the profits were sixty thousand dollars, from the sale. The court sitting as a law court gave Mr. Smouse a judgment for $9,001.

Mr. Morgart appealed the case and the Court of Appeals reversed the judgment below, one of the reasons being that the case should have been tried in a court of equity.

Mr. Smouse next brought suit in a court of equity and the case was heard before Judge Keedy, who rendered a verdict for the same same amount as first obtained, $9,001.

Mr. Morgart again appealed with the result that the judgment below is again reversed and the cause remanded.

While the full text of the decision has not arrived it is understood that one of the reasons for the reversal of the case as given is that Mr. Morgart was not allowed anything for his time and the use of his money, the cost of which fall upon Mr. Smouse will be about $1,000.

Ex-Judge Ferdinand Williams and DeWarren H. Reynolds represented Mr. Morgart and Thomas J. Peddicord and D. J. Blackiston Mr. Smouse.

WRONG VIEWS OF THE CENSUS

No Harm Can Come to Any Person Who Answers the Questions.

Letters from the census supervisors to the United States Census Bureau show the erroneous apprehension of a considerable element of the population that their answers to the enumerators' questions in the next census, beginning April 15, this year, will cause increased taxation, legal entanglements, or injurious consequences to their persons and property.

In order to quiet such unfounded fears, which would, unless removed, materially affect the accuracy of the census, the bureau has prepared an official statement relative to the decennial census, it origin, purpose, and uses.

This statement should furnish complete assurance to those concerned that information given the enumerators is held by the Census Bureau in the strictest confidence with reference to the identity of the informants, as required by the policy of the bureau and commanded by the law of the United States.

The bureau earnestly hopes that clergymen, priests, physicians, schoolteachers, employers and other public-spirited citizens who come in contact with large numbers of people, will cooperate with the bureau by telling persons who are believed to entertain erroneous opinions of the census the real facts and urging them to give full replies to the enumerators. Teachers are particularly requested to speak of the census to the school children and ask them to tell their parents about it.

The statement issued by the bureau explains that the Constitution requires a census of the population to be taken every ten years in order to reapportion state representation in the National House of Representatives. It is the means also to ascertain the increase in the population, agriculture, industries and resources of the nation since the last census.

It is emphatically declared, by the statement, that the information sought from the people of the United States is used solely for general statistical purposes. It will neither be published nor used in any other way to disclose facts regarding any individual or enterprise. The census, it goes on to say, is not, never has been and cannot be employed to obtain information that can be used in any way in the assessment of property for purposes of taxation or the collection of taxes, either national, state or local; or for deportation proceedings, extradition measures, army or navy conscription, internal revenue investigations, compulsory school attendance, child-labor law prosecutions, quarantine regulations, or in any way to affect the life, liberty or property of any person.

It points out that replies to the enumerators are and must be held by the Census Bureau in strict and absolute confidence. All the bureau officials, supervisors, supervisors' clerks, enumerators and interpreters, before entering upon their duties, are obliged to take a solemn oath not to disclose any information they may obtain, except to the Census Bureau, and a violation of the United States law in regard to this oath means a $1,000 fine or imprisonment for two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

HE GOT HIS'N

Henry Jackson, Colored, Sentenced to Two Months at the Cut.

Last Sunday Henry Jackson, a roving negro who "summers" in Oakland and "winters" in Washington, got into trouble with "Bill" Haskell on Oak street near the M. E. church, when a "cussin" match was indulged in by these two individuals.

Monday morning a warrant was taken out for the arrest of the parties but before it could be served Mistoh Jackson got himself into further trouble by assaulting one of Jim Denmark's children at Catonsville and attempting to throw it into the creek.

In the meantime officers were in search of Jackson and finally located him at Denmark's home trying to "compromise the case," as he styled it, with Mrs. Denmark. As soon as the officer appeared Jackson made a break and ran toward Broderick's lake, but he was not acquainted with the fact that a wire fence with fierce barbs was strung across his path and into this he piled pell mell. Before he could extricate himself Deputy Sheriff Shartzer was upon him and he meekly accompanied the officer to jail. Yesterday morning he was given a hearing before Justice Teats who imposed a sentence of two months in the House of Correction.

Jackson made the mistake of his life by coming to Oakland too early in the "summer."

Haskell was also gathered in by the officer and he was also given a hearing and will spend the next week as the guest of Garrett county for the part he took in Sunday's disturbance. He was born and raised in Oakland and for the past twelve years or more he has been living at Tunnelton where he works in the mines one month and drinks bad whiskey the other eleven months of the year.

To Change Forest Fire Law.

A bill just introduced in the State Legislature by Senator Biddison makes some needed changes in the present forest fire law that should prove very beneficial. The proposed law divides the expense of extinguisning forest fires equally between the county and the state. Under the present law the county has to pay the entire expense of extinguishing forest fires, and then has the power to collect the costs from the landowners on whose account the money was expended. This means that the landowner who sufiers most from forest fires must not only sustain the loss, but pay the largest share of the expense of putting out the fire for which he is probably in no way responsible.

This bill in addition gives the forest wardens the power to arrest in case of detected violations of the forest laws, and also gives them the power to summon help to extinguish forest fires. The bill should have the support of all woodland owners.

There are 2,000,000 acres of woodland in the State from which was cut in 1908 nearly $5,000,000 worth of material. The principal cut was lumber amounting to 225,000,000 board feet, but included also an immense quantities of piling, mine props, cordwood, poles, railroad ties, pulpwood, lath and shingles. This took more than three times the growth of the forests for that year and points to but one thing, that we are using our forests much faster than they are growing. We use six times as much wood per capita as Germany, nine times as much as Franse, and sixteen times as much as Great Britain.

There are 73,168 acres of wooded area in Washington county, which is 20 per cent. of the acreage of the county. Garrett county, which leads in timber, has 64 per cent. of its acreage in forests, while Charles county has 11 per cent. and Frederick county has 12 per cent. The latter counties having less timber than any other county in the State.

Mr. Jacob Hershberger, of near Swanton, who has brought himself some local notoriety as a weather prognosticator, was in Oakland last Saturday trying to create a mental disturbance among his acquaintances and friends who thought the winter was about over, by predicting storms, blizzards, rains and snows, the latter to the number of ten, before spring will consent to smile upon us. When asked if these ten snows include the robin, blackbird, service, wild goose, tame duck and wild duck snows, Mr. Hershberger answered in the affirmative, and added that the maple sugar crop would be a hummer. We hope the latter prediction will be fulfilled, and as to the former we trust that Mr. Hershberger will lose every vestige of his notoriety as a truthful weather prophet.

TWO RAILROAD WRECKS

Occurred In and Near Oakland Last Friday Morning.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company had considerable difficulty last Friday morning to keep its trains moving on anything like schedule time, owing to two wrecks which occurred during the early hours of the day in and near Oakland.

The first accident was caused by the undergearing of a freight car coming down which derailed the car near the Frantz Hotel. It bumped along over the ties until the Second street crossing was reached and there the train was stopped after doing considerable damage to the ties of the track and holding up traffic for an hour or more.

The second wreck occurred near the old Charles Shaffer farm one mile west of town, where five empty steel coal cars were derailed, two of them turning turtle and piling down the embankment. The wrecking crew was called into service and the obstruction was cleared away in about three hours after the wreck occurred.

Trains both east and west were forced to use the eastbound track while the obstruction remained on the roadbed, thus impeding traffic and delaying both passenger and freight trains.

MEMORIAL SERVICE

Held By St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran Sunday School.

Last Sabbath morning a service was conducted at St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church by the Sunday school in memory of Bernard Geissman, whose death removed from the school one of its most faithful members. Resolutions of condolence were adopted, after which Rev. E. Manges, pastor of the church, in a few remarks paid a tribute to the memory of the deceased, extolling his virtues, his love of the church, his home and friends.

The resolutions adopted by the school are as follows:

WHEREAS, It has pleased God, in the ministration of His inscrutible will, to permit the Angel of Death to enter the portals of St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran Sunday school of Oakland, and to bear away to Heaven the soul of Bernard Geissman, one of our beloved companions and scholars, whose devotion to the best interests of the school was a marked trait of his character; and

WHEREAS, This Sunday school has lost a member who will be sadly missed by reason of his fidelity to duty and th cheerful Christian devotion constantly shown by him in the upbuilding of this branch of Christ's kingdom on earth; therefore, be it

Resolved, By St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran Sunday school of Oakland, that in the death of Bernard Geissman this organization has suffered a great loss, but we bow in humble submission to Divine will, knowing that our loss is his eternal gain; and be it

Resolved, That the life and character of our departed friend and companion was an example to others, and rightly showed forth the virtues of Christian love, devotion to church, family and home; and be it

Resolved, That while we mourn his loss and offer this tribute of love to his memory, we pray the blessing of God upon his parents and friends, uniting with them in a lively hope of meeting him again at the throne in Heaven; and be it

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this school, a copy delivered to his family, and published in the papers of the town.

RULE ABOUT STAMPED ENVELOPE

Postal Bills Prohibits Printing Names and Addresses of Business Houses.

The House Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads, Washington, has decided to include in the appropriation bill about to be reported a provision prohibiting the Postoffice Department from furnishing stamped envelopes containing the names and addresses of the business houses to which they are supplied.

Heretofore, for a slight additional cost, it has been possible for business firms to obtain stamped envelopes from the Department which bore in the left hand corner the printed name and address of the firm. These envelopes were especially in favor with banking firms. For a number of years various printers and publishers throughout the country have been protesting against the Postoffice Department's invasion of the printing field. At the expiration of the Government's present contract with a Dayton, O., printing firm, the Postoffice Committee would have the practice discontinued. Hereafter the Department will be allowed to supply only the words, "Return in —— days to."

The Department has made little or no profit on the printing of envelopes, the practice having been employed mainly for the convenience of the large houses who purchase envelopes in thousand lots.

The plans and specifications for Mr. N. U. Bond's residence, to be erected here this summer, have been completed and he expects to award the contract to a builder this week. The regret has been expressed that Mr. Bond's home will be out in the county instead of being located within the corporate limits of Oakland. All are very much pleased, however, that he will remain a resident of Garrett county and that his place of habitation will be in this neighborhood.

Since the decision of the Supreme Court in the boundary line case between Maryland and West Virginia has been decided favorably to the latter state, the newspapers of Preston county have been congratulating the people of that section of the national domain. None will have to come over into Maryland, they proclaim, and they therefore will remain loyal subjects of Czar Stephen B. Elkins. From near Cranesville the report has come to Oakland that a resident of that section declared that should the Court decide the boundary line case favorable to this State he intended to move away as he always understood that Maryland was an unhealthy State to live in. Why, bless your soul, neighbor, Maryland is an unhealthy State to live in—for some people, but not the law abiding ind or those who conduct themselves in a respectable manner.

JAIL BREAKERS CAUGHT.

One of the Three Men Who Escaped From Parsons Jail Captured.

Last Sunday afternoon Sheriff Shartzer received a telephone message from the Sheriff at Parsons to be on the lookout for three men who escaped from the jail at that place Friday night, giving a description of the escaped prisoners with the further information that they were headed in the direction of Oakland; that they were bad characters and would resort to violence if necessary to keep their liberty.

The officer immediately went to work on the case and after telephoning to a number of people residing along the road leading from Parsons to Oakland, the men were recognized by the description given as being the same parties who stopped at a farmhouse south of town Sunday and got their suppers, leaving immediately in the direction of Oakland.

With this information the Sheriff and his deputy drove out the road toward George Shartzer's residence and near there saw one of the men hiding behind a tree along the roadside. He was placed under arrest. While the officers were engaged in this they were attracted by a noise in the woods and judged that the two companions of their prisoner were making their escape, which turned out to be true, neither of them being apprehended.

The prisoner captured by Sheriff Shartzer was Lloyd Valley, a young man who was confined to the Parsons jail charged with house breaking and "bootlegging" whiskey. His companions were Siden Martin, charged with robbing a jewelry store, and Earl Cook, charged with breaking into a car on the Western Maryland Railroad near Parsons. Valley was taken from Oakland to Parsons by the sheriff of the West Virginia county Monday.

THE HEROES OF THE RAIL

To do Their Duty is the First Thought of the men at the Throttle.

"Yes," said an engineer, one of the group of six who were telling of their experiences, "I have known several exhibitions of nerve that have a right to be classed among the heroic. One occurred about 12 years ago, on the Pennsylvania lines west of Pittsburg. Sam Galloway was one of the best engineers that ever drove an engine over any road. He not only knew all about an engine, and how to handle it, but he was perfectly cool and collect under any circumstances.

"He was hauling a fast train, and had left Pittsburg more than an hour late, with orders to make it up. It was in the spring of the year, just as the ground began to thaw. He was going at a 50-mile gait rounding the base of a hill—on one side was the hill and the other a creek, some 40 feet below—when he saw a great rock, which would weigh more than a ton, suddenly fall on the track a short distance ahead of him. His first impulse was to apply the brakes, but there would not be time to stop, and to hit the rock seemed certain to topple the engine and train into the creek.

"Instead of reversing he pulled her open another notch or two, the train fairly jumping forward as it felt the increase of power. He struck the rock under full headway, drove it from the track, rolling it down the side into the creek, while the engine and train fairly leaped over the broken rails. The blow was terrific and jolted the passengers from their berths in the sleeping cars, but they were saved by the quickness of Sam and his nerve."

Another hero in overalls recalled an incident of nerve. "It was on what is now known as the Monon route," he said. "It was in the early days of railroading out there when the engine of one of the trains was derailed turning over on its side. The engineer's foot caught between the tender and the engine footboard. The scalding steam and water were slowly roasting him to death while the trainmen were endeavoring to release him. The only way was to cut off his foot at the instep, and the only tools were a cold-chisel and a hammer. He insisted that it should be done, and while the conductor was using these rude tools the brave engineer encouraged him. Strange to say, he recovered and lived many years afterward, still running his engine."

"Well, boys," said an engineer who had been running on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad for 32 years, "I have, perhaps, been fortunate, and never had what you would call any peculiar experiences. I never touch a drop of liquor under any circumstances, yet I feel sure that if my train should meet with a bad accident and a number of lives were lost, some newspaper reporter, and probably the general public, would try to lay the blame on me, and say that I was intoxicated. This is one of the things with which railroad men have to contend. The public has the idea that we are a set of rough, hardened men, who care little for life. But engineer knows that his life is in danger, and if he did not think anything of the passengers, he is not going to take any risk that he can avoid.

If an accident does happen his first thought is to protect his train, if there is likelihood of another train coming in either direction. It is not so much thought of himself or the lives of his passengers as it is of his duty."

An old engineer on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad said: "I had a thrilling experience once. We had just left a small town in Ohio and were going at a good rate of speed, when I notice several children playing near the track, about 60 feet ahead. I blew the whistle several times and the children scampered away, all except a little girl, who seemed fascinated by the onrushing train. I put on brakes but saw that she would be run down unless something was done at once. Letting go of the throttle, I reached down and leaned far over, caught the child up by her hair. I swung her up beside me, and at the stopping of the train, set her down with the bidding to run along home."

Barney Oldfield, the famous automobile driver, once gave a locomotive engineer a nervous moment out in Indiana. Oldfield was out for a road record and was tearing down the road like mad toward a railroad crossing. He saw a train coming, but he figured that he could get across the tracks a moment ahead of its arrival. Too late he saw that the train would reach there the moment he did and that he was in danger of losing his life. His machine and the locomotive met, but at exactly the right moment he turned in the direction the train was going, ran up over the cowcatcher, across the path of the train, and to safety in a ditch on the other side of the track. The train went on without even slowing up.

Among stories of heroic nerve and devotion to duty none surpasses that of an engineer on the Lake Shore a few years ago, who, while buried under the wreck of his engine, tightly pinned, while the steam was blowing all over him ordered his fireman, who was trying to air him, to leave him and flag No. 7, which was then almost due. The others had forgotten that another train was rushing on to destruction, but this heroic engineer did not forget. In is of such stuff that heroes are made.—Chicago Tribune.

Dreadnoughts For France.

The Paris Matin prints a statement which shows that France intends to follow other countries in the matter of constructing Dreadnoughts. It says that the two battleships which will form part of the programme to be submitted to Parliament in January will be of 23,000 tons displacement. They will have a speed of 20 knots an hour and will be equal if not superior to any battleship afloat.

They will have the greatest attacking power of any ship in existence at the time they are laid down. Their secondary battery will consist of eighteen guns, ten of which will be of superior calibre to any secondary battery used by the ships of other countries. The vessels are to be completed in three years. Two ships of this class will be laid down every year from 1910 on, so that by 1915 France will possess nineteen battleships, twelve of which will be of the Dreadnought type.

He Lacked Repose.

It was Christmas time, and a large and distinguished party was invited to the boy's house for dinner. He was drilled in manners for the occasion. He was especially warned to be silent.

"Promise not to speak till you are asked a question," said his mother.

And this the boy solemnly promised to do.

At dinner he was full of curiosity and animation, turning his big interested eyes on every face, and the fish course had arrived without a word or sound from him. By that time, however, his patience was exhausted, and he cried to his mother peevishly:

"Say, mamma, when are they going to start questioning me?"—New York Times.

FRENCH PLAN A GREAT FETE FOR ROOSEVELT

Former President Will Be Received With Much Honor.

To appear in the role of a private citizen and student among his fellow-savants is the wish of former President Roosevelt regarding his visit to Paris, April 14. He has intimated that he wishes to preserve as far as possible the attitude of the student in which he accepted the invitation to lecture at the Sorbonne.

The French government is anxious to receive the former President of the United States with the highest honors. French society is prepared to lionize him; the literary, philosophical, geographical and scientific bodies all desire to entertain him, and the American colony would like to give a great banquet in his honor.

But the former President will not be received entirely as a private citizen, despite his requests. The government has declined to forego the honor of entertaining him. Colonel Roosevelt has given his acceptance to a dinner at the palace of President Fallieres. This was arranged by Ambassador Jusserand, who is to make a special trip across the Atlantic to attend. However, Col. Roosevelt's wishes will be so far respected by the French that his visit will lack the spectacular features of General Grant's stay in Paris during his world tour.

The exact program to be observed during his stay is subject to revision by further conference between the former President and the council of the Sorbonne. A Greek play for his delectation has been mentioned, but his acceptance is doubted. A reception will follow the lecture, which will be given in the amphitheatre. The forty French immortals will be included in those whom Colonel Roosevelt will meet.

On April 16th Colonel Roosevelt will be received in solemn audience by the institute, of which he is a member in virtue of his recent election as an associate member of the Academy of Political and Moral Sciences.

OUR FOREIGN STUDENTS.

Almost 1500 Enrolled Now Their Number Rapidly Growing.

The number of foreign students at American institutions of higher learning is increasing rapidly from year to year, and the day is not far distant when there will be more German students in America than American students in Germany. Thirty-four American institutions attracted 1467 foreigners during the academic year 1908-09, this figure being exclusive of summer session attendance.

Columbia attracted forty-two foreigners to its current summer session, says the American College and no doubt several other university could make as good a showing for the summer term. The largest delegations to the thirty-four institutions under consideration were sent by Canada 242; China, 193; Japan, 158; Mexico, 81; Great Britain and Ireland, 71; Cuba, 70; India, 60; Germany, 56; (there were 298 Americans enrolled at the various German univesities in the 1909 summer semester); Argentine Republic, 52; Turkey, 51, and Russia, 50.

Of the 1467 foreigners at the institutions under consideration 460 hail from North America, 468 from Asia, 313 from Europe, only 154 from South America, 64 from Australia and 18 from Africa. Speaking broadly the largest foreign patronage is enjoyed by the graduate schools and the engineering schools of the country, 59 per cent. of the total number of foreigners at Columbia for instance, being enrolled in these faculties. Owing to the large representation of foreign students in its dental school, Pennsylvania with 225 foreigners continues to head the list. Bryn Mawr, Mount Holyoke, Smith, Vassar and Wellesley have only thirty one foreign students.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

A FAMINE IN THE LAND

"I will send a famine in the land; not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord" (Amos viii, 11).

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 27.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle, New York, preached twice here today in our largest auditorium. He is well known here and had fine audiences. We report his discourse from the above text as follows:—

Today this prophecy is fulfilled in our midst! Notwithstanding the fact that during the past century Bibles have been printed and circulated among the people by the million, and notwithstanding the fact that education has become general so that rich and poor, old and young, have the ability to read God's Word, nevertheless we are in the midst of the very famine specified by the Prophet. It seems almost incredible that we should be famishing now with Bibles in our homes, when our saintly forefathers did not famish, though education was limited. The secret lies in the fact that increasing intelligence on every hand has awakened our reasoning faculties along religious lines, and the result is the gnawing of hunger in our hearts. Our hearts and our flesh cry out for a living and a true God—a God greater than ourselves—more just, more powerful, more loving. Feeling our own impotency, we more than ever feel our need of the Friend above all others with a love that sticketh closer than a brother's.

Consequently we cannot find the rest and refreshment and comfort from the Scriptures which our forefathers derived. Consequently the young men and the purest of heart in the world are repelled by the religion of the past as represented in the creeds of all denominations. They are hungry for the Truth. They are thirsty for the refreshment which they need. Intellectually many are looking, wandering, from sea to sea desiring the bread of life and the water of life. Scanning the creeds of all denominations they find them practically alike as respects theories of eternal reprobation and damnation for all except the elect, the saints. They are faint for lack of spiritual food and drink. They even look to the heathen and examine the Theosophy of India, the Buddhism of Japan and the Confucianism of China, seeking for some satisfying portion of Truth. These are in some respects like the prodigal son—far from home. They perceive the swinish content with the husks of business, money, pleasure and politics, but their spiritual longings cannot be satisfied with the husks which the swine eat. They are thought peculiar because of their interest in spiritual things. They are misunderstood by their best earthly friends. They must learn that in their wanderings along the highways of science and world-religion they will never get satisfaction. There is a famine in every denomination, in every part of the world. No one thinks of looking to the Bible for refreshment and strength. The Higher Critics of all denominations have branded it unreliable. The Professors in all the great Colleges are reprobating the Bible and openly laugh at the thought of finding there either bread for the hungry or water for the thirsty.

This is the very picture given in our context. "They shall wander from sea to sea, from the North even to the East; they shall run to and fro to seek the Word of the Lord and shall not find it. In that day shall the fair virgins and the young men faint for thirst" (Amos viii, 12, 13).

The Bread of Life and Water of Life.

These hungry hearts must learn that there is only the one satisfying portion under the Sun—the living and true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent to be the Bread of Life for the world, and the message of grace from his lips to be the Water of Life. It is ours to call the attention of this Truth-hungry class to the Great Teacher who declared, "My flesh is food indeed and my blood is drink indeed; except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you" (John vi, 55, 53). But scarcely will the intelligent of our day hearken to these words, so prejudiced are their minds by the fallacies which becloud their understanding. They see not, neither do they understand the goodness of God.

Why is this? Why are these Bibles in millions of homes, Catholic and Protestant, neglected? Because the people know not that the bread of life and the water of life which they seek are hidden therein. Why is this? We answer that conditions were very much the same in Israel at the time of our Lord's First Advent. The explanation he then gave is applicable now. He said, "Ye do make void the Law of God through your traditions"—"the traditions of the ancients" (Mark vii, 13; 1 Peter i, 18). So now, the traditions handed down from our forefathers really make void, meaningless, ungracious, the message of God's Wisdom and Love sent to us through the Lord, the apostles and the prophets. Those who still hold tenaciously to the creeds of the past are thoroughly blinded now to the true teachings of God's Word, while, alas, the majority of the independent thinkers, in rejecting the dogmas of the past, have rejected the Bible also, believing that the teachings of the creeds truthfully represent God's Word. These are wandering hither and thither, hungering and thirsting, looking for the bread of life and water of life, and finding it nowhere, because they seek not where alone it is to be found.

"Ho, Every One That Thirsteth, Come Ye."

Ho! Ye all that hunger for Truth, Come ye. There is an abundance for us all in our Heavenly Father's wonderful provision—in the Bible. Deserting all the creeds and traditions of men, let us gather at our Heavenly Father's Board as his family, as his children. Let us prove the truthfulness of his declaration that "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that reverence him." Let us seek and obtain the satisfying portion. Let us satisfy our longings at the table of Divine provision. Mark the Lord's words and consider how truthful they are. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled" (Matthew v, 6). It is this Truth-hungry class that we address. We know their heart-longings, for we had the same. We know the satisfaction which they crave, for we have received it and are therefore doubly glad to hand forth the bread of life and the water of life to those who desire it. There are plenty ready to serve the appetites of those who long for pleasure—ball games, society fetes, chess, travel, etc. We have not a word to say against these. It is not our thought that they are going to eternal torment; hence we do not frantically beset them, annoy them. Let them have their pleasure. Let them wait for the time to come when something may occur in their experiences which will put them into the class of the broken-hearted and contrite of spirit and cause them to feel after God, if haply they might find him as a satisfying portion. In harmony with the Master's direction, it is our aim to "bind up the broken-hearted; to comfort those that mourn;" to tell them of the oil of joy which the Lord is willing to bestow for their spirit of heaviness and sorrow for sin (Isaiah lxi, 1-3). As the Master expressed no reproof of those engaged in any form of moral reform, even asceticism, so it is with us. We desire to oppose no one who is doing any good work, whether he follow with us in every particular or not. There are so many engaged in doing evil works, and so few engaged in doing good, that not one of the latter class can be spared from the ranks of the service of righteousness.

As the Master did not give his time to temperance reform, nor social reform, nor political reform, but did give his time to the instruction of the people in the doctrines of the Divine Word, so let us be intent to follow his instruction in this matter, not teaching for doctrines the precepts of men, but the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever—expounding unto the people the Scriptures and assisting them to see the length and breadth of their meaning. Nevertheless, as the religious teachers of the Master's day hated Jesus and his disciples for this cause, "Because they taught the people," and persecuted them because they did not walk in the beaten paths of their day, so we may expect also to be hated without cause; so we may expect that the scribes and Pharisees and Doctors of the Law today will be grieved because the people are taught, because the light of the knowledge of the glory of God shining in the face of Jesus Christ is presented to the people as an incentive to love and obedience, instead of the doctrine of eternal torment. It matters not that all the educated ministry today well know, and would not for a moment deny, their disbelief in the doctrine of eternal torment, if cross-questioned. Nevertheless many of them hate us and oppose us, because we show the people the true interpretations of God's Word, and lift before the eyes of their understanding a God of Love, Just, Merciful, Righteous altogether, and fully capable both in wisdom and power to work out all the glorious designs which he "purposed in himself before the foundation of the world:"

(1) They perceive that the teaching of the doctrines of Purgatory and eternal torment has not had a sanctifying influence upon mankind in all the sixteen centuries in which it has been preached. They fear that to deny these doctrines now would make a bad matter worse. They fear that if the Gospel of the Love of God and of the Bible—that it does not teach eternal torment for any—were made generally known, the effect upon the world would be to increase its wickedness, to make life and property less secure than now and to fill the world still more than now with blasphemies.

(2) They fear also that a certain amount of discredit would come to themselves because, knowing that the Bible does not teach eternal torment, according to the Hebrew and Greek original, they secreted the knowledge from the people. They fear that this would forever discredit them with their hearers. Hence they still unwardly lend their influence to the doctrines of eternal torture, which they do not believe, and feel angry toward us because we teach the people the Truth upon the subject, which they know will bring to them hundreds of questions difficult to answer or dodge.

God's Love Constraineth Us.

I ask you, dear readers, Were you constrained to become children of God and to render to the Lord the homage and the obedience of your lives through fear or through love? I am not asking you whether you never have feared; but I am asking you what brought you to the point of consecrating your life to God? Surely that was not fear! I am aware, of course, that there is a proper, godly fear, reverence, and that the Scriptures declare it—"The fear (reverence) of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom" (Psalm cxi, 10). But this is not the fear of eternal torment, which tends to drive out love. How could we love or esteem or truly worship a God purposing the eternal torment of his creatures from before their creation?

I could give you many proofs of the power of love over the human heart, in contrast with the ungodly fear of the error. God says to us in so many words, "Their fear toward me is not of me, but is taught by the precepts of men." As an illustration: At a Bible Students' Convention not long ago in Ohio a well-dressed gentleman in attendance told me of how his heart had been touched with our presentations of the "Love Divine, all love excelling."

He said, "For years I have been a member of the Presbyterian Church without being really a Christian at all. Occasionally I went on sprees; sometimes I gambled and drank, etc., etc. Not until I received a knowledge of the true character of God as set forth in your 'Scripture Studies' did my heart ever come to the proper attitude of surrender to the Lord. Then I was glad to give him my little all, and wished it were more." The next day, passing from the hotel to the auditorium to a question meeting, this gentleman put a slip of paper into my hand, which I supposed was a question, and I thrust into my coat pocket. On the platform I drew it forth as one of the questions to be answered, and, to my astonishment, found it was a check for $1,000. The man had not been asked for one cent; but the Love of God had captivated his heart and gotten control—not only of it, but of his pocket-book and all. He wished to show the Lord his appreciation of the Love Divine, the length and breadth and height and depth, of which he now comprehended, as never before.

Another case: I met with a Convention of Bible Students in Chattanooga some five years ago. A gentleman attended who introduced himself to me saying that he was from Mississippi and that he had become deeply interested in my presentations of the harmony of the Word of God. He said in substance: "Brother Russell, I will not attempt to tell you how wicked a man I was before I got your literature. My dear wife here, an earnest Methodist, said to me, 'John, John, you will surely go to hell!' I replied to her, 'Mary, I know it! I know it! And, Mary, I am determined that I will deserve all that I get. I am not going to hell for nothing.' One of your tracts came to my desk in my store. I said that this was different from anything I ever understood respecting the teachings of the Bible. It seems more God-like and more rational. I sent to you for various Bible Students' Helps. The result, dear Brother Russell, is that the Love of God has constrained me, has conquered me, in a way that the doctrines of devilish torments could not influence me. Now I see the true teaching of God's Word. I can honor him and worship him and take pleasure in laying down my life in his service. I have made a full consecration of everything. For a time I sent you a $50 check every month; but, Brother Russell, that was in the nature of conscience-money, because the most profitable feature of my store trade was the sale of liquor to the Mississippi negroes. Those checks stopped, because, as the grace of God more and more filled and overflowed my heart, it brought me to see that I must love my neighbor as myself and do injury to none. That is all gone now, Brother Russell, and my whole life is devoted to the service of God and my fellowmen."

Three murderers confined in the Columbus, Ohio, Penitentiary had from childhood been trained in the doctrines of eternal torment in different churches and yet committed murder. Those men, under God's providence, received some of our literature—"Scripture Studies"—and were cut to the heart when they learned of the Love of God, as expressed in the Divine Plan of the Ages. To be brief: A knowledge of the Love of God made such a change in the hearts and lives of those three murderers that the prison-keepers took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus and had learned of him. By and by they were paroled and today two of them are preaching the Gospel of the Love of God, seeking to bring their fellowmen out of the condition of darkness and sin into the glorious sunlight of Divine Love and Truth. Having tried the Gospel of fear and damnation and torture for sixteen centuries; having seen that under this teaching there are more blasphemy and general wickedness than even in the heathen world, is it not due time to give the true bread and water of life to the hungry and thirsty ones who, for lack of it, are searching the earth and many of them falling into Higher Criticism, infidelity and other delusions peculiar to our day?

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

lodern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett unty, Maryland, is situated in a magficent farming country. Agriculture eing the true basis of all continued rosperity, this industry alone could upport a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

YOU never can tell what people mean by what they say. It is only by knowing what they need that you can get a clew.

Being generous is easy enough if kind providence or sly opportunity provides the wherewith.

Some men think that sharing one another's burdens is truly beautiful when the burden happens to be a jag.

As a general thing, being fat is tantamount to being happy, so there are compensations.

Knowing when you are about to be skinned is a sign that you aren't.

Modest Joys.

True happiness does not consist
In tearing up the town,
In daubing war paint on your face
And racing up and down.
In quieter pursuits you may
Grab off of joy your share
And get some very fine results
Without the wear and tear.

This going in the market place
And standing on your ear
And trying, like one shy of sense,
In public to appear
May bring perhaps a passing thrill
As thus the hours you waste,
But in the mouth it later leaves
A most unpleasant taste.

You need not sit around the house
And mope or study Greek
If some amusement, quiet, chaste
And quite refined, you seek.
You needn't read the almanac
For jokes of ancient date
Or even go into the yard
And teeter on the gate.

No; there's a happy medium,
A program large and sane,
That you may follow out without
A thought of raising Cain.
Put on your cap and kiss your wife—
It may the lady shock—
And in the quiet gloaming take
A walk around the block.

Quite True.

"What is the most noticable thing about jokes?"

"Their age as a general thing."

Superfluous.

"You shouldn't worry about the debts you owe."

"Do you think so?"

"I know it."

"Why shouldn't I?"

"That is the prerogative of your creditors, and I can assure you that they are attending strictly to it."

For Domestic Use.

"And so you are married."

"Yes; I have been married for three years."

"And how are all your fine spun theories?"

"I am using homespun ones now."

A Painful Lack.

"I don't know what is the matter with my business. I wonder if it needs system."

"No; I think not."

"Then what does it need?"

"Business."

Just.

Just a little pleasure,
Just a little pain;
Just a little sunshine,
Just a little rain;
Just a little friendship,
Just a little gold,
Just a little journey,
Then the story's told.

In Straight English.

"What are you drinking these days?"

"Just aqua pura."

"Cut it out, my boy."

"What would you suggest?"

"Water is good enough for any one."

Exactly.

"What is a white lie?"

"White?"

"Yes."

"Same as any other friend; the one that doesn't get you into trouble."

Sad Case.

"Why doesn't he marry?"

"Brown?"

"Yes."

"Well, you see, he thinks girls are silly, and he is afraid of widows."

Quite Previous.

"So Cook never fooled you?"

"No."

"And you doubted his story from the first?"

"Before I heard it."

Getting Experience.

"What is he fitted for, anyway?"

"He would make a good soldier."

"Was he ever under fire?"

"Yes; at the last four places he worked."

THE GRANGE

Conducted by
J. W. DARROW, Chatham, N. Y.,
Press Correspondent New York State Grange

IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Annual Session of State Grange at Manchester.

Richard Pattee Elected Master of the State Grange—Literary Work a Leading Feature In the Subordinate Granges—Lecture Courses a Valuable Addition to Grange Activities—There Are Nearly 30,000 Members In 270 Granges.

In his opening address State Master Hadley remarked that the total grange membership of the state is 28,821 in 268 subordinate granges. There are also 20 Pomonas. There is $26,864.99 in the grange treasury. He said that over 100 granges had availed themselves of the grange lecture courses the past year, which cost about $2,000. The state lecturer reported that 273 lectures had been given, at which the total attendance was 25,590. In regard to public affairs the granges in 119 towns discussed the articles of business in the town meeting warrants just prior to the annual town meetings. This is probably the most valuable discussion of public matters ever held in the state. The following table shows grange literary features of the past year: Selections of vocal music, 5,863; selections of instrumental music, 3,326; readings and recitations, 9,020; essays, 1,382; addresses, 729; drama, 64; farces, 288; tableaux, 523; discussions, 1,955; speakers on discussions, 11,859; attendance during programs, 106,025.

The biennial election of officers occurred this year, resulting in the retirement of H. O. Hadley and the election of Richard Pattee of Plymouth, lecturer for six years past. A. L. Felker of Meredith Center was elected lecturer and Wesley Adams of Londonderry overseer. G. R. Drake was elected secretary without an opposing vote.

The committee on agriculture recommended more attention to strictly agricultural topics in lecturers' programs, opposed speculation in food products, believed in small farms well tilled and in good roads, which should radiate from principal railroad centers, and also advocated larger state appropriations for the agricultural college.

The committee on resolutions urged the strengthening of the weak granges, greater care in choosing candidates for membership, recommended greater aid for education, advised that much attention be given to the study of forestry and fruit growing in the several granges and urged granges to get more information about grain raising on New Hampshire farms. Among other recommendations of the grange were the continuance of the grange lecture course and a proposition to be referred to the subordinate granges for the formation of a past lecturers' club in the granges of the state.

Connecticut State Grange.

At the twenty-fifth annual session of the Connecticut state grange, held at Hartford Jan. 12-14, State Master L. H. Healey of Woodstock was re-elected, Gilbert A. Vincent of Kent was elected overseer and J. A. Sherwood of Easton lecturer. The chief items of business were the report of the taxation committee recommending that franchises should be returned as property and taxed; also favoring graduated inheritance tax beginning at $10,000; also that private property should be returned for tax to the true value in money. A long discussion was held on the defeat of the public utilities bill at the last session of the legislature, and the passage of such a bill was again demanded. The grange also favored the present form of representation in the national grange—that is to say, not the proportional representation plan. The committee on education urged the passage by congress of the so called Davis educational bill. It also favored the juvenile grange. The Patrons' Exchange reported a very successful year's work. It has declared a dividend of 20 per cent. The Patrons' Insurance company has in force $1,318,800 in insurance. H. E. Loomis of Glastonbury was elected president for the ensuing year.

Illinois State Grange.

At the recent annual session of the Illinois state grange resolutions were adopted favoring election of United States senators by direct vote, a general parcels post law, local option, state aid for public highway improvement, placing registration fee of automobiles in the treasury of the state highway commission for use in improving public roads, deep waterway from the great lakes to the gulf, the continuance of the tax on colored oleomargarine, postal savings banks, conservation of our natural resources and against ship subsidy.

The national grange was petitioned by the Ohio state grange to take some measures to protect the names "grange" and "Patrons of Husbandry" so that they may be used only by those entitled to use them.

Onondaga county (N. Y.) granges have organized a system of crop reporting, yields, prices, etc., that promises to be of much value.

CURVES AND GRADES.

They Are Becoming Important Owing to Increase of Automobile Traffic.

Until recently the location of highways has been governed more by grade than by alignment. For obvious reasons horse drawn vehicles demanded easy grades, but were little affected by sharp curves. Consequently roads were so laid out as to meet this requirement, being made to wind around hills and follow tortuous water courses with little attempt to provide curves of long radii. The result is a highway system which, except in level country, is composed of crooked roads, well adapted to the needs of wagon traffic, picturesque and pleasing, but unsuited to the requirements of a traffic composed of heavy motor driven vehicles traveling at high speed.

Safety is a factor that hitherto has entered into the work of road building to only a very limited extent, but which is constantly assuming more importance. The rapidly increasing use of motor vehicles places this new responsibility on the roadmaker, and the building of new roads with longer curves and the realignment of old roads will do much toward reducing the dangers attendant upon the new modes of transportation.

The existence of a curve generally, though not necessarily, presupposes the presence on the inner side of some obstruction shutting off the view of the roadway ahead from a vehicle traveling around it. Curves having radii of 1,000 feet or less are of common occurrence in such places, and a width of thirty feet in the clear is as great as that found on many country roads. On such a curve the driver of an automobile running in the middle of the road can see an approaching car, also in the middle of the road, only about 350 feet ahead. At thirty miles an hour a little less than nine seconds are required to traverse this distance, and if each car were running at that speed only a little over four seconds would elapse between the instant when they came in sight of each other and their meeting. Many considerations prohibit the establishment of an arbitrary minimum radius for highway curves, but a careful study of prevailing conditions shows clearly that more attention will have to be paid to this phase of road building in the future than has been accorded to it in the past. Roads must be economical, they must be durable, and they must satisfy the conditions that experience has imposed upon them, but they must be safe.

OIL VALUABLE TO ROADS.

Makes Them Waterproof In Winter and Dustproof In the Summer.

Some interesting data concerning the value of oil in the making of good roads appeared in a Kansas experiment station bulletin. An evenly graded stretch of sandy loam road a quarter of a mile long and thirty feet wide was sprayed with an oil residue or residuum. A dust mulch about four inches deep had formed on this road and had caused almost a cessation of traffic. The road was first plowed to a depth of four and one-half inches and then thoroughly pulverized with a harrow. Oil to the extent of one gallon per square yard was then sprinkled and harrowed in, after which the road was floated. The road was closed to traffic for a week after this treatment.

The effect of freezing weather on the roadbed was the object first studied. The results proved that the oil made a waterproof shed and kept the underlying soil sufficiently dry to prevent serious injury by frosts. The question of the durability of a road seems also settled when roads are treated with oil, as this road successfully withstood all kinds of heavy traffic. In the hottest season it was deemed necessary to spray again with oil, about half a gallon to the square yard, to keep down a slight layer of dust. The estimated cost of oiling this road is $525 per mile, although some of it varied and the extreme cost went as high as a rate of $1,300 per mile.

Importance of Good Roads.

It is hard to figure out who is hit the hardest when a rural route is discontinued on account of the impassability of the roads. It is a harm worker to the farmer on the route that measures greater than the harm to any one who is a beneficiary of the service, but the merchant is also a great loser, and it stands him well in hand to keep advised of the road conditions in his locality and to talk, act and work for good roads all the time.

Station Agents to Boost Good Roads.

The officials of the Pennsylvania railroad have started a movement to have station agents along its lines become good roads advocates in an effort to have the roads near the stations improved. The railroad officials believe that improvement of the roads would reduce the time that cars are compelled to wait on sidings when farmers are unable to haul goods over the poor roads in bad weather.

IN CASE OF FIRE.

How to Save Property and Escape From a Burning Building.

One's ability to extinguish a starting fire or to escape if caught in a burning building depends upon intelligence and self control. If the blaze is just starting throw water on the material that is burning—not at the blaze. One bucket of water will do more good if thrown on by handfuls or with a broom than if dashed on at once. A small fire may be smothered with a rug or blanket or beaten out with a broom.

If you cannot put out the fire in a minute yell "Fire!" and then, if in a city, call the fire department. Every one living in the house should know the telephone number to be used for getting the firemen, and it should be on the wall for strangers to use. There is no time for looking in the directory, even if one should not be too nervous to find a number. Every one should know where the nearest fire alarm box is and how to use it.

Do not leave the door open when you run out to give an alarm. If the doors and windows are closed when a fire starts one can always get the firemen there in time to put it out while it is in only one room. The fire soon consumes all the oxygen in a closed room and may die out if it gets no fresh air.

If awakened in the night by the smell or cry of fire, don't dress. Wrap yourself in a blanket or quilt from the bed and get out the quickest way you can. Shut the doors you pass through. After calling for help try to ascertain the extent and the situation of the fire. You can tell if it is best to try to carry out the household goods. If the fire is on the first floor it is very dangerous to go above, because the heat and choking smoke rise.

One can often get out through a hall filled with smoke by going on his hands and knees when he would fall choking if he ran. The smoke is the thickest at the ceiling. Holding a wet towel or anything made of flannel or even a coat collar over the mouth greatly lessens the danger of injury to the lungs or death from the carbonic acid gas in the smoke.

Most fires start in the first floor or basement of a building and burn a hole up through the roof. In a house the flames travel by the stairways; in a big store or hotel they go quickly up the elevator shaft. After reaching the top the fire spreads and slowly goes down.

How to Care For Leather Furniture.

Most housekeepers regard their leather furniture as a thing to be dusted only and left to its fate. There never was a greater mistake. The leather needs constant and intelligent care to keep it from drying out and tearing into shreds or turning to powder. All leather needs care and furniture covering most of all. In the first place, don't be afraid to apply a little soap and water to it to wash off the dust and dirt. Use soapy water, a sponge and a paint brush to get into the folds of the leather and the crevices. The soapy water will darken the leather, but only temporarily. When the leather is dry here is a preparation that will do it good. It's simply just one part sweet oil and four parts benzine. The oil will darken the leather a little, but it will soon dry in and leave it the original color. The surplus oil may be removed by rubbing. Rub into the grain of the leather. This treatment four times a year will preserve both the life and the elasticity of leather furniture covering.

How to Clean White Felt Hats.

One girl whose income is so small that her friends wonder how she can afford to wear the light colored hats that are so becoming to her keeps them clean with artist's chalk. She lays in a supply of this chalk, which can be bought for a few cents and in different colors. Should a spot appear in a pink hat, for instance, it is immediately covered with pink chalk and laid in a dark place for several hours or, better yet, overnight. When the chalk was brushed off the spot usually comes along. A milliner is responsible for a somewhat heroic treatment of light felt hats. She says that when they become dirty she always rubs the surface with the finest sandpaper that can be found. Strange to say, this does not roughen the felt and does remove the dirt.

How to Make Gruel For Invalids.

Comparatively few cooks know how to make appetizing and wholesome gruel for invalids. One that is particularly nourishing and may be quite delicious is made from sago. Put two tablespoonfuls of sago into a double boiler and add a pint of cold water. Boil until it thickens, stirring constantly to prevent lumpiness or burning. Just before taking from the stove add a little sugar if sweetening is liked, and when cold flavor it with a tablespoonful of sherry. If wine is not used a little nutmeg can be sprinkled over the top before serving.

How to Make Pastry Shells.

An easy way to bake shells of pastry for pies or tarts is to fit the pastry over an inverted pie or gem pan. Prick the crust with a fork in several places to keep it close to the pan. Bake in a quick oven. It can easily be turned on to a plate for filling and has the advantage that any desired depth of shell can be easily managed.

How to Preserve House Plants.

Save all water in which meat has been washed to water house plants. It is an excellent fertilizer. A dying palm and several ferns were wonderfully revived by pouring about a teaspoonful of castor oil on the soil around the roots.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson IX.—First Quarter, For Feb. 27, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. vii, 13-29. Memory Verses, 13, 14—Golden Text, Matt. vii, 21—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Life eternal is the gift of God in Christ Jesus and can be obtained only as a free gift wholly apart from any works or merit of ours. But He came to give us not merely life, but life abundantly (Rom. vi. 23; John x, 10). All who have eternal life shall enter the kingdom, but there may be an abundant entrance into the kingdom (John iii, 3, 5; II Pet. i. 10, 11). There may be a saved soul and a lost life, a saved soul and no service to be rewarded, no crowns to cast at His feet, but such is not His desire for His redeemed (I Cor. iii. 11-15; II John 8; Rev. iv, 10). Concerning life as the gift of God, Jesus Christ Himself is the way, and the only way, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved (John xiv. 6; Acts iv, 12). While any one who will may enter through this strait gate upon this narrow way, comparatively few find it because few are willing to acknowledge themselves lost and deserving of hell and, pleading guilty, put all their trust in the precious blood of Christ.

The gate is entirely too strait for any who insist upon bringing with them a single shred of their own righteousness, and the way is too narrow to permit any but the Lord Himself and those who are wholly His to walk with us in it. Let us, however, praise God for the words "Him that cometh" and "whosoever will." In Luke xiii, 24, 25, we read that a time will come when many will seek to enter in and shall not be able, but that time is not yet, for the door is still open and the Lord waits to be gracious. He has not yet risen up to shut the door. The false prophets are abounding more than ever in these days, concerning whom the Lord said long ago, "I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran; I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied;" "They are prophets of the deceit of their own heart" (Jer. xxiii, 21, 26). Those who deny the supernatural birth of Christ or His deity or His suffering in the sinner's stead or His literal resurrection from the dead are not bearing messages from God, but from the great adversary. Yet multitudes are willingly deceived by the god of this world, who is in so many ways blinding the minds of them who believe not.

Many of those who deceive and are being deceived seem to bear a form of good fruit, but that cannot be good fruit in the sight of God which does not proceed from the True Vine. The Lord Jesus said that false Christs and false prophets should arise who would show great signs and wonders and, if possible, deceive the very elect (Matt. xxiv, 24). The Spirit through Paul said that Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light (II Cor. xi, 14).

While it is true that God gives eternal life as a free gift to all who truly believe, apart from any works of ours, as the Spirit teaches everywhere, yet it is equally true that no mere word of mouth which is not born of the heart amounts to anything, and where there is a living faith, a faith that saves, there will be a life corresponding. "Not every one that saith, but he that doeth." The light must shine, the works must be manifest, according to Eph. ii, 10; Tit. iii, 8. But these works must be works wrought by God through us; otherwise, however good they may seem to men, they will not stand. According to verse 22, there may be teaching and casting out demons and many wonderful works, but all disowned of God. Note carefully this teacher who says, "Many will say to me in that day; * * * then will I profess to them: I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." He is the same King who will say to some, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels" (xxv, 41). He is the appointed judge of all mankind, to whom every one shall give account, either at His judgment seat for believers or at the great white throne a thousand years later. Jesus is God, the only Saviour of sinners, the Great Head of the church, the Messiah of Israel, the King of kings and Lord of lords, the only one with whom we have to do, and with us it is a question of life or death.

Shall we hear His word and believe it and receive Him and live, or shall we turn our backs upon Him and His word and make lies our refuge and perish? His word is truth; He is the truth and the only foundation. All else is a lie and from the adversary, but His wrath shall sweep away the refuge of lies (Isa. xxviii, 16, 17). We are either in the ark and safe from the coming storm or outside and under the wrath of God. We do not wonder that the people recognized an unusual power in His words, for in Him was fulfilled the prophecy, "I will put My words in His mouth, and He shall speak them unto them all that I shall command Him" (Deut. xviii, 18). If we are His faithful messengers and will speak only His message we can count upon His honoring His own word, even as He assured Jeremiah (Jer. i, 7-9) and the apostles (Matt. x, 20, 40) and manifested it in Stephen and the others (Acts ii, 41; vi, 10; x, 44; xiv, 1).

SWANTON.

The last Sunday in February, 1910, found Swanton on its best behaviour, having several sermons during the day and in the evening, in different churches, two sermons in progress at the same hour.

In the United Brethren church, Rev. Mr. Johnson, pastor, Rev. Mr. Stoneking preached, as an introductory proclamation to protracted services in that building for an indefinite time.

Rev. Mr. Brumbaugh occupied the chancel of the George Chapel at which time notice was given of the following topics for the Swanton League each Sunday in March, being the four concluding Sundays in Lent:

First Sunday, "Trials before Courts under the Roman Jurisdiction;" second, "The Crucifixion;" third, "The Seven Words from the Cross;" fourth, "Easter Sunday, The Resurrection."

The winter just closing has been perhaps the most tenacious and unrelaxing known in Garrett during the last thirty-five years; in that long while there have been colder "snaps" but not so unremittingly cold, requiring such consumption of enormous quantities of forage and grain, both of which are unusually scarce and costly. But the tight strain on the farmer may be administering valuable lessons as many of them are procuring lime for reclamation of exhausted fields to avert a similar scarcity and paucity of cattle rations.

Garrett, so proudly and justly to the forefront of the apple producing counties of Maryland and of all States, is today about as actually depleted of that excellent fruit as she has ever been in her history.

Miss Rose Boyer, the diligent teacher of the Swanton public school, by probably too close application, is in weakened health and may before the expiration of the school term require a temporary relief and rest from her exacting duties.

We learn from many mentions in the public press, secular and religious, that the Rev. Horace Wood Stowell, known in Oakland no less than in Swanton, has resigned his charge at St. James' Episcopal church in Westernport to accept a call to Port Tobocco in the continguous Diocese of Washington. In these communities, and in the Maryland Diocese at large, the withdrawal of Mr. Stowell will be deeply regretted by friends and churchmen in Maryland where he is rightfully esteemed not only as one of the most faithful but as one of the most richly endowed among the influential clergy of this ancient see.

SHORT RUN.

We believe winter is almost over at last.

The farmers are preparing for a good sugar crop.

Mr. J. H. Wilson has bought an evaporator and expects to make more sugar than ever before.

Miss Jane Wilson is visiting her sister, Mrs. Junkins, at Keyser, W. Va.

Claude Harvey and family were visiting at Kitzmiller Sunday.

Miss Lois Harvey spent last week with friends at Kitzmiller.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Moon, of Eagle Rock, were the guests of J. H. Wilson last Friday.

Mr. Arthur Harvey, who has been attending school here, returned to his home at Kearney Saturday.

Mr. C. W. Harvey made a flying trip to Cumberland one day last week.

Miss Esta Wilson was the guest of Miss Nellie Harvey last Sundav.

Miss Cinda Wilson spent Saturday and Sunday at Kitzmiller.

Mr. Geo. W. Harvey made a flying trip to Elk Garden, W. Va., Sunday evening.

Mr. Arthur Harvey was visiting his "Uncle Dad" again Sunday night. Mr. Wilson seems to be Arthur's favorite uncle.

Mr. S. A. Moon, of Kurtz Chapel, was visiting relatives here Monday.

Mr. Scott Harvey spent Sunday at Elk Garden, W. Va.

Mr. Arlie Warnick, of Kitzmiller, was visiting friends here Sunday.

GORMAN.

Warm weather again, and sugar making will soon be the order of the day.

The long winter has made hay very scarce. Some people are very nearly out of feed now, with two months of feeding ahead of them.

Harry Shillingburg is very sick at this writing.

Rev. E. P. Idleman is holding a protracted metting at Bayard for Rev. Mr. Weese who has been sick for some time.

Burt Wilson, of Wilson, was in town one day last week. He is thinking of going to Leesburg, Fla., in the near future to build a house on a lot that he owns in that town.

James E. Moreland was in town last week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Moon were visiting friends at Stoyer one day last week.

Mrs. Mickey, at one time a resident of this place, died at her home in Bayard week before last.

The contemplated coal sale is moving slow.

Mark Moon is at home from Buckhannon for a few weeks to help his father make sugar.

BITTINGER.

Owners of sugar camps in this neighborhood are busy this week preparing to open their camps for the season which now seems to be upon us.

Henry Bittinger and family, recently of Norfolk, Va., are spending a few days with Mrs. Bittinger's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Stark of this place.

Rev. Alvin Yugel spent the first two days of this week attending to church matters at Oakland and Cumberland.

Silas Platter is reported to be still very ill from rheumatism and his entire family is down with the measles.

The ladies of the Lutheran congregation of this village held a box supper and ice cream festival in the basement of the parsonage on last Saturday evening and cleared a neat sum for church purposes.

The farmers of this section had a quantity of lime shipped in last week and we learn that several car loads are yet to come.

Elias Orendorf's sugar camp will be operated this season by Mr. Orval Glotfelty and Mr. Schroch and we heartily wish the young men success in their venture.

The entertainment given in the school house on last Tuesday evening, in commemoration of Washington's birthday, was largely attended and was a pleasant occasion for all who atterded.

Wilson Bittinger and family, of near Jennings, were visitors at John Stark's last Sunday.

"STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES."

Six Wonderful Bible Keys, by Pastor Russell of Brooklyn.

By now our readers doubtless feel well acquainted with Pastor Russell through his sermons, which we publish weekly in common with more than three hundred of the leading American and Canadian journals.

We are advised that many of our readers already have the Pastor's celebrated books in their homes and are using them effectively, to their delight and intellectual and spiritual profit. It must be so, since there are in circulation about three millions of copies of the first volume, "The Divine Plan." The Bible and Tract Society of Brooklyn, N. Y., publishes the volumes at cost price so as to secure for them a wide circulation. This brings them within the reach of all.

Set I., three vols. handsomely bound, over 1,100 pages, are supplied post or express charges prepaid, for $1

Set II., three vols. to match, nearly 1,900 pages, go for $1.20.

Such works, at such abnormally low rates, naturally attract some money-lovers who seek to sell for $10 (the two sets) what costs them but $2.20. The Bible and Tract Society desires to warn all that it is unnecessary to pay such a price;—that if Pastor Russell's "Studies in the Scriptures" can not be obtained otherwise more conveniently they will be pleased to supply all orders direct from Brooklyn Tabernacle at the prices given above.

Some Still Remember "Bill Arp."

Such will be interested in the "Southern Philosopher's" review of the first volume of Series I. He wrote some time before he died:—

"It is impossible to read this book without loving the writer and pondering his wonderful solution of the great mysteries that have troubled us all our lives. There is hardly a family to be found that has not lost some loved one who died outside the church—outside the plan of salvation, and, if Calvinism be true, outside of all hope and inside of eternal torment and despair. We smother our feelings and turn away from the horrible picture. We dare not deny the faith of our fathers, and yet can it be possible that the good mother and the wandering child are forever separated?—forever and forever?

"I believe it is the rigidity of these teachings that makes atheists and infidels and skeptics—makes Christians unhappy and brings their gray hairs down in sorrow to the grave—a lost child, a lost soul! * * *

"This wonderful book makes no assertions that are not well sustained by the Scriptures. It is built up stone by stone, and upon every stone is the text and it becomes a pyramid of God's love and mercy, and wisdom.

"There is nothing in the Bible that the author denies or doubts, but there are many texts that he throws a flood of light upon that seem to remove from them the dark and gloomy meaning. I see that editors of leading journals and many orthodox ministers of different denominations have endorsed it and have confessed to this new and comforting light that has dawned upon the interpretation of God's book. Then let every man read and ponder and take comfort, for we are all prisoners of hope. This is an age of advanced thought, and more thinking is done than ever before—men dare to think now. Light—more light—is the watchword."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson X.—First Quarter, For March 6, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. viii, 2-17. Memory Verses, 2, 3—Golden Text, Matt. viii, 17—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Dr. Scofield says in his notes on these chapters that the King, having in chapters v-vii declared the principles of the kingdom, makes proof in chapters viii and ix of his power to banish from the earth the consequences of sin and to control the elements of nature. He also says that the word "Lord" in verse 2 is used 663 times in the New Testament as the divine title of Jesus the Christ and is equivalent to the title "Adonai" in the Old Testament (Matt. iii. 3; iv. 7, 10; xxii. 43, 45). In future when quoting from these notes from his new edition of the Bible I will give his initials, C. I. S.

In speaking of the kingdom the Spirit says through the prophet, "The inhabitant shall not say I am sick; the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity;" "They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away" (Isa. xxxiii. 24; xxxv. 10). The kingdom of heaven, according to Dan. ii. 44, being at hand in the person and presence of the king, as declared by John the Baptist, Jesus Himself and the apostles (chapters iii. 2; iv. 17; x. 7), the King declares His power by a manifestation of several features of the kingdom. As we contemplate the righteousness of the kingdom as set forth in chapters v to vii and then the actual condition of things as they are about us in the world it is certainly a coming down to a much lower level, but it is to lift people up by the power of the King and His kingdom, and the multitudes are ready to hear of such a kingdom. Every form of physical suffering is suggestive of some disease of the soul, but nothing is quite so strikingly suggestive of sin as leprosy, which is so fully described in Lev. xiii and xiv. Sin is at the root of all our troubles. Can this man who in His teaching claims to be God do anything with leprosy? This leper believes that He can, but is not certain that He will. How the reply of Jesus must have filled him with an indescribable joy, "I will; be thou clean!" But these words came with the touch of Jesus, and with the touch and the words came the cleansing and the health immediately, and the outcast could return to his home and friends as a well man. That he may not think that his healer is in any sense contrary to the law of Moses he is told to show himself to the priest and offer the gift commanded. Well may we sing, "Unto Him that loveth us and hath washed us from our sins in His own blood."

His fame is spreading (are we helping to make Him known?), and now it is a centurion from Capernaum who has a servant sick of the palsy, grievously tormented. Luke, who was a physician, says that the man was ready to die, so that he must have been very sick. He also tells us that this servant was dear unto him and also that first of all the elders of the Jews came to Jesus on his behalf, saying that the centurion was worthy, that he loved the Jews and had built them a synagogue (Luke vii. 1-5). Jesus knew the centurion, as He knows all men and needs no testimony from any one concerning anybody (John ii. 24, 25), and He knew him to be a man with no thought of his own worthiness (verse 8 and Luke vii. 6, 7). He said, "I will come and heal him," and He went with them. As He neared the house the centurion sent friends to say that he did not consider himself worthy to have Jesus enter under his roof; but, inasmuch as he knew what it meant to obey and be obeyed, if Jesus would only say the word he was sure that his servant would be healed. Jesus marveled at the man and said to those who followed, "Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith; no, not in Israel" (verse 10). His word for the centurion was, "As thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee," and those who had been sent, returning to the house, found the servant whole. Such faith on the part of a gentile led the Lord Jesus to speak of the kingdom into which many gentiles from all the world will enter, while many who think they are entitled to the kingdom will be shut out by their unbelief.

The next instance of His power is in the house of Simon Peter, whose wife's mother is sick of a fever, but just the touch of His hand dispels the fever, and she is seen ministering unto them. Sin paralyzes our bodies or consumes them with burning, destroying desire, but He who takes away the result of sin by being made sin for us can also deliver from every manifestation of sin to the intent that we may minister unto Him. At even He cast out evil spirits from many with His word and healed all that were sick and thus fulfilled a word in Isaiah, "Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses" (16, 17).

It is often asked, Is the health of the body included in the atonement? We reply that the same great sacrifice which takes away our sins makes us sure of a perfect body just like His risen body, which shall never again be weak or sick or old or die, but that will be in the kingdom. All of His power which is seen in bodies now is but a foretaste of that which will be fully seen when He comes.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

WHEN nursing a grouch is a man's constant occupation he should be made to vary it by playing nurse to a strong, sturdy, self willed baby.

Some men are civilized simply because their mothers spanked them sufficiently.

We always feel that friends who are really fond of us have good taste to recommend them.

Goodness itself can't help a man who won't help himself.

Being young isn't the excuse and apology of an old fool.

Of course we all like an old fashioned winter, but we don't care to have it get too old on our hands.

Quality is what most of us want, and that without at all interfering with quantity.

An Occasional Treasure.

The perfect wife is one who will
Not ask a fellow for a bill,
Who takes what money he can spare
And doesn't cause him any care,
Who always keeps her temper sweet
And fixes things that he can eat,
One who is busy all the while
And always meets him with a smile.

She's not extravagant in dress,
She spends a trifle, sometimes less,
For garments, yet she looks as neat
As any lady on the street,
And you should see her hats, handmade
That put to shame the Paris trade,
And if each year she cannot get
A new one she will never fret.

Her temper is as smooth as ice,
She offers only sage advice,
And if it isn't taken, why,
She does not in a passion fly.
She has no hammer in her kit,
But just some steels with which to knit.
Nor does she hang across the gate
And gossip till the hour is late.

She keeps her husband's underwear
At all times in the best repair,
She doesn't gad about and try
To mash some smooth and wealthy guy,
In short, she is a model and
A credit to her home and land.
But, oh, it must a trial be
To live with her, you will agree!

Order of Publication

No. 1651 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

Annie Weir, Mary G. Green and John T. Green, he husband, vs. James McMillan, George B. McMillan and Elizabeth McMillan, his wife, Margaret Bell, Agnes Young, Margaret Chapman and Charles Chapman, her husband, Elizabeth Johnson and John Johnson, John McMillan and Mary McMillan, his wife, Hugh McMillan and Susan McMillan, his wife, Jane L. Green and Frank P. Green, her husband, James Henry McMillan and George McMillan.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate in Garrett County, Maryland, of which Margaret S. McMillan died, seized and possessed.

The bill states:

1. That Margaret Smith McMillan, late of Garrett county, deceased, was in her life time, and at the time of her death, seized and possessed in fee simple of a certain parcel of land, situate and lying in Garrett county, Maryland, being a part of Lot No. 4908, and which was conveyed to said Margaret Smith McMillan, by deed from Frank P. Green and wife, dated 31st day of March, 1894, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 24, folio 159 one of the land records of Garrett county, a certified copy of said deed is hereby filed, marked Plaintiffs Exhibit A, and is made a part of this bill.

2. That being so seized and possessed, the said Margaret Smith McMillan, departed this life on or about the 10th day of August, 1903, and leaving surviving her Hugh McMillan, her husband, who has since departed this life, and the following children, viz: Annie Weir, a daughter, who intermarried with James Weir, now deceased, Mary G. Green, a daughter, who intermarried with John T. Green, the said plaintiffs, George B. McMillan, a son, who intermarried with Elizabeth McMillan, James McMillan, a son, Margaret Bell, a daughter, who intermarried with Thomas Bell and now deceased, Agnes Young, a daughter, who intermarried with Isabel Young and now deceased, Elizabeth Johnson, a daughter, who intermarried with John Johnson, John McMillan, a son, married Mary McMillan, Hugh McMillan, a son, who married Susan McMillan, and the following grandchildren, and the children of William McMillan, a deceased son, viz: James Henry McMillan, George McMillan, Margaret Chapman, who intermarried with Charles Chapman, and Jane L. Green, who intermarried with Frank P. Green, the said defendants and all heirs at law of the said Margaret Smith McMillan, and to whom the said land has descended.

3. That all of the said parties are of full age and reside in the State of Maryland, except John McMillan and Mary McMillan, his wife, who reside in the State of Pennsylvania, and George McMillan, who resides in the State of Deaware, and Margaret Chapman and Charles Chapman, her husband, who reside in the State of West virginia.

4. That the said real estate estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interests therein as above stated, and that in order to make division of said interests, it will be necessary that said real estate be sold, and the proceeds thereof divided amongst the parties according to their several interests.

The bill then prays for the sale of said real estate and that the proceeds of the sale be distributed between the plaintiffs and defendants, according to their respective rights and interest, general relief, and order of publication against the non resident defendants.

It is thereupon this 28th day of February, 1910, ordered by the Circuit Court of Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 4th day of April, 1910 give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear it this Court in person or by solicitor on or before the 21st day of April next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

OAKLAND CITIZENS' MASS MEETING

At the Court House This Evening to Nominate Municipal Ticket.

A joint call, signed by the Democratic and Republican Central Committees for this county, has been issued for a meeting of the citizens of Oakland to be held this evening at 7:45 o'clock at the court house for the purpose of nominating a municipal ticket consisting of a candidate for Mayor and three candidates for members of the Town Council to be voted for next Monday, the 14th inst.

The object of this meeting is to place thorough going business men on the ticket for the positions to be filled, the elimination of politics from town matters and to endeavor to extricate the municipality from the uneviable position which it now occupies with a bonded indebtedness of $59,000.

It is the wish of every fair minded resident of the town to have none but reliable, painstaking and conscientious men nominated as that seems the only salvation open to the tax payers.

WOMAN OF TODAY.

It is said that the woman of today are not as intelligent and influential as the women of a previous century, who helped their husbands, with hand and brain, to carve out homes in the new world that were to draw people from all nations to witness and admire. They have better facilities for instruction, for leisure to read and reflect, and for ease and comfort, and yet men are not as deferential to them as the old-time gentlemen were to the matrons of that time. We clamor for more and get less. Why? If they are losing prestige, it is because they are losing intelligence and helpful qualities, and are not managing our homes and training our children in solid worth as they did. We never used to hear much about boys leaving the farm, or girls having to go out from home to earn money to dress themselves with. The love of finery and fashion had not been instilled; to pay one's debts was a higher achievement than to keep up style, and housewifely duties were deemed better than silks and velvets. Mart a Washington could receive guests in a linsey-wolsey gown and ply her busy knitting needles while she conversed with them. "As the twig is bent the tree is inclined." We have given our boys and girls the leaning towards what they are. Keep the child in dressed up idleness all his younger years; give him polished society training; graduate him at the best seat of learning; and then set him out in the world to earn money and establish a good home. Will he do it? He hasn't been in the way of doing it. We can't lay our hands on many successful people who came up that way. The school of life is broader and deeper than any set of text books can compass. Webster was right when he said, "observation and reflection is the way to intelligence," and without a fair degree of this commodity we must be failures everywhere.

CRUCIAL DAYS FOR MARYLAND DEMOCRATS

The Redemption of the Party Pledges Pressing.

These are crucial days for Democratic leaders both in and outside the legislature, for the legislative session is growing shorter and the Democratic party pledges are pressing for redemption. Bills fulfilling these pledges, which are embodied in the party platform, have been introduced into the General Assembly. Not one of them has been enacted into a law. Because Democratic leaders who are members of the legislature and other Democratic leaders who are not members are divided on some of these promises, on the range which the promises should take and in what garb they shall finally appear, there is every prospect that, if redeemed at all, they will be only semblances of their originally intended forms.

There has not been a real lineup between Governor Crothers, who is urging a strict redemption of party promises, and the leaders who are striving to devise liberal redemptions which will ease their party consciences and provide platitudes for future use on the stump.

The time is not distant when there must be a showdown and when the strength of the two forces will be actually known. That time may come next week, when the primary election law will offer the crucial test. It is approved by the Governor, who not only believes in its wisdom, but also as a party pledge, its enactment having been promised by the party in 1907. Two years ago the Governor tried to have the pledge redeemed in its entirety but failed, though not entirely. But for his insistent demands probably no primary election law would have been passed.

Democrats opposing a mandatory and state-wide primary now say that they are absolved from amending the present law so as to make it conform to the platform of 1907 because the platform of 1909, which is the last platform, imposes no such duty. They also say that an effort was made to insert the mandatory primary plank in the platform last year and failed by a decisive vote at the meeting of the Committee on Resolutions, the report of that committee being subsequently ratified by the convention. Members opposing the mandatory primary declare that they will not go into a caucus and there pledge themselves to vote for the bill. Mr. Marriott made an effort to have a caucus called to consider the bill and to secure a party vote on it, but his effort was futile. The bill will have the support of 13 Democratic members of the House because they are pledged to it, that pledge having been given at a meeting of candidates after their nomination and after the state convention had failed to declare for it. The defeat of the State-Wide Local Option Bill last week on which party lines were not drawn, will have its effect on the Primary Election Bill, because it will leave many members free to follow their own judgment. They see in the fight for the local option bill an attempt on the part of the city Democrats to force the bill on them, claiming that the city people could not trust the people to vote satisfactorily on the liquor question, and yet these same city Democrats say to the county people that they ought to follow their example and trust the people in making the nomination, all of which is a bunch of inconsistencies.

The Primary Election Bill and other bills, involved directly or indirectly in the platform promises of the Democrats, demonstrate the importance which in these days is attached to party platforms. Gone out of fashion is the old declaration that "platforms are good things to get in on, but bad things to stand on." And yet it is a question if too much importance is not attached to platform promises when the formation of those promises is considered. They are generally the products of the brain or ambition of one man, or certainly of a few men, or of newspaper agitation, which is one-sided and not lasting. These promises are not always fully and dispassionately considered, and when later viewed from all points they are found to lack public demand, are ill-advised and harmful to public interests. But if they are or may be twisted into platform promises they are sacredly regarded by most members of a General Assembly, who were successful in the campaigns in which these pledges were issues, and they hold rigidly by them. In the present General Assembly are men of the best motives, who will vote for the Primary Election Bill, not because they believe it will benefit the public or secure better nominations, but because they feel that they are pledged to it.

There are dozens of men who wish the bill creating a public utilities commission had died in the brain which conceived it, because it is a vicious, harmful, inquisitorial, imperialistic, undemocratic, expensive, wholly unnecessary, and a concentration of power in one body, but because a few men, who were wholly unfamiliar with the vast problems involved, thought the advocacy of the proposed commission would be a popular issue, it was made a part of the platforms of both parties. If the leaders had a chance to guide again the deliberations of the conventions which promised the bill, it is doubtful if they would have sanctioned the insertion of the planks. Certainly they would have defined their idea so that the present drastic bill could not have been construed even by the wayfaring man, though a fool, as a fulfilment of the party promise.

Even after the plank had been inserted in the party platforms and stump speakers were waving their arms and indulging in vituperation and platitudes the proposition was not discussed, nor was it discussed seriously until the Governor's cabinet looked into it. It was not dissected until the House Judiciary Committee had to deal with a bill creating the commission. A great white light was seen by many members, but, lo! there stood the platform promise, and despite the shortcomings, the absurdities and other undesirable features of the bill many members feel in honor bound to support it. It is because of the platform promise, which in some instances has been used as a club, the bill has a chance of becoming a law, though in a greatly modified form. They may be some Republicans who will support it because it is a platform promise, not realizing that the commission as proposed would, in competent Democratic hands, be a most powerful machine to grind the Republican party into pieces. There are independent Democrats who will stand for it, little realizing that the regular organization will control the commission and utilize it to bring them under the yoke.

There are Democratic lawyers in both houses who will subordinate their legal acumen and training and who will ignore their oath to support and defend the Constitution who will support it because they regard it as a party pledge, and yet the whole thing is unconstitutional because it delegates legislative functions to a body created by the legislature.

The Maryland Court of Appeals has declared itself against this principle in the case of Bradshaw vs. Lankford (73 Md., page 430). In that case the court said:

"Now it can hardly be necessary to say that, by the Constitution of this state, the power to enact laws belongs to the General Assembly, composed of the Senate and the House of Delegates; and this being so, it is a well-settled principle of constitutional law that the power thus delegated cannot be redelegated to the people themselves. Our government is a representative government, and to the members of the General Assembly the people have confided the power to pass such laws as they in the exercise of their judgment may deem best for the public interests; and they have no power to substitute the judgment of others in matters of legislation for the judgment of those to whom this sovereign trust has been committed."

Certainly the bills to repeal the exclusive privileges which the gas and affiliated companies have enjoyed for several years are in no way parts of the platforms of either party, and yet they are held forth as embodying party principles. The discovery of the great monopoly is surprising. The men who are now favoring the repeal bills have known of its existance for many years, but have made no effort to overthrow it.

The Democrats are beginning to dodge their promise of larger representation for Baltimore by substituting a bill propared by a county senator, Mr. Price, of Wicomico, for bills prepared by city senators which are in conformity with the platform promises. Again, Governor Crothers stands squarely by the party platform.

No Pay, No Paper.

The West Virginian is saying a long farewell to the cheap skate who takes the paper out of the office for two or three years and then when he gets a statement writes back in an insulting manner declaring "he never ordered the paper." The cash in advance system rids our books of such "undesirable citizens." And it is with considerable gratification that we drop them; it is a comfort to realize that we are able to do so. It is no pleasure to edit a paper for that kind of patrons.—Fairmont West Virginian.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. MARY HUGHES.

Last week THE REPUBLICAN, while being aware of the death of Mrs. Mary Hughes, in some manner neglected to mention the fact. The deceased lady was a most excellent woman of many Christian traits of character and her death on Sunday, February 27, came as a distinct shock to her many friends and relatives. She was the wife of Mr. John A. Hughes and died at her home west of Oakland after a continued illness of many months from rheumatism. She was aged about 50 years, and is survived by her husband, three brothers, Messrs. Owen, John and James Mackin, and one sister, Mrs. John Foley. Mrs. Hughes was born in county Galway, Ireland, in the year 1860. She came to this country in 1866. She was married on the 9th day of June, 1896, to John A. Hughes in St. Peter's Catholic church, Oakland, by Rev. Romanus Matting, then pastor of that church. The funeral took place Tuesday, February 29th, at ten o'clock from St. Peter's Catholic church, Oakland, Rev. Father Connell, the pastor, officiating. The interment was made in the Oakland cemetery in the presence of a large number of sorrowing friends and relatives.

WILLIAM BOND.

William Bond, of Brockwayville, Pa., father of Messrs. William C. and Ninian U. Bond, of Garrett county, died at his home in Brockwayville last Sunday morning. The deceased was past eighty-seven years of age. From the Monday edition of the DuBois Morning Courier the following relative to Mr. Bond was clipped:

Mr. Bond had resided in Brockwayville 17 years, but had been a resident of the vicinity for three quarters of a century, as he came with his parents from Adams county, this state, when quite young, and settled in Jefferson county a few miles from Brockwayville, in the district known as Sugar Hill. He went through the log house era and finally to affluence and distinction as a citizen who stood for the highest type of integrity. Besides being an extensive farmer for that section, he engaged in the lumbering and real estate business, and in each branch was successful through the exercise of good judgment and careful attention to points in detail in all transactions of moment. Not many names in Jefferson county in his day and generation were as well known throughout the county as "William Bond." His later years—since moving to Brockwayville, where he erected a fine home—he led a retired life, leaving the activities in connection with his affairs to his five sons. Mrs. Bond died seven years ago, ripe in years. The survivors of the family are five sons and daughters, as follows: William C., James L., John W., Samuel C. and N. U., and Mrs. Chapin and Mrs. George Gray. Two of these—Samuel C. and Mrs. Gray—are residents of Second avenue, DuBois.

ROSALIND CLARY.

Rosalind, the eighteen months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. S. Clary, residing on the Weber farm east of Oakland, died Sunday night of meningitis, after an illness of a week or more. The funeral took place yesterday with interment in the Deer Park cemetery.

Orphans' Court Proceedings.

The Orphans' Court was in session Tuesday morning with all members of the Court present and the following business was transacted:

Second account of William Weber, administrator of the estate of Eliza B. Swan, late of Garrett county deceased, ratified.

First and final account of William S. Yoder, administrator of Lydia Brenneman, late of Garrett county deceased, ratified.

Letters of administration upon the personal estate of Catharine Beachy, late of Garrett county deceased, were granted Jacob Beachy and Christian A. Beachy, of Grantsville.

POISON DISTRIBUTED

Yearly Occurrence in Oakland Again Being Practiced by Scoundrel.

Some being—surely not a human, or if a human, with principles very much undeveloped or still unborn—distributed along Third street Tuesday night or early yesterday morning a plentiful supply of poisoned meat, with the evident intent of killing dogs or any other animal unlucky enough to pick any portion of the doped meat up

A valuable setter dog belonging to Mr. William G. Hinebaugh was the only victim of the evil intentions of the party who put the poison out so far as learned. Other dogs, however, have disappeared.

Large quantities of the meat was gathered up along Third street yesterday morning by the police and these contained sufficient poison to kill all the dogs in the county if distributed systematically.

Developments came to the surface yesterday afternoon that may result in the arrest of a certain person who is suspected as being the guilty party.

Schools to Close.

Information from the School Board office is to the effect that the public schools of the county will close on April 1st, with one legal holiday intervening, Good Friday.

Fire Department Benefit.

The Fire Department, in which every one in our city is interested, has been fortunate enough to secure the favorite comedian, Mr. Frank S. Davidson, who, assisted by our local talent, will produce Mr. Davidson's favorite rural comedy, "The Folks Up Willow Creek," on Friday evening, April 8th. The full scenic equipment for the correct presentation of the play will be brought, and no expense will be spared to make this one of the very finest local productions ever attempted here. A crowded house will be the result. Our very efficient Fire Department deserves a rousing benefit and they will get it.

Festival.

The Ladies' Aid Society will hold a a festival in Laughlin Hall, Deer Park, on Saturday evening, March 12, 1910. Ice cream, cake, coffee, candy and flowers for sale.

Suit for Divorce.

Through her attorney, Mr. John G. Miller, of Cumberland, Mrs. Ettie Hamilton, of Garrett county, has filed suit in the Circuit Court for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, from her husband, Alexander Hamilton, who, in the bill, is alleged to be a non-resident and has deserted his wife. The couple were married in Oakland January 1st, 1899, and lived together for a period of three years.

Telephone Statement.

In another column of this paper today is published by direction of the Garrett County Telephone Company's officials, a detailed statement showing the financial condition of the corporation. The publication is made thus publicly so that all interested parties may be informed of the true state of the company's condition.

Card of Thanks.

We thank our friends and neighbors for their many acts of kindness and help during the sickness and death of our dear mother, Mrs. Mary A. Coddington.

MR. and MRS. BUNNEL FRIEND,

A Story of Graustark

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Prince Bobby broke in eagerly: "Uncle Jack says I've just got to be interested in 'em whether I want to or not. He says it's the only way to catch on to things and become a regular prince. You see, Uncle Caspar, I've got a lot to learn."

"Yes, your highness, you have," solemnly admitted the premier. "But I am sure you will learn."

"Under such an able instructor as Uncle Jack you may soon know more than the wisest man in the realm," added the Duke of Perse.

"Thank you, your grace," said the prince so politely that the duke was confounded. "I know Uncle Jack will be glad to hear that. He's—he's afraid people may think he's butting in too much."

"Butting in!" gasped the premier.

At this the Duke of Perse came to his feet again, an angry gleam in his eyes. "My lords," he began hastily, "it must certainly have occurred to you before this that our beloved prince's English, which seems, after all, to be his mother tongue, is not what it should be. Butting in! Yesterday I overheard him advising your son, Pultz, to 'go chase' himself. And when your boy tried to chase himself—'pon my word he did—what did our prince say? What did you say, Prince Robin?"

"I—I forget," stammered Prince Bobby.

"You said 'Mice!' Or was it—er"—

"No, your grace; rats. I remember. That's what I said. That's what all of us boys used to say in Washington."

"God deliver us! Has it come to this—that a prince of Graustark should grow up with such language on his lips? That confounded American has every one hypnotized!" exploded the duke. "His influence over this boy is a menace to our country. He is making an oaf of him—a slangy, impudent little"—

"Your grace!" interrupted Baron Dangloss sharply.

"Uncle Jack's all right," declared the prince, vaguely realizing that a defense should be forthcoming.

"He is, eh?" rasped the exasperated duke, mopping his brow.

"He sure is," pronounced the prince with a finality that left no room for doubt.

"He is a mountebank, a meddler, that's what he is!" exclaimed the overheated duke.

But the prince had slid down from his pile of books and planted himself beside him so suddenly that the bitter words died away on the old man's lips.

"You awful old man!" he cried, trembling all over, his eyes blazing. "Don't you say anything against Uncle Jack. I'll—I'll banish you—yes, sir—banish you like my mother fired Count Marlanx out of the country. I won't let you come back here—never. And before you go I'll have Uncle Jack give you a good licking. Oh, he can do it, all right! I—I hate you!"

The duke looked down in amazement into the flushed, writhing face of his little master. For a moment he was stunned by the vigorous outburst. Then the hard lines in his face relaxed, a softer expression came into his eyes, and he smiled kindly on the boy.

But Prince Bobby was still unappeased. "I could have you beheaded," he said stubbornly. "Couldn't I, Uncle Caspar?"

The Duke of Perse suddenly bent forward and placed his bony hand upon the unshrinking shoulder of the prince, his eyes gleaming kindly, his voice strangely free from its usual harshness. "You are a splendid little man, Prince Robin," he said. "I glory in you. I shall not forget the lessor in loyalty that you have taught me."

Bobby's eyes filled with tears. The genuine humility of the hard old man touched his tempestuous little heart.

"It's—it's all right, du—your grace. I'm sorry I spoke that way too."

As the prince strode soberly from the "room of wrangles" every eye was upon his sturdy little back, and there was a kindly light in each of them, bar none.

Later on the prince in his khaki riding suit loped gayly down the broad mountain road toward Ganlook beside the black mare which carried John Tullis. He had told Tullis of his vainglorious defense in the antechamber.

"Say, Uncle Jack, when are you going to take me to the witch's hovel?" The thought abruptly banished all else from his eager little brain.

"Some day soon," said Tullis. "You see, I'm not sure that she's receiving visitors these days. A witch is a very arbitrary person. Even princes have to send up their cards."

The witch's hovel was in the mountain across the most rugged of the canyons and was to be reached only after the most hazardous of rides. The old woman of the hills was an ancient character about whom clung a thousand spookish traditions, but who, in the opinion of John Tullis, was nothing more than a wise fortune teller and necromancer who knew every trick in the trade of hoodwinking the superstitious.

As they rode back to the castle after an hour, coming down through Castle avenue from the monastery road, they passed a tall, bronzed young man whom Tullis at once knew to be an American. He was seated on a big bowlder at the roadside enjoying the shade. At his side was the fussy, well known figure of Cook's interpreter eagerly pointing out certain important personages to him as they passed. Of course the approach of the prince was the excuse for considerable agitation and fervor on the part of the man from Cook's. He mounted the bowlder and took off his cap to wave it frantically.

"It's the prince!" he called out to Truxton King. "Stand up! Hurray! Long live the prince!"

The man from Cook's came to grief. He slipped from his perch on the rock and came floundering to the ground.

The spirited pony that the prince was riding shied and reared in quick affright. The boy dropped his crop and clung valiantly to the reins. A guardsman was at the pony's head in an instant.

Truxton King picked up the riding crop, strode out into the roadway and handed it up to the boy in the saddle.

"Thank you," said Prince Bobby.

"Don't mention it," said Truxton King, with his most engaging smile. "No trouble at all."

CHAPTER III

MANY PERSONS IN REVIEW.

TRUXTON KING witnessed the review of the garrison. That in itself was rather a tame exhibition for a man who had seen the finest troops in all the world. A thousand earnest looking soldiers, proud of the opportunity to march before the little prince, and that was all, so far as the review was concerned.

Mr. King saw the court in all its glory scattered along the shady Castle avenue—in carriages, in traps, in motors and in the saddle. His brain whirled and his heart leaped under the pressure of a new found interest in life.

If Truxton King had given up in disgust and fled to Vienna this tale would never have come to light. Instead of being the lively narrative of a young gentleman's adventures in faraway Graustark, it might have become a tale of the smart set in New York, for, as you know, we are bound by tradition to follow the trail laid down by our hero, no matter which way he elects to fare. He confided to his friend from Cook's that he could never have forgiven himself if he had adhered to his resolution to leave on the following day.

"I didn't know you'd changed your mind, sir," remarked Mr. Hobbs in surprise.

"Of course you didn't know it," said Truxton. "How could you? I've just changed it this instant. I didn't know it myself two minutes ago. No, sir, Hobbs—or is it Dobbs? Thanks. No, sir, I'm going to stop here for a—well, a week or two. Where the dickens do these people keep themselves? I haven't seen 'em before."

"Oh, they are the nobility—the swells. They don't hang around the streets like tourists and rubbernecks, sir," in plain disgust.

"I say, who is that just passing—the lady in the victoria?" King asked abruptly.

"That is the Countess Marlanx."

"Whew! I thought she was the queen."

Hobbs went into details concerning the beautiful countess.

"I was just going to ask if you know anything about a young woman who occasionally tends shop for William Spantz, the armorer," King finally asked.

Hoobs looked interested. "She's quite a beauty, sir, I give you my word."

"I know that, Hobbs. But who is she?"

"I really can't say, sir. She's his niece, I've heard. Been here a little over a month. I think she's from Warsaw."

"Well, I'll say goodby here. If you've nothing on for tomorrow we'll visit the castle grounds and—ahem!—take a look about the place. Come to the hotel early. I'm going over to the gunshop."

He was whistling gayly as he entered the little shop, ready to give a cheery greeting to old Spantz and to make him a temporizing offer for the broadsword. But it was not Spantz who stood behind the little counter. Truxton flushed hotly and jerked off his hat. The girl smiled.

"I beg pardon," he exclaimed. "I—I'm looking for Mr. Spantz. I"—

"He is out. Will you wait." She turned to the window, resuming the wistful, preoccupied gaze down the avenue.

"Beg pardon," he said politely. "I wanted to have another look at the broadsword there."

Very quickly—he noticed that she went about it clumsily despite her supple gracefulness—she withdrew the heavy weapon from the window and laid it upon the counter.

"I am not—not what you would call an expert," she said frankly.

"What's the price?" he asked, his courage faltering under the cool, impersonal gaze.

"I do not know. My uncle has told you. I am quite new at the trade. I hope you will excuse my ignorance. My uncle will be here in a moment." She was turning away with an air that convinced King of one thing—she was a person who in no sense had ever been called upon to serve others.

"So I've heard," he observed. The bait took effect. She looked up quickly. He was confident that a startled expression flitted across her face.

"You have heard? What have you heard of me?" she demanded.

Mr. King was inspired to fabricate in the interest of psychical research. "I have heard that you are not the niece of old man Spantz." He watched intently to catch the effect of the declaration.

"WHAT HAVE YOU HEARD OF ME?"

"You have heard nothing of the kind," she said coldly.

"Well, I'll confess I haven't," he admitted cheerfully. "It pleases me to deduce that you are not related to the armorer. You don't look the part."

Now she smiled divinely. "And why not, pray? His sister was my mother."

"In order to establish a line on which to base my calculations, would you mind telling me who your father is?" He asked the question with his most appealing smile, a smile so frankly impudent that she could not resent it.

"My father is dead," she said seriously, "and my mother is dead. Now can you understand why I am living here with my uncle? Even an amateur may rise to that. Now, sir, do you expect to purchase the sword? If not I shall replace it in the window."

"That's what I came here for," said he, resenting her tone and the icy look she gave him.

"I gathered that you came in the capacity of Sherlock Holmes or something else." She added the last three words with unmistakable meaning.

She was leaning toward him, her hands on the counter, a peculiar gleam in her dark eyes, which now for the first time struck him as rather more keen and penetrating than he had suspected before.

"I simply want to tell you, Mr. King, that unless you really expect to buy this sword it is not wise in you to make it an excuse for coming here."

"My dear young lady, I"—

"My uncle has a queer conception of the proprieties. He may think that you come to see me. Young men may chat with shopgirls all the world over, but in Edelweiss, no, unless they come to pay most honorable court to them. My uncle would not understand."

"I take it, however, that you would understand," he said boldly.

"I have lived in Vienna, in Paris and in London, but now I am living in Edelweiss. I have not been a shopgirl always."

"I can believe that. My deductions are justified."

"My uncle is returning," she remarked suddenly. "I must not talk to you any longer." She glanced uneasily out upon the square and then hurriedly added, a certain wistfulness in her voice and eyes: "I couldn't help it today. I forgot my place. But you are the first gentleman I've spoken to since I came here."

When Spantz entered the door the girl was going listlessly from the window and Truxton King was leaning against the counter with his back toward her, his arms folded and a most impatient frown on his face. Spantz's black eyes shot from one to the other. "What do you want?" he demanded sharply.

"The broadsword. And, say, Mr. Spantz, you might assume a different tone in addressing me. I'm a customer, not a beggar."

The girl left the window and walked slowly to the rear of the shop, passing through the narrow door, without so much as a glance at King or the old man. Spantz was silent until she was gone.

"You want the broadsword, eh?" he asked, moderating his tone considerably. "It's a rare old"—

"I'll give you a hundred dollars—not another cent," interrupted King, not yet over his resentment. There followed a long and irritating argument, at the conclusion of which Mr. King became the possessor of the weapon at his own price.

"I'll come in again," he said indifferently.

"But you are leaving tomorrow, sir."

"I've changed my mind."

"Then you have discovered something in Edelweiss to attract you?" grinned the old armorer.

"I dare say you're right. Clean that sword up a bit for me, and I'll drop in tomorrow and get it. Here's 60 gavvos to bind the bargain—the rest on delivery. Good day, Mr. Spantz."

"Good day, Mr. King."

"How do you happen to know my name?"

Spantz put his hand over his heart and delivered himself of a most impressive bow. "When so distinguished a visitor comes to our little city," he said, "we lose no time in discovering his name. It is a part of our trade, sir, believe me."

"I'm not so sure that I do believe you," said Truxton King to himself as he sauntered up the street toward the hotel.

Mr. Hobbs, from Cook's, was at his elbow, his eyes glistening with eagerness.

"I say, old Dangloss is waiting for you at the Regengetz, sir. Wot's up? Wot you been up to, sir?"

"Up to—up to, Hobbs?"

"My word, sir, you must have been or he wouldn't be there to see you."

"Who is Dangloss?"

"Minister of police. Haven't I told you? He's a keen one, too, take my word for it. I heard him ask for you."

He lost no time in getting to the hotel. A well remembered, fierce looking little man in a white linen suit was waiting for him on the great piazza.

Baron Jasto Dangloss was a polite man, but not to the point of procrastination. He advanced to meet the puzzled American, smiling amiably and swirling his imposing mustache with neatly gloved fingers.

"I have called, Mr. King, to have a little chat with you," he said abruptly. He enjoyed the look of surprise on the young man's face. "Won't you join me at this table? A julep will not be bad, eh?" King sat down opposite to him at one of the piazza tables in the shade of the great trailing vines. A waiter took the order and departed.

"Now, to come to the point," began the baron. "You expected to leave tomorrow. Why are you staying over?"

"Baron, I leave that to your own distinguished powers of deduction," said Truxton gently. He took a long pull at life straw, watching the other's face as he did so. The baron smiled.

"You have found the young lady in the gunshop to be very attractive," observed the baron. "Where have you known her before?"

"I beg pardon?"

"It is not unusual for a young man in search of adventure to follow the lady of his choice from place to place. She came but recently, I recall."

"You think I knew her before and followed her to Edelweiss?"

"I am not quite sure whether you have been in Warsaw lately. There is a gap in your movements that I can't account for."

King became serious at once. He saw that it was best to be frank with this keen old man.

"Baron Dangloss, I don't know just what you are driving at, but I'll set you straight, so far as I'm concerned. I never saw that girl until the day before yesterday. I never spoke to her until today."

"She smiled on you quite familiarly from her window casement yesterday," said Dangloss coolly.

"She laughed at me, to be perfectly candid. But what's all this about?"

Dangloss leaned forward and smiled sourly.

"Take my advice—do not play with fire," he said enigmatically.

"You—you mean she's a dangerous person? I can't believe that, baron."

"She has dangerous friends out in the world. She is Olga Platanova. Her mother was married in this city twenty-five years ago to Professor Platanova of Warsaw. The professor was executed last year for conspiracy. He was one of the leaders of a great revolutionary movement in Poland. They were virtually anarchists, as you have come to place them in America. This girl Olga was his secretary. His death almost killed her. But that is not all. She had a sweetheart up to fifteen months ago. He was a prince of the royal blood. He would have married her in spite of the difference in their stations had it not been for the intervention of the crown that she and her kind hate so well. The young man's powerful relatives took a hand in the affair. He was compelled to marry a scrawny little duchess, and Olga was warned that if she attempted to entice him away from his wife she would be punished. She did not attempt it, because she is a virtuous girl. Her uncle, Spantz, offered her a home."

"Baron, are you sure that she is a red?" asked King.

"Quite. She attended their councils."

"She doesn't look it, 'pon my word. I thought they were the scum of the earth."

"The kind you have in America are. But over here—oh, well, we never can tell."

"I'm much obliged. And I'll keep my eyes well opened. I suppose there's no harm in my going to the shop to look at a lot of rings and knickknacks he has for sale?"

"Not in the least. Confine yourself to knickknacks, that's all."

"Isn't Spantz above suspicion?"

"No one is in my little world. By the way, I am very fond of your father. He is a most excellent gentleman and a splendid shot."

Truxton stared harder than ever "What's that?"

"I know him quite well. Hunted wild boars with him five years ago in Germany. And your sister! She was a beautiful young girl. They were at Carlsbad at the time. Was she quite well when you last heard?"

"She was," was all that the wondering brother could say.

The baron left the American standing at the head of the steps, gazing

"TAKE MY ADVICE—DO NOT PLAY WITH FIRE," HE SAID.

after his retreating figure with a look of admiration in his eyes.

Truxton fared forth into the streets that night with a greater zest in life than he had ever known before. A man with a limp cigarette between his lips was never far from the side of the American—a man who had stopped to pass the time of day with William Spantz and who from that hour was not to let the young man out of his sight until another relieved him of the task.

CHAPTER IV.

TRUXTON TRESPASSES.

THERE was a sparkle in King's eyes as he struck out across town after breakfast the next morning. He burst in upon Mr. Hobbs at Cook's.

"Say, Hobbs, how about the castle today—in an hour, say? Can you take a party of one rubbernecking this morning? I want you to get me into the castle grounds today and show me where the duchesses dawdle and the countesses cavort."

"Of course, sir, you understand there are certain parts of the park not open to the public. The grotto and the playgrounds and the Basin of Venus"—

"I'll not trespass, so don't fidget, Hobbs. I'll be here for you at 10."

Truxton hurried to the square and across it to the shop of the armorer, not forgetting, however, to look about in some anxiety for the excellent Dangloss, who might, for all he knew, be snooping in the neighborhood. Spantz was at the rear of the shop talking to a customer. The girl was behind the counter, dressed for the street.

She came quickly out to him, a disturbed expression in her face. As he doffed his hat the smile left his lips. He saw that she had been weeping.

"You must not come here, Mr. King," she said hurriedly in low tones. "Take your broadsword this morning, and please, for my sake, do not come again. I—I may not explain why I am asking you to do this."

"Just a minute, please," he interrupted. "I've heard your story from Baron Dangloss. Are you in trouble? Do you need friends, Miss Platanova?"

"The baron has told you all about me?" She smiled sadly. "Alas, he has only told you what he knows. But it should be sufficient. There is no place in my life for you or any one else. There never can be. Do you question me? I can say no more. Now I must be gone. I—I have warned you. Do not come again."

She slipped into the street and was gone. King stood in the doorway, looking after her, a puzzled gleam in his eyes. Old Spantz was coming up from the rear, followed by his customer.

"Hello, Mr. Spantz! Good morning. I'm here for the sword."

The old man glared at him in unmistakable displeasure. Truxton began counting out his money. The customer, a swarthy fellow, passed out of the door, turning to glance intently at the young man. A meaning look and a sly nod passed between him and Spantz. The man halted at the corner below and later on followed King to Cook's office, afterward to the castle gates, outside of which he waited until his quarry reappeared. Until King went to bed late that night this swarthy fellow was close at his heels, always keeping well out of sight himself.

A SWARTHY FELLOW PASSED OUT OF THE DOOR.

"I'll come in soon to look at those rings," said King, placing the notes on the counter. Spantz merely nodded, raked in the bills without counting them and passed the sword over to the purchaser.

Truxton picked up the weapon and stalked away.

A few minutes later he was on his

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

THE woman who has a capable dressmaker and an artistic milliner may not be beautiful, but nobody knows it.

Having a good conscience is in itself often a great tribute to one's ability to manage things and keep them from bothering.

Some people think that they are right and then go ahead, while others just think that they are tight.

Women can't help being fussy. They know that it is up to them to please the men.

A beautiful blond has her own troubles staying blond once she has attained to that condition.

Proportion.

Size does not always stand for poise,
Nor can a giant hold
His temper and his tongue and watch
Events as they unfold.
A large and well developed man,
The prey of circumstance,
May fuss about a little thing
Not worth a second glance.

A statesman who can sway a crowd
Or hold a mob in awe
And make the court sit up and look
When he expounds the law
Will raise the roof and forty kinds
Of trouble like as not
If when he takes his morning meal
The coffee isn't hot.

It is a sight worth looking at
And going miles to see,
A picture from a funny page,
As you will all agree,
When Mr. Worth-a-Million-Bones,
Whose wealth is as the dirt,
Can't make his collar button fit
The collar on his shirt.

The little worries that annoy
And almost drive to drink
Are worth wasting words and time,
Much less a drop of ink.
A man may calmly see destroyed
The products of his skill
And make the biggest kind of fuss
If some one calls him "Bill."

Quite Right.

"What is meant by being an egotist?"

"Being an egotist?"

"Yes.'"

"Oh, it means being just yourself, old man."

Disillusionized.

"When does the honeymoon end?"

"Oh, yes; I was going to tell you about that. You know we have had several explanations, but the real time when the glamour is over and they settle down to the battle of life is when the messenger calls for the dress suit in which the man was married."

The Reason.

"Does he make trouble at home?"

"Not a bit."

"That shows he has rather a nice temper."

"Not necessarily."

"Why not?"

"Because he never is at home."

The Brute.

"I wish to marry your daughter, sir."

"You do?"

"Yes."

"Then you are in luck."

"I hope so, sir."

"Yes, you are, for she intends to marry you."

Progression.

At four the boy would think it fine
To be conductor on the line.
At six he has a larger plan;
He wants to be the motorman.
At ten, as he has grown more wise,
A barn boss would be just his size.
When fifteen years have taken wing
He wants to own the blooming thing.
At twenty his ambition sides
To own the earth on which it glides.

Had Cause For Doubt.

"Is that Justice with the pair of scales?"

"Certainly!"

"I'll bet it is a long while since the city inspector of weights and measures has put his O. K. on them."

How Could He?

"Do you ever save any money?"

"No; certainly not."

"You should."

"I should be glad to, but I never caught a dollar hollering to me to come and rescue it."

He Knew.

"You can't keep a good man"—

"I know you are going to say you can't keep a good man in this office and then say you don't know why. I can tell you why. You don't pay enough."

Honest About It.

"Do you like to work?"

"Very much, indeed."

"That's encouraging. What is your line?"

"Easy marks."

Called Out Their Food.

"Is he rough with the men?"

"He orders them about like cattle."

"What does he say to them?"

"Hey!"

THE EARTH LARGER THAN WAS SUPPOSED

Government Scientists Fix Its Circumference Within About Forty Feet.

Recent computations by the experts of the United States Geodetic Survey, and reported to the Cambridge Conference of the International Geodetic Association, indicate that the earth is slightly larger than has been heretofore supposed by scientists. The flattening at the poles is also found to be somewhere between the previous estimates of Clarke and of Bessel. The semi-diameter or equatorial radius of the globe can now be calculated within less than 6 feet of its true length—which means that the equatorial circumference can now be determined to within less than 40 feet of its true length. To be exact, the possible error is only 18 meters as to the equatorial radius or semi-diameter. A meter is 39.27 English inches. Multiply 39.27 by 18 and the result by 2, and that result by 3.1416 and the last product is the limit of error in the circumference of the earth.

This precise measurement of the dimensions of the earth has been made possible by the extension of the continuous area in the United States covered by geodetic surveys on uniform basis. The continuous triangulation available on one basis in the United States now extends into 41 of the 48 States and Territories and reaches from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Mexico to Canada. Prof. John F. Hayford, late chief of the Computing Division of the Government Geodetic Survey, and now Director of the School of Engineering of Northwestern University, says that by utilizing this triangulation and the accompaning astronomic observations, new methods of increased accuracy have been introduced, by which the experts have computed the value of the equatorial radius of the earth at 6,378,388 meters. The reciprocal of the flattening of the earth at the poles is found to be 297.0. These values are believed to be more accurate than any hitherto derived, even by combining the observations available in foreign countries.

One of the most important features of the new method of computation used in the United States, says Prof. Hayford, is the definite recognition of the theory of isostasy in the computation. Let all material forming a part of the earth, and lying above sea level, be considered the excess surface. Then, according to the theory of isostasy, every surface excess is compensated for by a defect of density in the material directly below it, this defect of density being understood to extend to considerable depth and to be of such amount as to compensate for the excess. Under these conditions, at the depth to which the compensation extends, the material within the earth is in an isostatic condition—the pressures being the same in all directions at any given point, as in a liquid.

According to this theory the average density of the earth's crust under a mountain or a high plateau is less than under a plain lying at about sea level. On the other hand, the average density under the deep parts of the ocean is considerably greater.

The latest evidence from the geodetic observations in the United States, says Professor Hayford, is convincing that the theory of isostasy is true, and the triangulation and astronomic observations used in determining the figure and size of the earth also seem to fix the depth to which the compensation extends at 122 kilometers, or about 75 miles. These computation as the thickness of the earth's so-called crust have been corroborated by the independent computation of Dr. Helmert, based on European observation. He found a value for the depth of the compensation differing by only two kilometers from the American computation. Such a close agreement indicates that the depth of compensation is now known with considerable accuracy. The intensity of gravity at 56 geodetic stations in the United States and 16 abroad also indicate that the condition called isostasy exists.

The International Geodetic Association has for the last 10 years operated six or more observatories continuously to determine the variations of latitudes or the movement of the pole of rotation of the earth.

At present eight stations are in operation, two in the Southern Hemisphere. Three of the stations are in the United States, at Gaithersburg, Md.; Cincinnati, and Ukiah, California. The motion of the pole is now known with great accuracy, its location on any given night in the last 10 years being known within four feet. Little progress is being made, though, in explaining why the pole moves in this particular way. These observations will be continued for at least three years more.

CHINESE COTTON

Japanese Trying to Improve Its Quality to Compete With our Product

Japanese cotton manufacturers are working earnestly to improve the quality of cotton grown in China so that they will not be dependent on the American grown product.

According to Vice-Consul Heintzleman of Shanghai, a Japanese firm close to the Chinese government began experiments last year at Kangwang, province of Kiangsu, with cottonseed obtained from several countries. Seeds from India and Japan gave poor results. The American seed, however, has produced a cotton greatly superior to the native.

The staple is good, but the color owing to heavy rains is poor. If future trials are successful seeds will be distributed to the farmers gratis. The Japanese hope in this way to procure a cotton of American grade which they can purchase at low price and lay down in their own country with small cost of transportation. This accomplished, American cotton will only be bought by Japan when her requirements exceed China's production.

Most of the cotton is grown on small farms of five to seven acres. The whole family, says the journal of the American Asiatic Association, engages itself in the cultivating and works as many as twelve hours a day. If the work exceeds the capacity of the family coolies are hired at 16 cents a day.

The implements used in the cultivation are of a rude type. The wooden frame with an iron blade is drawn by cows and buffaloes. The hoe used corresponds to the American adze. The method used in raising water for irrigation is by a pump consisting of a string of cups, sometimes operated by animals. A rude sickle is used for cutting. Transportation about the fields is done on human backs while the haul to the market is done by wheelbarrow.

Small ditches fed by creeks surround the fields for irrigation. The ground is broken twice a year, in spring and autumn. The plants grow to six or seven feet in height and the crop is gathered in September or October. About 60 per cent. of the cotton is manufactured by native process. In the treaty ports most of the cotton is sold to foreign manufacturers.

The shipment of American cotton in to China can be accomplished only when the crop is poor. Even then most of the cotton is brought in from India. The American cotton is too expensive to compete with the local product.

The Oleo Right.

Anticipating an attempt this winter by congress to repeal the Grout bill, which places a tax of 10 cents a pound on oleo colored in imitation of butter, the national grange instructed its legislative committee to use every effort to prevent such action and, furthermore, to keep each subordinate grange in the United States acquainted with the progress of the campaign and to secure their co-operation and influence.

INDIAN IDOLS BRING ILL LUCK TO A MINISTER

English Vicar of a Rural Parish Made Unhappy by Their Presence.

A strange tale of superstition in a minister of the English Church comes from Leicestershire, England. The vicar of a rural parish is the unhappy possessor of some Indian idols which he inherited from his father, an officer in the English army in India, which greatly disturbs his peace of mind. The possession of them has always worried him, he confesses, and now that his brother has just received a mysterious letter from India, warning him to "remember the judgment of the gods," he has asked a London paper to relieve him of the idols.

"These idols have brought persistent ill luck. My father was one of the most unlucky of men," he says, "and during the seventeen years I have had these weird objects nothing has seemed to go right with me or my affairs. Ten years ago my brother was staying at Lyndhurst, in the New Forest, when a Hindu came to him and asked him about the idols my father brought home. He named my father and had evidently traced his career from his subaltern days. My brother said he had no idols himself and laughed when the Indian grew very solemn and declared that misfortune would accompany the idols everywhere until they were returned to India.

"He told my brother to give this message to their possessor, but said that he would not demand to know who had the idols for ten years to come. A few days ago he received a letter from India, ten years after the Lyndhurst interview, simply saying, 'Remember the judgment of the gods.' By the same mail came a letter from London announcing that his wife had suddenly had a paralytic stroke. This scared him so dreadfully that he has written me the whole story, for he feels now that in not having disclosed my own and my sister's ownership of three of them he has incurred the wrath of the Indian society which seeks the idols.

"Of course, I myself regard it all as a serious coincidence, but the whole family wants to be rid of the idols as soon as possible.

"They are supposed to be connected with the Jains and to date from not later than 300 B. C., and possibly to be 500 years older."

There is no more democratic clergyman in all England than the Bishop of Liverpool, who is especially fond of associating with the workingmen of his diocese. The other day he invited all the workers of the Cunard Line to meet him in one of the huge workshops of the company and here he preached a special sermon to engineers, boiler-makers, smiths and other mechanics, who listened to him with the utmost attention. Some hugged the warm corner of the smithy hearths, where they finished their midday meal or smoked their pipes. Others stepped boldly out and joined heartily in the hymns led by a harmonium brought from one of the Cunard liners.

From the moment the Bishop began he held them in complete grip. He gave them as a motto "He careth for you." From the first to the last there was not a touch of patronage in the Bishop's message, while the men were quick to note and to appreciate the absence from it of the least nambypambyism. Cheering was indulged in when the Bishop had finished, and the general feeling of the men was well expressed by one smith, who remarked, as he began to renew his dormant fire, "Well, he's one of the best."

A remarkable case was heard recently before the Worcestershire Sessions. Robert Fellows, colliery proprietor, was charged with stealing five thousand tons of coal belonging to Frank Hopkins, of Cradley. The allegation was that over a period of many months Fellows worked coal under land owned by Hopkins which adjoined his own, taking a total quantity which could not be ascertained, probably 10,000 tons. The amount taken daily was, it was said, twenty tons. Under the prosecutor's land is the richest vein of coal in the United Kingdom, if not in the whole world.

BEAUTIFY THE YARD.

A Town and Its Inhabitants Often Judged by Appearances.

Flowers are not only beautiful to look upon, but their influence is wholly refining; the cost of a few seeds is trifling, and the labor involved becomes not only labor, but a keen and healthgiving pleasure, says an authority. There is no good excuse why every householder with a yard should not beautify it, not necessarily with costly flowers like orchids and some others, but according to their means, if with but a few violets, pinks, geraniums and nasturtiums. A town is judged by strangers by the appearance it presents. If in passing through the predominating streets he notes the dirty alley, heaps of refuse and tin cans and ill kept yards, he judges the town and its people accordingly. If, on the other hand, he finds cleanliness, nicely kept lawns and gardens gay with flowers, he is impressed with it as a prosperous, inviting town, peopled by wide awake, progressive, cultured inhabitants. Impressions count for a great deal.

Muco-Solvent is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contagious germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to THURSDAY, MARCH 10, 1910.

MUST KNOW SOMETHING.

Every now and then some superficial observer ventures the opinion that the opportunities for men to rise in their callings and professions are limited now as compared with the days when our forefathers were engaged in the conquest of the wilderness. President Northrup who is just retiring from a service of more than thirty years as president of Minnesota university, does not agree with the proposition except in so far as it relates to the men and women who have for any reason failed to prepare themselves for the work which they undertake to do.

In his farewell address to the students at Minneapolis, President Northrup said:

I don't think there has ever been a time when the opportunities for young people were as good as they are now. The rapid growth of the country along every line is furnishing many opportunities for those who are prepared for work. The outlook is not good for those who do not know much or those who can do nothing.

Ours is an age which demands special knowledge or special skill or special power so that the individual may be prepared to do some one thing with a high degree of precision and efficiency as a necessary antecedent condition of distinguished success. It is an age requiring preparation, and the youth who is preparing himself to meet its requirements is wise.

FOOLING WITH THE SUFFRAGE.

A certain sustained calm in the public mind is indicative of the entire equanimity with which the people view the possibility of another suffrage perpetration by the Democrats. The wise men of some of the counties have been proposing so-called municipal election bills and are exultant because they received enough votes to go through, for the enactment of the Elkton and Ellicott City bills may be taken as assured. Yet those who support these bills are a part of the same old crowd that supported the Straus Bill and the fate of that measure is too painful to mention. Nothing remarkable that they should seek petty revenge on the public by forcing their grandfathers' provisions on helpless little towns. The significant fact is that they have not dared to carry out their cowardly threat to pursue the same course with Baltimore. It would really be an interesting situation to have the Democrats undertake to dragoon the voters who repudiated the disfranchisement measure by such a majority as to leave it like a piece of cold lead the day after it was drawn out from the fires of the polls.

There is really not the slightest prospect that the Brewington election raid will be pulled off. It sounds real cowboyish; it smacks of Dr. Jamison, in South Africa; it is redolent with the aroma of the road agents of dime novel fame; but as a proposition for an orderly state, in decent and orderly times, it is utterly unthinkable. It was conceived in a nightmare and framed in a spasm of moral delirium tremens. The mere suggestion to cut off from registration anyone whom the registers, packed for the purpose under a preversion of law, might mark for victims, is so utterly revolutionary that one can imagine the militant might of Maryland doing to the party and the individuals who would undertake such a scheme, what, in the popular and sufficient phraseology of the day, is termed "a plenty." The suffrage jockeys would not know whether they were bestriding a thunderbolt or simply riding on a third rail before they got fairly into an act of spoiliation that would arouse every decent voter in Maryland and cause the courts to make short work of the ballot assassins. But why permit language to take the color of the Brewington proposal? It is such a contemptible little piece of fretful malice that one, to maintain creditable expression, must back away from it.

That is what the Democratic blowhards in the legislature will do. No one has the slightest desire to placate them, to cajole them, to implore them not to do anything they have a mind to do in the way of enactment of the Brewington or like measures. They are free agents they think, and let them act accordingly until they have another thought coming to them. But they will not adopt the Brewington proposal for the same reason that the Attorney General gave his support to the protest of the Republican State Central Committee against the ballot outrages that, despite the learned and ethical opinion of that official, were carried out any way. The Democratic leaders who respect their political and professional integrity and have regard for the assets that most men foremost in public life prize, will be far from giving countenance to any plan that would be reprobated the country over and would sound their political death knell. They are only shamming about the Brewington affair in order to pull off their real scheme. They have simply been whetting the appetite of the legislature anti-suffragists in order to get them ready to snatch at the Straus proposal with one of its provisions hacked off. This is the educational clause. They have suddenly awakened to a very palpable method of altering the amendment; so palpable that if it were really valuable to the party it would have been adopted long ago.

The people are not fooled, they will not be deluded by the scheme to project the old discussion into the arena; they understand that the Democrats feel they cannot possibly win again unless they have a number of constitutional amendments with which to draw the fire of the enemy and thus permit the ticket to win out. They are counting without their host. The proposal of another constitutional amendment in defiance of public judgment would be taken as insulting and recalcitrant, and the people who have settled finally the issue will be prepared to give the Democratic mountebanks just the kind of dressing that they appear to be aching for. It is really too bad to have to speak out so plainly in meeting at this time when the people are not interested as to the future; having their plans laid in advance for any move that the Democratic looters—not the Democratic party—may make toward ravishing the ballot or debasing the franchise.

TROUBLE BREWING

There are many signs of trouble ahead for the ring-leaders of the Maryland Democracy. In the first place there is a growing disgust among the honest rank and file of the Democratic party over the use by their party leaders of the trick ballot and accompanying crooked methods. The anti-negro cry to influence voters is one thing but when under color of entrapping the negro with a "fixed" ballot, thousands of white men are sacrificed, then the trick ballot does not seem so attractive. Then, there were many thousands of citizens not posted as to the responsibility of the big leaders for the ballot fraud, who sincerely believed that the Legislature would be run economically and some important reform legislation be enacted. With over two-thirds of the session gone these good people are beginning to have serious doubts about these fair promises being made good. The continuous revelations of a scandalous character of the Democratic management of Baltimore city added to the other conditions enemerated, have stirred up such loyal Democrats as former Governor Warfield and ex-Mayor Hayes to issue solemn warnings of the growing discontent within the party. If Governor Warfield were a good fighter he could make Vandiver, Smith, Crothers and the rest bestir themselves to retain control but the ex-Governor has not the grit and determination to make a real war. Mr. Hayes has been on pretty good terms with the Ring and is thought now to be taking a few flings at the existing order, to attract attention to his availability for the Mayorally nomination next spring. Altogether, there is plenty of trouble hanging around loose but no leader in sight with sufficient force and following to dislodge the present ring.

AN HONEST ONE AT ANNAPOLIS.

The suffragettes have been invading Annapolis in droves, masses, bunches, hordes or legions—anyhow there's lots of 'em—this session, and they have mere man backed to the wall and speechless with their facts, figures and fashions. The following from the Baltimore American shows that they could make Gov. Crothers' economy policy look like unbridled extravagance compared with what they can do when they get the ballot:

At this very session in the Maryland State House, a woman is reported as being the only public servant honest enough and brave enough to resist the onslaught of the legislators to pocket $25 and their stationery too. The legislature of Maryland last session and this voted away $130,000 of the state's money to political henchmen, for alleged clerical services and cleaning of the State House. If women were there they could and would have all this service well and honestly performed for $25,000. If given the votes they'll find the brooms that will sweep clean in more senses than one.—Midland Journal.

PRESIDENT TAFT'S FIRST YEAR IN OFFICE.

With the close of his first year in the White House, President Taft is represented to have lost some of the cheerfulness for which he is noted. His hair and mustache have grown gray, and there are wrinkles now where all was smooth twelve months ago. Being President of the American people has its drawbacks. A few days ago, in a speech which was not without its pathos, Mr. Taft, referring to the many disagreeable things which have been said about him, said it was still left him to believe that the people think he is "trying to make good."

We believe they do, Mr. President. We believe a great majority of them, before joining in the hue and cry that has been raised, want the critics of the Administration to put down in black and white what they would like to see done at Washington, how they would like to see it done, and what they anticipate will result if they have their way.

Few men have become President with so many difficult problems to solve as Roosevelt left to his successor. As Mr. Taft has pointed out in his patient way, Mr. Roosevelt carried on what was virtually a great moral crusade. He has left this Administration the tremendous job of gathering the usufruct by putting his theories into law. And that is what Mr. Taft is trying to do.

He has to go about the business in his own way. He has a divided party back of him, and the very people who are blaming him for consorting with Aldrich—the man he must work with if anything is to be done, the man his party has given him as the leader in Congress—would throw stones at him as a party wrecker if he had gone over with the "insurgents" and tried to run Congress. He was in the Roosevelt Cabinet four years, and if he became thoroughly saturated with the belief that if there was any one thing the country was tired of it was a President who ran the whole Government, and if he hasn't yet got the idea out of his system we are not going to blame him. The President is tackling great problems. There does not seem to be any dozen men in Washington who think alike about them. It is always much easier to stand on the side line and to tell the man who is in the game how to play it than it is to take his place and do better.

It does not seem to us that the President is getting a square deal. He is having to suffer for the public discontent with high prices and because business conditions have not mended as rapidly as was hoped for. He is no prestidigator, no god out of the machine, but a big man with a big grasp of administrative problems, who was hailed a year ago as ideally fitted for the place he now holds. He has done nothing to destroy the esteem then universally expressed for him. We believe the duty of the good citizen is to hold up his hands and to refuse to join in a clamor which, by taking from him public support and confidence, will make his path harder.

NAMES SENT IN

For Census Enumerators by Supervisor John J. Stump.

Supervisor of Census John J. Stump has sent to the Bureau of Census the names of all persons selected by him for enumerators in his district. There are 156 in all. Sixteen women took the examination and eight of them were selected as enumerators. While they are not permitted vote Mr. Stump believes women are well qualified for this work and has given them fair representation. The list of persons recommended embrace the following: Farmers, 33; merchants, 16; clerks, 12; carpenters, 2; laborers, 21; ministers, 4; undertakers, barbers, doctors, school teachers, etc.

Of the eight women who have been recommended, five are for Allegany county, two for Frederick county and one for Washington county. The appointees will be named in a few days.

Mr. William MacDonald, a prominent attorney of Keyser, W. Va., and Mr. J. C. Watson, coal operator of the same city, were business visitors to Oakland.

Mr. F. W. Chase, manager of the Glade View Stock Farm, south of Oakland, returned Monday night from a visit of a few days to friends and relatives in Philadelphia.

Mr. Erbie Lantz returned to his home in Oakland Monday night from a brief visit to Morgantown where he was called Sunday afternoon by a message announcing the very serious illness of his sister, Miss Ruth Lantz, who is suffering with an attack of typhoid-pneumonia.

Blaine and Kitzmiller are being stirred by a great revival. Revs. W. W. Sutton, of the M. E. church, and Geo. W. Yost of the M. E. church, South, are conducting the meeting. It has been in progress nearly four weeks. There have been about fifty conversions and a number of penitents are still at the altar.

Mr. W. H. Rudisill, of Mountain Lake Park, has gone to Anniston, Alabama, to inspect and look after the construction of a line of wires to transmit electricity to a number of points between Anniston and Birmingham. He is to visit Louisiana to buy poles and investigate the treatment of poles for durability under a new process.

Mrs. John A. Mayer, of Terra Alta, mother of Mrs. Harland Jones, of Oakland, passed through Oakland yesterday afternoon en route home after an absence of more than a year spent in the South in search of health. Mrs. Mayer was accompanied from here by her little daughter, Virginia, who has been spending the winter in Oakland with Mr. and Mrs. Jones.

Col. T. B. Davis left this week for Hot Springs, Arkansas. He has been suffering from rheumatism of late and will go there to take treatment for a season. He was accompanied by Miss Hallie Clemson. Ex-United States Senator H. G. Davis, his brother, and Miss Katherine Elkins and her cousin, Miss Katherine Brown, both nieces of Col. Davis, stopped off here the first of the week on their way to Washington. Col. Davis is well known throughout the country, especially in West Virginia and Maryland, in both of which states he has large business interests. His returned to Keyser with improved health is the earnest hope of his legion of friends here and elsewhere.—Keyser Tribune.

You are sure of receiving courteous treatment and will be given every opportunity to see and investigate to your entire satisfaction. 2-1t.

Messrs. A. D. Naylor and Gilmor S. Hamill, of Oakland, E. E. Friend, Philip Willett and E. L. Winchell, of Mountain Lake Park, are in Annapolis this week presenting to the select committee having in charge the bill for the incorporation of Mountain Lake Park as a municipality arguments for and against the passage of the act. The local delegation was joined at Annapolis by Major J. M. Burns, Capt. McKee, Dr. Baldwin and Dr. Davis.

Tuesday morning a large number of Garrett countians residing in the Potomac valley adjacent to Schell, W. Va., appeared before the Board of County Commissioners with a petition praying for the erection of a bridge over the river at Schell. The delegation showed conclusively to the Commissioners that the building of the bridge is necessary for the convenience of the public and that it would be beneficial for all concerned. The Commissioners deferred action until the Board could visit Schell and inspect the proposed site of the bridge.

Five colored citizens of the town of Piedmont, W. Va., on Thursday night last, caught John Dabney, of that place, also colored, and carrying him to Cramer's Mill on Water street, attempted to tar and feather him. Dabney broke loose from the men before they had completely covered him, and run up the street with his clothing partly covered with the tar and the feathers sticking to the latter. Dabney claims that he knows of no reason why he should be treated to a coating of tar and feathers, but is is alleged that Dabney is charged with making an engagement with one of the men's colored sweethearts.

Ex-Senator R. T. Browning exhibited to THE REPUBLICAN yesterday a notice he had received recently from the authorities in Washington conveying the information that he had been assigned a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of the Flathead Indian lands in Montana which were recently thrown open for settlement. Mr. Browning's tract is known and designated as No. 4 on the plat. In the distribution of the lands to settlers soldiers of the Civil War were given preference and the soldiers to whom the land has been assigned will not have to enter upon it to prove their claims when the final papers are passed from the government.

Go along the streets of our town and you can point out the boys, who in the next decade, will be the grumblers and growlers. You will see them sitting idle on a dry goods box, swinging their feet and squirting tobacco juice. In 10 or 20 years from now they will be doing the same thing and declaring the world has been made all wrong. Never having made an effort to do anything for themselves they do not like those who have having nothing themselves, they look upon every man who has gained property or high professional reputation through unceasing toil and economy of time and means, as having wronged them in some way and as an enemy to be denounced in season and out of season.

DARK LANTERN MEN EMPLOYED BY UNCLE SAM

How the Secret Servtce Protects the Treasury and Other Departments.

Following the wake of the evil doer who attempts to undermine the basic principles of the federal laws is an army of secret agents, employed by the various branches of the government. The scope of this work not only embraces what is popularly known as the Secret Service, which is particularly an adjunct of the Treasury Department. The operatives are various called "dark lantern men," "special agents," "investigators" and "field operators." Their work in general is to report violations of the federal laws to their respective departments.

The Secret Service of the Treasury Department, which was established coincident with the creation of the department itself, in 1779, leads the list in effectiveness of results accomplished by its silent sleuths. Since that time the service has been broadened until each department of the government now has its separate and distinct corps of detectives.

The Department of Justice has its special agents; the Department of Agriculture, its examiners, operating under the recently enacted pure food law; the Department of Interior, its examiners and special field agents, who have saved hundreds of thousands of acres of land of the public domains from the speculation of land sharks; the Department of Commerce and Labor, its examiners and inspectors who deal with questions respecting immigration, corporations, steamboat inspection, etc.; the Interstate Commerce Commission, its dark lantern men, who keep an eye on violations by railroad companies, and the Treasury Department, its Secret Service, who have reduced the crime of counterfeiting to a minimum; and the Internal Revenue Agents, who have practcially broken up the business of illicit distilleries.

The Secret Service of the Treasury Department is under the leadership of Chief John E. Wilkie, who has been associated with that office for about 12 years. During that time he has been instrumental in breaking up several notorious gangs of counterfeiters in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, New Orleans, San Francisco and other cities. The "revenuers" have practically put the illicit distillers of the "moonshine" districts of Kentucky and Tennessee out of business. The operatives who "work the moonshine country," carry on their cases unhampered under detailed instructions from Washington. For this reason very little information is given out to the public concerning their activities. Then a "case" is made facts are usually reported to the central office in the Treasury building and prosecution in the federal courts is undertaken. On some of these cases, operatives spend months of work before an arrest is made, often living in the neighborhoood where illicit distilling is thought to thrive, under an assumed character.

At different times the Secret Service is called in to aid other departments. During the land fraud investigation by the Department of Interior, certain secret service man were temporarily loaned to the department for the purpose of working up cases against alleged land grabbers, in conjunction with special agents of that department. The result has been that many "land sharks" were sent to prison, while a num- of criminal prosecutions are still pending in the West.

Through the efforts of former Secret Service Agent Burne, who was identified with some of the larger land fraud cases, Senators and Representatives of the federal legislature were implicated in the frauds and prosecuted.

The Department of Justice, with its special agents, has recently investigated conditions in the Burley tobacco district and peonage case in Texas and other Southern states. Interesting reports that have not yet been made public have been received by Attorney General Wickersham from these men, and will form the nucleus, it is said, of a number of prosecutions to be brought in the federal courts.

In the Burley tobacco districts, where a number of agents were located, passing themselves off as horse dealers or other characters, information concerning the activities of a number of alleged "Night Riders" was obtained. In some instances arrests were made, but as soon as the news was made public that law officers were invading that district, it was necessary for the special agent to leave in haste if a whole skin was to be maintained. In the case of Special Agent Hoagland, who was detailed in a certain part of this district, his life he says "wouldn't have been worth two cents in Chinese money," after the "Nighters" learned his identity. He was warned in time, however, by a fellow agent from an adjoining district and they left immediately. His report, which has been much to the Attorney General, speaks of the intimidation of witnesses who had been summoned before grand juries and of the cruel treatment victims received at the hands of "Night Riders."

The prosecution of the National Packing house industries by the federal government is the outcome of information received by the Departments, who have been investigating conditions there for the past three years. Meat inspection resulted in the discovery that certain interests in Chicago were offering for sale, as edible products the refuse collected from large packing house plants and from open waterways in and around the slaughtering houses.

The Department of Commerce and Labor maintains a large force of inspectors and agents whose work prevents the operation of certain criminal practices. Immigration agents are constantly on the watch at various seaport towns and other points of entry to see that citizens of other countries seeking entrance into the United States meet the requirements of the immigration laws before admission is granted. The detection of those who attempt to gain entrance into the United States, at times, is no easy matter so immigration inspectors assert.

Still further, however, the aim of this corps of detectives is to arrest offenders, generally residents in other countries, who accept fees for guaranteeing prohibited persons entry into the United States. Corporations for all kinds are kept under surveillance, and in a number of instances prosecutions have been made.

Steamboat inspection, while not a subject for secret work, nevertheless needs its sleuths. Infractions of the law which, in the past have cost thousands of lives, are rigidly penalized and in some cases criminal prosecutions have been instituted.

Perhaps the most interesting of all secret agencies is that connected with the Interstate Commerce Commission. The "dark lantern men," as they are sometimes called are only known to the Commissioners themselves. They investigate matters connected with railroad rebates, infractions of the federal safety appliance law and other minor regulations. As soon as a service man is spotted by the railroads, by reason of his connection with a case that has been prosecuted, he is transferred to other duty. Private detective agencies in the employ of railroads have been for a number of years trying to locate these men and keep them "shadowed" but they have met with very little success. The Pinkertons tried it about a year ago, but were unable to establish a single case.

Agents of this department are kept in the field constantly in one part of the country or another until, it is said, "The railroads generally are now walking the straight and narrow path." Few cases of unlawful rebating have been reported to the commission within the last few years.

The State, War and Navy Departments also have their secret agencies not only in this country, but abroad. Their work, however is confined to a system of confidential reports based upon matters of particular interest to their respective departments.

NOVEL TOWN BOOM PLAN.

Advertising a City by the Use of Moving Picture Films.

A new and original idea, designed to set forth the advantages of Baltimore as a trade center, was suggested to Acting Mayor Nunsen of that city in an anonymous letter which was received at the mayor's office in the city hall. The writer suggests that moving pictures be taken of the various places of interest in the city, with views of the harbor and some of the large manufacturing plants. The pictures so taken could be distributed in various parts of the country, and in that manner those persons who are unable to make a trip to Baltimore could see just exactly what the city has to offer them in the way of up to date facilities for handling trade of all descriptions.

Acting Mayor Numsen was enthusiastic over the scheme, and, although the letter was written in rather a humorous vein, he stated that such a method of advertising the city would doubtless assist in the efforts which are now being put forth by merchants and manufacturers in all lines of business.

The letter is as follows:

Honorable Sir—I have noticed in the papers out my way about the prospects of booming Baltimore. Your city is a great commercial center, with great facilities for handling merchandise on land and sea. Your harbor is one of the best in the world.

You have many advantages for handling freight from the western cities to Europe and goods from abroad to the west. You are now demonstrating your business ability and advantages to merchants of the south. While there are a few thousand who have taken advantage of the opportunity to visit Baltimore in person, to see for themselves what the city has to offer them, there are many thousand in the same territory who have not the time and inclination to come to the city this season.

Now that the interest of the people in the south has been aroused with visions of Greater Baltimore, why not follow up the interest in a practical way?

Moving picture theaters have sprung up by the thousands throughout the country, in the big cities as well as the smallest hamlets. Films could be made showing a panorama of the harbor, railroad terminals, the shipping facilities on the water front, scenes in the business district, the residence section and some of the large manufacturing establishments.

These films could be distributed through the south and west. The exporters and importers in the west could see how easily we can handle their merchandise, and the merchants of the south can be initiated into the many charms of the city in a most effective manner.

If this city had an up to date publicity department this feature of municipal advertisement could be considered. The films could be distributed free of charge or rented out for a nominal charge—enough to cover the cost and transportation charges.

I remain yours sincerely,

ALERT PUSH.

Of Push, Progress & Co., Osh...osh, Wis.

"The moving picture idea," said Acting Mayor Numsen, "is a good one. Spots like Lexington, Market and other busy sections of the city would make interesting pictures. Whether the writer of the letter meant what he said in the letter or not, the suggestions are nevertheless good. However, he should have signed his name, and he would stand a good chance of being appointed chairman of the publicity commission which he suggests."

BALTIMORE, MD.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Doctrines of Christ Versus Doctrines of Men.

Whosoever will do the will of My Father which is in heaven shall know of My doctrine. Ye do make void the law of God through your traditions—the traditions of the accounts (John vii, 17; Mark vii, 13; I Peter i, 18).

Brooklyn Tabernacle, March 6.—Pastor Russell preached twice here today. His discourse on "Inferno" was delivered in Brooklyn's largest Auditorium, the Academy of Music, which was overcrowded. It was estimated in advance that this subject would draw a larger crowd than the Tabernacle would accommodate. The other meetings of the day were held in the Tabernacle. We report Pastor Russell's discourse from the text foregoing, as follows:—

It is difficult to please everybody. The duty of a Christian minister is to seek chiefly to please the Lord. "Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer" (Psalm xix, 14). Our ministerial friends seem to be annoyed because we preach the "doctrines" of Christ. In substance, their sentiment is: Brother Russell, Do you not know that in the fashionable topics of our day doctrines are tabooed by the great ministers of all denominations? Instead, as you perceive from the newspaper announcements, it is now quite the thing to discuss political, scientific and sociological doctrines. You should give the public lectures on subjects like these: Social Democracy; Rapid Transit in Brooklyn, from the text, "Many shall run to and fro;" Female Suffrage; The Boys' Brigade; The Best Novel of the Year; The Narrow Way of the Bicycle Rider; Will the Comet Sweep the Earth With Its Tail; Can Football Survive, etc.; or occasionally, for effect, gently rake the rich on better housing for the poor, or belabor the Trusts for soaring prices of food. Such topics as these, Brother Russell, interest the Christian public in our day. And the public constitute our principal congregations when we lift our largest collections. The only people who will be interested in the doctrines you are preaching are the old fogy, out-of-date folk, and you will find the majority of them poor in this world's riches. For pity's sake stop teaching the "doctrines of Christ"! Doctrines were good enough in the days of Jesus and Paul and Calvin and Luther and Wesley, but the people are not accustomed to them nowadays.

I have no fault to find with my Christian brethren in the ministry of the various denominations. It is not to me, but to the Lord, that they must give an account of their stewardship—of their grand opportunities for declaring the Gospel of Christ. To their own Master they must stand or fall. It is not for me to forbid them because they follow not with us. It is for each one who stands as an ambassador of Christ and of God to follow his own convictions faithfully. Besides, I am assured that many of them are loyal to the core.

It is my understanding that, as a minister of the Gospel, I should take for my guide in this matter the instructions of my ordination. Like St Paul my ordination to preach the Gospel was from the Lord. I must preach the message which I believe he has given me (I Timothy ii, 7). As his ambassador I must preach the Word, following the example of the Lord and the Apostles. As they avoided politics, so must I. As they avoided vain philosophy and "science falsely so called," so must I. As they preached the doctrines of Christ, so must I—whether men hear or forbear to hear. I remember the words of St. Paul to Timothy: "Preach the Word, . . . with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own preferences they shall gather teachers to themselves; having itching ears they shall turn away their ears from the Truth and shall be turned unto fables" (II Timothy iv, 2-4).

There Is a Reason.

There must be a reason why Christian preachers and their hearers have abandoned the study of the "Doctrines of Christ" set forth by the Apostles and Prophets. Is it not because they no longer believe those doctrines? Is it not true that the College and Seminary Professors have led the majority of the ministry afar into unbelief in the Bible, and that these ministers are gradually leading their confiding flocks into other "pastures green" than those which the Great Shepherd and his appointed mouthpieces, the Apostles, approved? Is not the Higher-Criticism infidelity of the colleges gradually penetrating even into the Sunday School Lessons and even into the High Schools of our land—undermining all faith in God's Book? But what led to this departure from the Word of God—into Higher-Criticism infidelity and into the Evolution theory, which makes void the Word of God; and into Christian Science, which puts a premium on falsehood; and into Theosophy and Spiritism, the deceptions of the fallen angels—demonism? How comes it that all these unscriptural theories now flourish, whereas only a century ago God's Word was respected and its doctrines were studied by Christian people of various and conflicting creeds? The answer is that with the increasing light of our day the creeds of the past are seen to be fallacious, irrational, by all who use their thinking apparatus. The leaders in the various Churches discovered this in advance of their flocks. They promptly and reverently set their creeds on a high shelf where the people might not so particularly notice their flaws, but might continue their reverence for them, until gradually their attention would be drawn aside and their hope and faith transplanted to Evolutionary soil or Theosophistic and Spiritualistic child's play.

With the decline of Christian doctrines, including heart union with Christ and an understanding of its terms and conditions, Churchianity came in, to take the place of Christianity. Today the pride of all denominations centers, not in their doctrines, but in their institutions. The people are no longer exhorted to hold fast to the doctrines of Methodism, Calvinism, etc., but to hold fast to the System. They are no longer encouraged to think of their system as being the only one, outside of which there would be no salvation, but they are encouraged to cultivate a partisan spirit, which takes pride in their organization, its wealth, the value of its church property, the largeness of its collections, the grandeur of its music, the wisdom, learning and ability of its preachers, and the fashion and wealth of its constituency.

It is not our wish to offer a single unkind or unbrotherly criticism. It is our duty and privilege, however, to point out that the creed doctrines of the various denominations, now set on the shelf as too frail and imperfect to stand handling and investigation, are not and never were the doctrines of Christ and the Apostles. It is our duty and pleasure to show forth to Christian people to the extent of our ability that the teachings of the Bible, the doctrines of Christ, are grand, noble, reasonable, "worthy of all acceptation." To the extent that we succeed in doing this we are bringing back straying Christians from the deceptive bogs of Evolution and Higher-Criticism to the firm foundation, the solid rock of Truth—God's Word.

"The Wounds of a Friend."

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend" is the Divine assurance. We cannot, therefore, better show our friendship and Christian love to our brethren than by pulling down from the shelf their reverenced creeds and allowing them to fall in pieces beyond repair. If every church could be thus induced to pull down its creed-idol, the present Laodicean stage of the Church would speedily come to its senses, as suggested by our Lord. Then, instead of feeling themselves rich and increased in goods and having need of nothing, our dear Christian brethren of all denominations would realize the meaning of our Lord's words—that Churchianity as a whole today is poor and naked and miserable and wretched and blind (Revelation iii, 14-22). As Christians of all denominations we have cause of rejoicing that we have outgrown the trundle-bed creeds of the past and that we can no longer wrap ourselves comfortably in the narrow bigotry of error. The Lord caused this to be written in the long-ago through the prophets, saying, "For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it; and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it" (Isaiah xxviii, 20). If in connection with this growth which has come to us and by which we have nobler conceptions than had our forefathers of the rights of man under the Golden Rule, it is a cause for rejoicing. Even though the transition has been accompanied by a great falling away into Higher-Criticism, Infidelity, Evolution, etc., nevertheless even these errors are in many respects preferable to the blindness and bigotry. Happy are we, dear friends, if the eyes of our understanding being opened, our hearts are led to a closer walk with God, a more careful and prayerful study of his Word, and to a subsequent growth in grace and in the fruits of the holy Spirit.

Do some inquire for clearer specification respecting the fourteen of the creeds put upon the shelf, which we think should be no longer cared for, unallowed to fall? We answer that of course there are good features in all of our creeds—truths which will never fail. But with these truths are mixed the errors which are, as the poet says, "Dead flies that cause the ointment to stink" (Ecclesiastes x, 1). There is plenty more of the ointment in God's Word. It is indeed the "balm of Gilead" and pure—without the corroding fly of error. This is what we all want, whatsoever our denominational name, and the sooner we get it the better for us, for the Cause and for "the brethren," whom we love to serve.

I give an illustration: Those of us who are Calvinistic may well hold fast to some of the precious Scripture teachings so long revered, but we want to cast out quickly and effectively the gross error which teaches that all the non-elect, instead of having hope for a blessing through "the elect," are to be everlastingly tormented. Those of us who are Arminian in doctrine have much that is precious, but need also to cast away from us the thought that our loving Heavenly Father is merely good-intentioned and lacks the power, the ability, to make his benevolent desires effective towards any except a small handful of humanity. Our Disciple friends should cast aside the thought contained in their teachings that only the water-immersed experience forgiveness of sins and reconciliation to God and salvation from eternal torment. Similarly those of us who are Baptists, while holding to the precious truths which so long have comforted and strengthened us, should insist now on casting away as unscriptural and irrational the thought that has long perplexed us, namely, that no others than the water-immersed could be members of the Church of Christ, heirs of glory, and be saved from damnation. Once we get these absurdities removed, not only from our heads and hearts, but also from our professions, we shall be ready and anxious to have the doctrines of Christ on these subjects. Then we will search the Word and have God's blessing in finding its harmonies. "He that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened" (Matthew vii, 8). But so long as we hold to the falsehoods how can we seek or pray for or find the Truth?

The Value of Doctrines.

The word doctrine signifies teaching. The doctrines of Christ, therefore, are the teachings of Christ; the doctrines of men, the teachings of men. What the Church needs today is, to receive into good and honest hearts afresh the doctrines of Jesus and the Apostles—allowing these to displace the doctrines which Christendom now holds but disesteems, and which were formulated in a time of less light than the present. Instead, therefore, of discouraging each other in respect to the study of the doctrines of Christ, we should, as Christians, become more earnest in the study every day, hoping and expecting that in the wonderful light of our time God would be able to make clear to our understanding the harmonious interpretations of his Word. We should study to find the relationship between Election and Free Grace. We should clearly understand what is meant by baptism and what kind of baptism is necessary for our induction into the Body of Christ as members. On every line we should be looking for the harmonies, instead of rejoicing in the errors which have long divided us into hundreds of sects and parties.

However, in some respects sectarian energy is better than federated death. Might we not even say that if all the creeds were dashed to pieces and each Christian stood forth unshackled as respects denominational bonds, the result would be a great improvement so far as individual thought, study, and relationship to God would be concerned? In a word, each Christian should have his own creed, his individual faith; and none should do more or less than to assist his mind to a full understanding of the Word of the Lord in respect to every subject.

Doctrines of Men.

All doctrines which cannot show a foundation and full authority in the teaching of Jesus and the Apostles and Prophets, are doctrines of men. The teachings from above come to us through heaven-appointed channels. The jargon which prevails in Christendom in respect to Christian doctrines proves that they are of human origin. The Scriptures alone furnish to us

The Doctrines of Christ.

Briefly stated they declare, "To us there is one God, the Father, and one Lord, Jesus Christ" (I Corinthians viii, 6). To us there is one Holy Spirit; to us there is "one Church of the Living God, whose names are written in heaven;" to us there is "one Lord and one faith and one baptism; one God and Father of all" (Ephesians iv, 4-6). However impossible these statements may have appeared during the "dark ages," they are no longer so. The light of Divine Truth is now shining. God has not only put into our possession wonderful Bibles, and wonderful helps for Bible-study, but has also given us the ability to read, to study the Word critically. And he is pleased now to assure us through the prophet that we are living in the time when "the wise shall understand" the "mystery hidden from past ages and dispensations," which could not be understood previously without working an interference with God's eternal purposes.

What, then, dear friends, shall we do? Shall we float on ingloriously, daily, hourly coming closer and closer to the great cataclysm which is swallowing up so many now in infidelity, called Higher-Criticism? Or shall we accept God's Helping Hand, the doctrines of Christ, and know the Truth and be made free from the error and be brought into fellowship with our Redeemer on the highest plane? Let us, as the "wise virgins" of our Lord's parable, wake from sleep and trim our lamps, and, in the light thereof, see God's wonderful riches of glory as they stand revealed on the threshold of the New Dispensation—the Millennial reign of Christ!

In conclusion: Our Lord admonishes us along the lines of this discourse as follows: "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see" (Revelation iii, 18).

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements. These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

GARDENS IN WINTER.

Charm of a Rustic Nook Where Vines and Trees Are Ever Green.

The beauty of the outdoor garden during the winter season is largely a matter of thought rather than that of expense.

A little ingenuity in the selection and grouping of plants, shrubbery, trees and vines will go further toward producing permanent beauty in the town than any amount of cost and skill in the purchase and the care of the home beautifiers. An evergreen tree, one of the beautiful conifers, a dwarf cedar or a tall pine or hemlock will prove far more beautiful than the deciduous shade trees for certain positions in the home grounds, and there will be but little difference in the original cost. An evergreen magnolia as an ornamental plant in a small city or town yard will cost no more than a magnolia that sheds its leaves each autumn, and, while the latter will present only bare, straggling branches through the winter, the former will hold up in stately magnificence its thick, glossy evergreen leaves, resembling huge leaves of the indoor rubber tree, and give the little outdoor garden an effect of almost tropical greenery through the season of ice and snow.

A simple and quaintly beautiful rustic summer house, suitable for little yards of city homes or sheltered corners of suburban or country estates, may present beautiful as well as durable qualities when formed of irregular cedar branches in rustic design and ornamented with variegated euonymous vines trained up the posts and about the seats. The variety known as Euonymous radicans variegata is a delicate looking beauty, but of exceedingly sturdy growth and perfectly hardy. The masses of small green and white leaves remain on the outdoor vines all winter, and the same desirable characteristics are displayed in the euonymous shrubs, which will form well rounded decorative bushes, as beautiful in winter as in summer.

ARRANGING THE STOCK.

Location of Wares Will Also Help to Attract Local Trade.

"Appearances mean something more than the mere looks of a place, such as making it look pretty. Attractiveness always benefits, but there is something more to the proposition than prettiness," says a Cleveland (O.) grocer.

"The grocer must consider the arrangement of his stock with a view to effectiveness as regards looks, but he must also give thought to the locations of different lines of goods and the fixtures in order to carry out the general effect desired and place the goods so they can be seen by people entering the store, for to see in many instances is to buy.

"Arrangement and equipment are subjects of great importance. In fact, by no means every retailer realizes how important it is to arrange all the departments in the store so they will be where the best results in the way of sales will be gained. Equipment isn't something that is merely 'nice.' It has got to be something that pays a good return on the cost.

"If good judgment is exercised in this respect the sale of the higher grades of groceries on which the margin of profit is larger can no doubt be increased and those customers who buy nothing but the highest grades of groceries would be attracted."

BEST TO PRINT PRICES.

Purchasers Should Be Kept Well Posted at All Times.

Print prices in your advertising unless there are substantial reasons for not doing so. The ordinary reasons are not good reasons. That your "competitors may become familiar with prices" is not a sufficient reason. They will have your prices if they want them.

The purchaser must know your prices before he buys. They will have as much or as little influence this week as next. If he is seeking quality he will be more likely to be interested in high priced goods than in a cheap article. If he demands cheap goods then it is best to let him know at the start that your goods are not cheap.

That you have success at home without printing prices is no argument for the applying of the plan to a foreign campaign. Conditions differ radically. The man in the country who sees your ad. might buy your goods.

Work of Improvement Societies.

The improvement societies in a number of towns and cities have recently directed their efforts to inducing the citizens to remove high board fences as dividing lines between back yards, and where it has been found impracticable to secure this concession effort has at least been made to induce property holders to cover the board fences with vines. Similarly the idea of the open lot has been encouraged for front yards, and where a division line is insisted upon effort is made to induce the provision of a hedge or flower bed instead of a more or less unsightly fence. Some of the societies are going still further and giving attention to such projects as the cleansing and beautifying of public buildings, the creation of pleasing church exteriors and surroundings and the provision of public baths and other valuable municipal utilities.

Study and Hustle.

The great volume of buying of the progressive trade is done by those who keep up to date by study and hustle.

BURNT CLAY'S VALUE

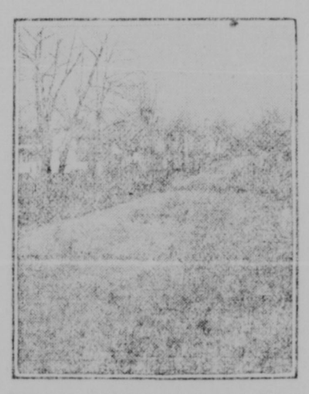
Durable Roads Built of It at Small Cost.

PREPARATION OF ROADBED.

Careful Grading and Firing Necessary. Highways That Are Constructed of "Gumbo" Clay Should Be Rolled Until Smooth and Hard.

In large areas in the south sedimentary clays are found very generally. In these areas the clays are of a particularly plastic and sticky variety known as "gumbo" and "buckshot." In such localities traffic is absolutely impossible during the wet season, as the wheels of heavy vehicles will sink to the hub.

Gumbo clay is black, owing to the high percentage of organic or vegetable matter it contains. It is particularly sticky in its nature, and is almost wholly free from sand and grit.



From Good Roads Magazine, New York.

WELL BUILT BURNT CLAY HIGHWAY.

After it has been burned, however, the plasticity is entirely destroyed, and a light clinker is formed which, though not particularly hard, when pulverized forms a smooth surface and seems to wear well. It should be understood that not all of the clay out of which the road is to be constructed is to be clinkered, but only a sufficient amount should be rendered nonplastic to neutralize the too sticky character of the native clay.

Good sound wood, as dry and well seasoned as it is possible to procure, should be provided before beginning the work and stacked at convenient intervals along the side of the road. About one cord of wood has been found necessary for eight linear feet of roadbed twelve feet wide.

After grading the road to an even width between ditches it is plowed up as deeply as practicable. It will be found necessary to use horses or mules, as the extremely heavy nature of the clay makes the work of deep plowing difficult. After the plowing has been completed furrows are dug across the road from ditch to ditch, extending through and beyond the width to be burned. If it is intended to burn twelve feet of roadway the transverse furrows should be sixteen feet long, so as to extend two feet on each side beyond the width of the final roadway. Across the ridges formed between these furrows, which should be about four feet apart, the first course of cord wood is laid longitudinally so as to form a series of flues in which the firing is started.

The best and soundest cord wood is selected for this course and should be laid so that the pieces will touch, thus forming a floor. Another layer of wood is thrown irregularly across this floor, in crib formation, with spaces left between in which the lumps of clay are piled.

After the lumps of clay have been heaped upon this floor a third course of wood is laid parallel to the first. This third course is laid in exactly the same manner as the first, and each opening and crack should be filled with brush, chips, bark, small sticks or any other combustible material. The top layer of clay is placed over all, and the finer portions of the material are heaped over the whole structure.

The deep covering of clay which is thrown over all should be taken from the side ditches and may be in lumps of all sizes, including the very finest material. It is spread as evenly as possible over the top in a layer of not less than six to twelve inches. Finally the whole is tamped and rounded off so that the heat will be held within the flues as long as possible.

When the roadbed has been carefully prepared according to the foregoing directions the firing should begin. If, however, a large force of laborers are available for the work a greater number of flues can be fired at one time.

When the material is sufficiently cooled the roadbed should be brought to a high crown before rolling, to allow for the compacting of the material. This can be best done with a plow or a grader. After this the rolling should be begun and continued until the roadbed is smooth and hard. The finished crown should have a slope of at least one-half inch to the foot.

Although it cannot be denied that the gumbo and buckshot clays of the south are particularly adapted for burning on account of the high percentage of organic matter which they contain, it is none the less probable that many of the surface clays and soils of the states farther north could be treated in the same way, and, in fact, any soil or clay which bricks or clinkers at a comparatively low temperature should be suitable for the work.

THE FINICKY CHILD.

How a Clever Mother Can Tempt a Fitful Appetite.

The guardians of a finicky child know that mealtime is often more than a matter of table setting and food buying. Theorists say, "Make a child eat!" But mothers know that this is often impossible until the little one is reduced to sickness.

It will be found easier to tempt the fitful appetite rather than to scold or punish. Delicate children can often be coaxed into a hearty meal when force work would mean a scene. Make the meal a playtime. Serve bread and butter cut into thin slices and piled up log cabin wise into a house and pretend the child is an ogre to eat it up.

Name dishes for different rhymes, as Jack Horner's pie for hollowed out rolls cooked like croutons and filled with the nourishing poached eggs. Potatoes can be molded into the form of a wall with an egg perched on top to represent Humpty Dumpty. The child will quickly eat up the egg to prevent "the great fall."

Boiled rice can be molded into snowballs, floating island can have all sorts of delightful fancies woven about it, vegetables can be cut into odd shapes, and nourishing custards, if put in individual molds of animals, will be eaten without a protest.

Beef juice usually causes a struggle, but if the child pretends he is Jack the Giant Killer, hurrying to get rid of the delicious juice lest the giant think it "the blood of an Englishman," it is swallowed without a murmur.

The game becomes of interest to mother as well as child, as the necessity to invent new stories and fresh forms to tempt the little one to eat demands ingenuity. Insensibly the child learns to eat, so that later the practice can be discontinued.

A trouble? Yes, but not half so troublesome as to sit up half the night with a child cross from lack of food or as to see dear ones dwindling from insufficient nourishment that a little effort could supply.

How to Handle Fine Carriages.

The following instructions are given by an experienced carriage builder in reference to the care of fine carriages: Freshly varnished carriages should be washed frequently and exposed to the air in the shade and should not be covered until the varnish has become hard. Mud allowed to dry upon fresh varnish will leave spots, and exposure to ammonia will destroy fresh varnish. Plenty of water should be used and great care taken that it is not driven into the body of the carriage, to the injury of the lining. For the body panels a large, soft sponge must be used and when saturated squeezed over the panels, and thus by the flowing down of the water the dirt will be softened and run off harmlessly. Care should be taken to wipe the surface dry with soft chamois leather. Never use the same sponge and chamois for panels which are used for running gear. Never use soap on varnished surfaces, and only take off the grease and dirt around the hubs and axles.

How to Save Gas on Ironing Days.

When using a gas stove to heat the irons for ironing much gas can be saved by buying a tin pan large enough to fit over the number of flatirons used. A dishpan is excellent for this purpose. Make a hole in the bottom of the pan and fasten a holder here. Small wooden knobs can be bought for 5 cents at any hardware store. The knob should be fastened on the outside of the pan. Use this pan to cover the irons with, and they will keep the right heat with the gas turned much lower. You will be surprised at the amount of gas this will save and how hot the irons will be to work with. It is not difficult to remove the pan when the irons need changing, as the wooden handle will not become hot.

How to Relieve Headache.

There are many kinds and causes of headache, but probably the two most common headaches result from nervousness or a disordered stomach.

In cases where there seems to be too much blood in the head, when there is a pounding in the temples and behind the ears, a warm drink will often afford relief. Drink a cup of tea or water to which the juice of a lemon has been added, as hot as it can be borne, and place the feet in hot water. This will draw the blood from the head and will relieve the pain greatly. Some chronic sufferers from headache claim that there is no cure like a brisk walk in the fresh air with as loose clothing as possible, followed by a nap in a darkened room where the fresh air abounds.

How to Preserve a Brass Bedstead.

A good brass bed should only be dusted with a soft clean cheesecloth and must never have brass polish used on it. So treated it should keep its luster for years. When it has grown dull and dark about the only remedy is relacquering, which costs from $5 upward, according to the size of the bed. Be careful not to let coal gas get a chance at your brass furniture and do not keep the windows up over the bed on a very damp or rainy day. When the brass seems to be moist it should at once be wiped off with the cheesecloth or silk duster.

How to Clean Raincoats.

Mackintosh coats which have become hard and rigid may be easily cleaned with lime and water and made to look as good as new. A handful of the best gray lime should be dissolved in half a bucketful of water and the mixture applied to the stiffened parts by means of a piece of sponge. This should be repeated at the end of three or four hours.

"HE IS MY FRIEND."

A Story of President Lincoln and His Private Secretary.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

(Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.)

In the autumn of 1856 I entered Brown university, the college of Rhode Island. A freshman just entered knows none of his fellow students, not even his own classmates, and is naturally curious concerning those about him. One afternoon soon after my matriculation I was in the room of an upper class man where were half a dozen students listening to a rosy cheeked boy who was firing bits of wit and humor at them with the rapidity of a modern Gatling gun, his shots being received by them with bursts of laughter. I asked who the little fellow was and whether he was in college. Great was my surprise when informed that he was a junior. He had entered at fifteen and was now seventeen. He was from the western state of Illinois.

The Illinoisan, as I shall call him, I soon learned was the shining light of the college. He was so bright that he had no great need to study and possessed a memory to retain all he learned.

I roomed next to a Kentuckian who was a member of the same Greek letter society as the Illinoisan, and there I frequently met the latter. This Kentuckian, a large, handsome fellow, and an Ohioan at this period fought a mock duel, intending it as a hoax for their fellow students. One wintry morning at daylight while the snow was falling they drove across the border of the state, a few miles distant, exchanged blank cartridge shots, and the Kentuckian walked into chapel for prayers with his arm in a sling. His antagonist had poked a hole in his hat.

Meanwhile the Illinoisan was coming to be considered the college genius. Having shown a fancy for writing verses, he was selected to deliver the poem at the exercises held on class day. I can see the slight, youthful figure now after an interval of half a century, graceful in the scholastic gown worn on such occasions, speaking his poem with accompanying gestures in the chapel before an audience largely composed of young men and young women.

The young poet recited his poem in the spring of 1858 and for the next three years was occupied, I believe, at his home in Illinois studying the profession of law. During this period a man was coming from comparative obscurity to exercise an enduring influence upon the nation. Abraham Lincoln was debating with Senator Douglas those questions which were in the end to be determined by the sword. Then came the election of 1860, and Lincoln stepped from the position of an attorney in a small town to the office of president of the United States.

"ALL I CAN SAY IS THAT HE IS MY FRIEND."

Students who have been friends in college on separating usually write one another for awhile; then their friendship lies dormant for the rest of their lives unless perchance they meet to talk over the golden days of their college course. I had not been especially intimate with the young Illinois poet, for he was of a class two years ahead of mine and of a different college fraternity. But the time was soon to come when I should be brought into closer relation to him. In the summer of 1861 my father was appointed by President Lincoln a brigadier general of volunteers and ordered to report for duty to General McClellan, commanding the Army of the Potomac. I went with my father as lieutenant of a New York regiment, detailed to serve as aid-de-camp on his staff.

On arriving in Washington we put up at the old Willard hotel. One afternoon soon after reaching Washington I saw my Illinois poet for the first time since he was graduated. He was leaning against the cigar stand. There were several of us present who had known him in college, and we all gathered about him, for he had recently been appointed assistant private secretary to President Lincoln.

And now, if not before, it will be recognized that this rosy cheeked boy poet was none other than John Hay.

"This is a big thing you've fallen into, John."

"Yes," he replied with a twinkle of the eye and his good natured smile, "I'm keeper of the president's conscience."

The youngster with whom we were joking was to spend four years under the influence of the patience, the wisdom and the foresight of the martyr president, being trained the while to execute, after an interval of forty years, an important diplomatic work, and will probably go down in history as the ablest diplomat the United States has produced. Though John Hay possessed the natural ability for his later work, there can be no doubt that he imbibed the patience and learned the methods from his chief while conducting the nation through the most perilous period in its history.

But to return to my story. While John Hay was occupying an office adjoining that of President Lincoln his college friend, the Kentuckian, Clarence Bate of Louisville, had turned rebel and was fighting for the south. In the beginning Kentucky was a divided state. One-half of its people were with the Union, the other half with the Confederacy. It is probable that it was on this account that Bate became identified with one of those bands having no legitimacy as Confederate soldiers who were doing their best to carry the state out of the Union. At any rate, Bate was taken prisoner with arms in his hand against the sovereignty of the United States, having neither a commission nor having been enlisted in the Confederate service.

Later in the war, when one of these "citizens," as they were called, were captured and brought before a commanding officer, after hearing what his captors had to say on the subject, the commander, with a wave of his hand, would say: "Take him away. I don't want to see any more of him." This was an order, understood by the captors, to take the man out and shoot him. The prisoner was then conducted to an open space, told to run and shot down while running.

But Clarence Bate was tried by military court martial and sentenced to be shot.

Bate belonged to a prominent family in Louisville. He had been engaged to be married while in college, but whether he had been married I don't know. There was a quick consultation among his friends. His old friend Hay was close to the president, the only man who by exercising the pardoning power could save his life. There was one chance, and only one, for Bate. That was to secure Hay's influence for a pardon. But was there time? Would Hay feel that his conscience would permit him to ask such a favor? Would the president's conscience permit him to grant it if asked?

Was not John Hay, as he had humorously said, "the keeper of the president's conscience?"

A friend of the condemned man sped to Washington as quick as train could carry him, bearing a request that Hay would do all in his power to save the life of his old friend and brother in the fraternity of which they were both members.

The messenger on his arrival at the capital, having secured an interview with Hay in his office in the White House, presented the request.

What a singular situation! Two students have been together in many a college symposium, have played many a prank in company. A few years pass. Probably they have not met since those happy college days. Suddenly one is handed a request to save the other's life. And more—if he cannot save it his friend must die!

Hay took the letter through a door communicating with the president's private office, leaving the door ajar. The messenger heard indistinctly some conversation between the president and his secretary; then the words, spoken by Hay, "All I can say is that he is my friend."

"Go over to the pardoning office," replied the president, "have a pardon made out, and I will sign it."

John Hay at that time could not have been more than twenty-two or twenty-three years old, for the incident happened at the beginning of the war—1861 or 1862—and Hay was graduated at college in 1858 at the age of nineteen. Fancy a man filled with the generous impulses of youth receiving such a boon, the gift of a life, and that the life of his friend! We can picture the joy beaming in the young man's countenance as he returns to the messenger with the welcome news, the alacrity with which he seeks the pardon office and, when the document is signed, sends it, with an affectionate message, to his college companion.

President Lincoln when a question came up before him for decision wherein a strict construction of duty forbade clemency never hesitated to act on the side of that kindliness which was a part of his nature. He did not seem to dread the blame that would be heaped upon him for interfering with what the world calls justice, or, if he dreaded it, he never permitted it to prevent his sparing a life that depended upon him. Yet all these acts of mercy on account of which his general said that it was impossible to maintain discipline in the army were exercised in cases of soldiers in the ranks. Probably the life of Clarence Bate was the only one spared at the request of one near the president, and no such act has ever been charged against Mr. Lincoln for the purpose of currying favor with a political magnate.

His pupil, Hay, retained to the day of his death that same kindliness for which his preceptor was so distinguished. Doubtless there is not a friend of the great secretary's early life who will not testify to the fact that when he was at the height of his power he felt and acted in accordance with the words:

"He is my friend."

WAR ON BILLBOARDS

Many Sections Waging Crusade Against Obnoxious Posters.

TOWN ADOPTS THE TAX PLAN

Lynchburg, Va., Finds That a Good Means of Meeting Question of Disfigurement by Advertisements—Future of the Billboard.

The billboard as a means of advertising will soon be but a memory—a nightmare—if public sentiment against it continues to increase in volume and effectiveness as it has during the past few months. Never since the American Civic association opened its campaign for the abatement of the billboard nuisance has there been such an awakening to the fact that "the billboard is an eyesore, a nuisance and a disgrace and should be abolished altogether," as the Washington Herald aptly puts it.

From the east to the west organized effort to eliminate or regulate the billboard has been taking definite and effective form. Carefully prepared ordinances have been passed, and others are being drawn for passage. Cincinnati recently scored against the billboard by the adoption of a building code containing elaborate provisions regulating outdoor advertising. Under that code a large number of sign spreads have been ordered down.

Moreover, many advertising merchants are voluntarily abandoning the billboards. In the far west Portland, Ore., and Seattle, Wash., are grappling with the problem in an intelligent manner. In Cambridge, Mass., a woman's club secured the removal of many stands by appealing to the advertisers direct. Lynchburg, Va., has placed a most effective ban on the billboard by means of taxation.

This is an ingenious way of meeting the difficult question of the disfigurement of towns and cities by advertisements. So long as public opinion is dormant so long will flaring advertisements continue to make the street and the landscape ugly.

It is of course idle to blame the advertisers. They are simply looking after their interests. They have gone so far as to placard the islands above Niagara and the august face of the sphinx. Fences, barns, sides of houses, publish the virtues of this nostrum or that in flaming posters.

If the aesthete says they are offensive the farmer replies that they pay, and so long as he prefers money to beauty it is hard to see where the remedy is to be found.

But in Lynchburg the city fathers have decreed that for every billboard the advertising firms shall pay a minimum tax of $2.50. For larger boards the tax is more. If people will make the locality hideous they must pay for the privilege. That is fair enough, and it would be a good thing if the idea could be introduced generally.

The American people believe in advertising, they read advertising, they patronize advertisers, but they are discriminating. They don't want the kind of advertising that mars scenery, that shuts out light, that depreciates adjoining property, that offers a rendezvous for neighborhood juvenile gatherings of dangerous tendencies.

If the billboard must exist the day is not far distant when it will be a subject of municipal, state and federal regulation. It will be regarded as a revenue producing structure, assessed and taxed accordingly. It will not be permitted to exist as a menace to health. The property rights of the man who does not believe in billboards and refuses to grant space on his own lands for their erection will be regarded.

No amount of seductive offers of the billboard owners, such as free space for laudable work like the exploitation of preventive measures against tuberculosis, as recently made to the National Association For the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, will stem the tide of popular disapproval of the billboard. The opposition is strong, and it is growing. It is a most laudable undertaking for the making of a "better and more beautiful America."

THE GRANGE

GRANGE WORK IN OHIO.

Co-operative Buying Popular—Educational Program Outlined.

The Ohio state grange held its meeting in December, and it was a notable success. Fifty-six granges had been organized or reorganized during the year. Receipts for the year were $11,060.46, and the total resources of the state grange are $26,516.42. The sixth degree was conferred upon a class of 112 candidates. It was voted to offer two scholarships to the agricultural college next year, valued at $65 each. Among the resolutions adopted were the usual ones about parcels post, postal savings banks, United States senator, ship subsidy, pure food law; also the following: Opposing central bank scheme, opposing the re-enactment of the Longworth law, favoring placing of quail on the list of song birds, favoring hunters' licenses, favoring women's institutes in conjunction with the farmers' institutes, asking the attorney general for analysis of fertilizers and asking a law to prohibit the sale of cigarettes and cigarette paper.

On the subject of education the grange urges: First, schoolroom instruction in home economics and agriculture; second, enlargement of the powers of school boards and free uniform text books; third, making the county the unit for school supervision, with grouping of townships for the same purpose, as suggested in the school bill of State School Commissioner Zellers to be before the legislature this winter; fourth, professional training for teachers for especial service; fifth, two more state normals with provisions for this feature; sixth, an inheritance tax to be used for school support; seventh, increased appropriation for developing the service of the newly established O. S. U. extension school work in agriculture and domestic science; eighth, home economics lecturers on farmers' institute force; ninth, home economics topics on every grange lecture programe.

The state grange will continue the two scholarships and will make them $65 each, to be applied on either short or full agricultural or domestic science courses at O. S. U., as the winners choose.

In co-operative buying it was stated that about sixty tons of binder twine were purchased by 147 granges, purchasers saving $2.50 per hundred over the average retail price, with a total saving for the 147 granges of $3,000. Forty-one granges purchased 688 tons of fertilizers, costing $12,168.19.

State Lecturer Taber reported that he had traveled 6,700 miles the past year in his work, of which number over a hundred miles were traveled on foot. He organized thirteen subordinate granges and one Pomona.

GRANGE CROP REPORTING.

A Pomona Grange In New York Organizes a System of Information.

As a practical move for the better information of its members as to an intelligent knowledge of crop acreage and crop prospects Onondaga county Pomona has undertaken a system of crop reporting which has been in successful operation for a year and has been attended with such signal success as to warrant its continuance and extension for another year.

The plan in brief, says W. N. Giles in Grange Review, is a system of correspondence conducted from one central office. The correspondent in chief has two or more correspondents in each grange, according to size of grange and amount of territory to be covered. From the central office is issued a blank to the various correspondents, who fill the same from general knowledge as to number of acres, average yield and amount in stock of the various crops in Onondaga county. These cover hay, cabbage and potatoes. They are compiled at various seasons so that a very accurate knowledge is obtained. These statements are returned to the central office and there compiled and results sent confidentially to the grange members that give them valuable information as to the probable rise and fall of prices as governed by supply and demand, and this has already resulted in much advantage to the members.

This plan has proved of much practical value in Onondaga county and is a promise of much greater value if other and all counties would take it up and there could be established a general correspondence between counties. Of necessity much of the detail and all of the results must be conducted confidentially and hence cannot be elaborated in the public press.

The Wisconsin State Grange.

The Wisconsin grange met at Winneconne and elected George R. Schaefer master. The resolutions deplore the lack of development of the binder industry at the state prison, denounce ship subsidies and all attacks on the Grout law, favor an income tax, government supervision of express companies, postal savings banks, the parcels post and also, we regret to say, the initiative and referendum.

Grange and Farm Institutes

W. I. Chamberlain says in National Stockman that he has observed that the liveliest, best and most instructive institutes are those held where a live grange or farmers' club exists. In such places all the details that insure success are well cared for.

ONLY A COUNTRY BOY

She was a very little girl, with hair like spun gold, big brown eyes and a red mouth like a wax doll's. She stood in the little arbor as James came up the road, and he thought he had never seen anything so beautiful. He noticed that she was little and slender, too; that her clothes were dainty and her hands white. As he came nearer she stepped out from the arbor and asked, with a little curl of her lip:

"Are you my cousin James Creeley?"

He was only a country boy and so stood and stared in amazement. Then he ejaculated:

"Me? Yes. Your cousin? No!"

"But you must be," persisted the girl. "They said I would see you, and," she added, with a glance which took in every detail of James' costume from the bare feet to the "hickory" shirt, "they said you were a handsome lad." And with that she sniffed a disdainful little sniff and walked stiffly toward the house.

Jim stood looking after her, a flush mantling the freckled cheeks and the white forehead under the red hair. He saw the white dress vanish as she turned the corner of the house, and he walked on. He reached the barn just as Mary had finished milking the cows. "Don't you know there's company?" she asked as she swung the milk pail around to see the bubbles dance. "And they're going to stay for a week, and you ought to be dressed."

A week! Jim's heart would have sunk into his boots had he worn any. As it was it seemed to go up into his throat and stick there in a big lump. He went around the yard, shutting the chickens into the henhouse and putting the farm tools away. Then he went to the house. His mother met him at the door and gave him a list of directions which made his head spin. The result was he came down to supper looking like a city boy. But the freckles and red hair were still there.

As the days went by the color came into the white cheeks of the little golden haired girl, and when her mother had to go back to the city she decided to leave her to stay another week or so. Jim felt that the cows were ugly now, the horses were slow, the fields of wheat and timothy and the wild roses that grew in the hedges were all dull and drab. He could only find sunshine when little Nell was with him. She hated a boy with dirty hands, who couldn't dance and who was awkward and stupid.

One morning she started out for a long walk. Jim saw her as she went out the gate. She had a long piece of white thread in her hand and carried three pins in her mouth. "Fishin'," said Jim.

She had heard her uncle say that there were plenty of fish in the Dee brook if people were not too lazy to catch them. She would catch some, then Jim would see that a city girl could do more than a country boy. Her proud little nose turned up at the very mention of the name.

The brook was soon reached, and Nellie sat down and threw her line as far out as she could. She watched the hook float a moment and then disappear. She listened to the chirping birds in the trees along the bank. She saw the sunlight glimmer through the leaves, and she became drowsy.

Suddenly she started up. Her line had slipped from her hand and was floating in the water almost beyond her reach. She leaned over and by a supreme effort caught it, but could not pull it in. One end was caught fast under a stone in the middle of the brook. She thought of the fish she meant to catch and gave two or three hard tugs. There was a jerk, the string broke, her feet slid on the slippery bank, and the next moment the little girl was struggling in the water, and the water closed above the golden head, leaving ever widening circles shimmering on the surface of the brook.

There was a great rustling among the bushes, a white face and a crown of red hair appeared for a second, and then both had plunged into the water. Nell felt her hair being pulled very hard. She wondered afterward why it took her breath away and why she was so—so sleepy.

When Jim made his appearance at the farmyard with his clothes wringing wet, his hair standing on end and the little bundle of moans in his arms Mrs. Farmer all but had hysterics. She said he was a brave boy when he told the story, but knowing how to swim and giving one's life up for another were quite usual for her boys. The next day Nell was to go home. She came out to the barn where Jim was watering the cows and stood lovingly caressing the velvet nose of the spotted calf.

"I am going away, Jim," she said shyly, "and I came to thank you for saving my life."

She looked at him over the calf's head and smiled sweetly. Jim flushed. He stammered something about not having done anything extraordinary.

"But you know I would have died, wouldn't I, if you hadn't come?"

"Mebbe," said Jim.

"Mamma would have been very sorry," continued Nell in her soft little voice.

"So would I," Jim managed to say.

"And no city boy could have done it," she continued, still patting the "bossy's" head with her little hand.

"Pooh!" announced Jim.

She looked up. "I want you to come and see us—to come home with me now. Mamma said so," she said.

And they have been good friends ever since, though he is only a country boy.
